LIBERAL HONOURS.

It is announced in the Gazette that the Queen has granted the dignity of a Duke to the Marquis of Westminster. Mr. Cardwell will be summoned to the House of Lords by the title of Viscount Rivington; Lord Enfield will be called up to the House of Lords by his father's barony of Stratford; and Sir Thomas Fremantle will be created Baron Chiltern.

The Times of Monday says:—"We have reason to believe that her Majesty proposed, as a mark of her gracious approbation of his services as her Viceroy in Ireland, to advance Earl Spencer to the dignity of a Marquis, but that the honour has been respectfully and gratefully declined. It was also proposed to confer upon the Right Hon. Russell Gurney the grand cross of the Bath, in recognition of his labours in the Washington Claims Commission, but Mr. Gurney did not desire a distinction which seemed incompatible with his profession."

Some more new baronetcies were announced last Saturday. The recipients of the honour are Sir Charles Trevelyan, K.C.B., in recognition of his eminent civil services; Mr. Matthew Wilson, of Ealton Hall, near Skipton, the newly-elected member for the northern division of the West Riding; Dr. George Barrows, president of the Royal College of Physicians, on the ground, to use the words of Mr. Gladstone, of "his high position and the eminent services he has rendered to the profession;" Mr. Fraser Grove, the defeated Liberal candidate for South Wilts; Mr. H. S. Thompson, late M.P. for Whitchy; and Mr. J. Heathcote Amory, the senior member for Tiverton. METROPOLITAN NEWS.

The Court of Aldermen has resolved that the salary of the Chief Clerk at the Justice Room of the Mansion House shall not be less than £800, and not more than £1000, per annum.

Mr. A. G. B. Beresford-Hope, M.P., will preside at the festival in behalf of the funds of the Newvenders' Benevolent and Provident Institution, in April next.

Mr. John Alexander Biddome, the Sword-Bearer to the Corporation of the City of London, died, yesterday week, at his residence, after a few days' illness.

An illuminated address was presented on Tuesday to Mr. Plimsoll, M.P., by a deputation of sailors plying between London and Hamburg, to show their admiration of the hon. member's conduct.

At a Court of Common Council, held on Thursday, it was unanimously agreed to present the freedom of the City, in a gold box of the value of one hundred guineas, to Sir H. E. Bartle Frere, G.C.S.I., K.C.B., in testimony of his long and honourable career in India.

At the weekly meeting of the School Board, on Wednesday—Sir Charles Reed, M.P., in the chair—Mr. Freeman resumed the debate on Canon Gregory's motion for the appointment of a committee of inquiry into the educational statistics of the former board. Several speakers took part in the discussion, which was again adjourned.

At its last meeting the Metropolitan Board of Works congratulated itself on the great success of its recent loan, an offer of two millions and a half of stock having brought in tenders for nearly twenty-two millions. Negotiations which have been in progress for buying up existing manorial rights on Clapham-common were concluded by a resolution of the board to pay the stipulated sum of £18,000.

The total number of paupers in the metropolitan district last week was 108,518, of whom 37,178 were in workhouses and 71,340 received outdoor relief. Compared with the corresponding week in the years 1873, 1872, and 1871, these figures show a decrease in the number of paupers of 10,260, 14,379, and 48,715 respectively. The number of vagrants relieved on the last day of the week was 623, of whom 455 were men, 133 women, and 35 children under sixteen.

The council of the Royal Hospital for Diseases of the Chest acknowledge the receipt of another donation of £1000 (the sixth) from "W. P. D." Messrs. Williams, Deacon, and Co. have received £1000 from "G. W." for the Infant Orphan Asylum, Wanstead. The Goldsmiths' Company has presented a second donation of £25 to the Post-Office Letter-Carriers' Orphan Home, and has given £25 towards the building fund of the Hospital for Diseases of the Throat.

In the monthly report upon the condition of the metropolitan water, Major Frank Bolton draws attention to the Act of 1871, which provides power to compel the companies to give a constant supply when the public authorities may see fit to move. It is anticipated that greater safety from fires would result, since it would enable the use of hydrants instead of fire-plugs, and thus more rapidly and effectively extinguish fires. By this time hydrants might have been placed upon about one-third of the entire mains of the metropolis, but these have not yet been supplied.

An exhibition of students' work in connection with the St. Thomas Charterhouse School of Art was opened, last week, in the Girls' School, Goswell-road. The walls were covered with drawings, and vocal and instrumental music formed part of the evening's amusement. The president, the Rev. John Rodgers, and the head art-master, Mr. S. Mills, were present, and the large room was crowded with students and their friends. The school is in a remarkably prosperous condition, there being about 1000 children and 400 science and art teachers. Special classes for elementary teachers are held every Saturday afternoon.

The Workmen's Club at Millwall, which has been erected by the Millwall Dock Company for the benefit of the artisans and labourers in this busy quarter of London, was opened on Saturday last. The club is one of the most extensive of its class. In addition to a large lecture-hall, rooms for educational classes and games, it contains culinary appliances equal to the provision of from 500 to 600 dinners. A room has been fitted and set apart for the library, towards which some valuable contributions have been received. This good work deserves the active support of all classes.

The annual distribution of prizes by Mrs. Loyd-Lindsay to members of the Hon. Artillery Company took place on Thursday week. Colonel Loyd-Lindsay, M.P., congratulated the corps on the excellent report for the past year. It was true that, like other volunteer corps, their numbers had diminished, but their efficiency had increased. The City of London Rifle Brigade, under the command of Major Haywood, had a field-day at Wimbledon on Saturday afternoon.—There seems reason to hope that a volunteer force of 10,000 or 12,000 men may be collected on Easter Monday, the War Office having invited the metropolitan corps to take part in a grand divisional field-day with the regular troops, near Wimbledon.

At two railway meetings held last Saturday—the London and North-Western and Great Northern—shareholders urged upon the directors that the question of the day for them was to avoid accidents. The Rev. F. Henson affirmed that there was nothing more important to companies than diminution of speed. Mr. R. Moon said, on behalf of the London and North-Western, that, with their fast train to Edinburgh they allowed themselves to be beaten by other lines to the extent of three-quarters of an hour. Colonel Duncombe, the deputy-chairman of the Great Northern, replied that he did not see how they should be called upon to reduce their speed while it was not done upon other lines.—Sir Antonio Brady, on Monday, presided over a meeting of railway directors and shareholders, at the City Terminus Hotel, to consider the best means of obtaining the repeal of the railway passenger duty. Mr. Laing, M.P., Mr. Lightly Simpson, and Mr. Forbes, were amongst the speakers; and it was resolved that a deputation should wait upon the First Lord of the Treasury and the Chancellor of the Exchequer on the subject.—The Great Western Railway dividend was officially made known on Tuesday. It is at the rate of 6½ per cent per annum, carrying over a balance of about £20,000.

CAPTURE OF COOMASSIE.

We are glad to announce the summary defeat of the Ashantees and the capture of Coomassie by the British expedition under Major-General Sir Garnet Wolseley, which is now, we hope, on its way home to England. On Wednesday a telegram was received at the Admiralty from Lisbon, stating that Sir Garnet Wolseley had fought a battle, on the 31st ult., at Acromboo, on the Ashantee side of the Adansi Hills. The fighting lasted twelve hours, and the British force suffered a loss of 253 killed and wounded—namely, 39 of the Naval Brigade, 128 of the 42nd Regiment (Highlanders), 23 of the Rifle Brigade, and 53 of the 23rd (Welsh Fusiliers). Major Baird, of the 42nd, and Captain Buckle, of the Royal Engineers, were killed. Of the Naval Brigade, Captain Grubbe and Sub-Lieutenants Mundy and Rawson were wounded; also Captains Macpherson and Creagh, and Lieutenants Stevenson and Berwick, of the 42nd, and Captain Nicoll and Colonel Wood, of the Engineers. It was further stated that Sir Garnet Wolseley remained fifteen miles from Coomassie, in great want of troops. This news was brought from Madeira to Lisbon by the Enchantress, which made the trip in forty-one hours. But the following telegram from Sir Garnet Wolseley, sent to Gibraltar from Cape Coast Castle, was received on Thursday morning by the Secretary of State for War:—

"Coomassie, Feb. 5.—Reached this place yesterday, after five days' hard fighting. Troops behaved admirably. Officers killed: Captain Buckle, R.E.; Captain Nicol, Hants Militia; Lieutenant Eyre, 19th Foot. All other casualties under 300. The King has left the town, but is close by, and says he will pay me a visit to-day to sign the treaty of peace. I hope to commence my march to the coast to-morrow. All wounded doing well. Health generally good. Despatches follow by special fast steamer."

The Admiralty received a telegram of the same date from Commodore Hewett, at Coomassie, which gave similar information, adding that seven naval officers were wounded, but all doing well.

CAPE COAST CASTLE, Feb. 5.

A great battle has been fought near Coomassie, resulting in the defeat of the Ashantees and the capture of Amouful.

The operations commenced at six a.m. on Jan. 31 and lasted until three p.m.

The British forces, consisting of Lord Gifford and his native scouts, the 42nd Regiment, under Major Macpherson, and the two guns of Rait's artillery, forming the left column, under Colonel M'Leod, with Major Russell's native regiment, Gordon's Houssas, two rockets under Lieutenant Palmer, and a wing of the Naval Brigade under Captain Grubbe, R.N., cut a path at right angles to the main road for 300 yards, and then due north. Upon the left was the 42nd Regiment, and on the right a column under Colonel Wood, with a wing of the Naval Brigade under Colonel Luxmoore, and two rockets under Lieutenant Knox. Colonel Wood's native regiment was to carry out the same plan on the right of the centre column. The second line consisted of the 23rd, supported by Colonel Wood's and Major Russell's native regiment on its flanks. The third line was composed of the Rifle Brigade, under Colonel Warren.

The enemy formed a broad angle, diverging from the main right apex of the Amouful, and had a position on steep hills. The King of the Ashantees is supposed to have been present. The enemy fought most desperately, and suffered severely. Amanquatia, the commander-in-chief of the Ashantee army, is reported to be killed. The firing was very heavy for five hours.

The casualties on the British side are:—Captain Buckle, Royal Engineers, killed; Major Home, wounded in two places; Lieutenant Hare, wounded in two places; two sappers and thirty-six labourers killed.

The Naval Brigade, which was 145 strong, had three officers wounded—namely, Captain Grubbe, Lieutenant Mundy, and Lieutenant Rawson, and twenty-six men killed and wounded.

The 23rd, which was about ninety strong, had one officer and five men wounded.

The 42nd lost nine officers and 105 men in killed and wounded, including Major Macpherson wounded in two places. One bullet passed through his leg, but he led his men the whole way. Major Baird was badly wounded in both legs and in the chest, and was carried to the rear, being unable to move. The carriers were attacked: he himself was beheaded. Lieutenant Berwick was wounded in the ankle, and Lieutenant Stevenson, Captain Creagh, and four others were slightly wounded. The Rifle Brigade had one officer and twenty-five men killed and wounded. No return of the loss of the native allies has been received, but it is heavy among Gordon's Houssas. The troops bivouacked on the ground taken.

A baggage-train had been attacked on the way up. Seven hundred and fifty loads arrived at Amouful on Feb. 1, escorted by men of the Rifle Brigade, the 42nd, and the 2nd West Indian Regiment.

A strong force attacked Dequa, a mile on the right. The place was well defended, and the houses were loopholed. One bluejacket was killed and three were wounded, as well as some allies.

During the battle on the 31st the staff was much exposed to the fire, but suffered no casualties.

Our Special Artist has contributed a number of further illustrations, engraved for this week's publication. The several halting-places or stages on the road through the forest between Cape Coast Castle and the river Pra, a distance altogether of nearly eighty miles, have been enumerated on former occasions. Accroful, the camp at Dunquah, Sutih, Yancomassie-Assin, and Barracoe, with the riverside camp at Prah-su, are the places shown in the Views which we now present to the reader. Inquabim, the first station from Cape Coast Castle, was represented in a former illustration. The next station is Accroful; and Dunquah, where a small camp has been formed, is two hours' march further on. Then comes Yancomassie-Assin, which is not the same as Yancomassie-Assin. Two more stages bring us to the camp of Mansu, whence it is three hours' journey to Sutih. We have given views of Dunquah and Mansu in our preceding Numbers. The military mail takes nearly twenty-two hours for the whole distance from Cape Coast Castle to Prah-su. The telegraph is laid to Mansu, which is about halfway to the Prah.

The camp at Prah-su, where our Artist was residing at the date of his last letter, is the scene of much ordinary military business; and he has made two or three sketches of what he saw going on there. The inspection of some of our native auxiliary troops is one of the incidents he has chosen to depict. There are the Kossos, who come from another country of West Africa, a long way north of the Gold Coast. They are dressed in canvas smocks, and each man carries three regulation pouches, worn in any way that pleases his fancy. Their wives, or some of them, are standing behind the line. Lieutenant Pollock and Lieutenant Clowes are engaged in the inspection. To the left of the line are the drum-major and the drummer. Beside the two English officers are two Kossah chiefs. These are fine, well-grown men; one of them wears a sackcloth coat with long sleeves and a battered English hat. The other has only a cloth about him, from the waist down to the knees, and a turban, made of a strip of red and blue cloth, with a fetish or talisman on the top, like a rude coronet, ornamented with large beads on the rim. In the next sketch we see a number of our own countrymen in the camp at Prah-su, sailors of the Naval Brigade and Royal Marines, employed at the grindstones and portable forge in sharpening their cutlasses to be ready for actual fighting. The subject of another illustration is the field battery of light guns, ranged with the Gatling gun in a park of artillery at Prah-su, three of which were marked to be sent forward to Coomassie. They were only seen by the messengers of the King of Ashantee at Prah-su, but the sight of them was enough to make them return to King Koffee Kalkallee, with such a report as frightened him into submission. Our Artist, while sojourning at Prah-su, found convenient accommodation in a hut, shared with him by Mr. Henry Stanley, of the New York Herald, and Mr. Henty, of the Standard. He has acknowledged their friendly aid in more than one letter, and his sketch of "the newspaper correspondents' quarters" will serve as a token of remembrance.

The advanced guard of Sir Garnet Wolseley's small force, when it had crossed the Prah, on the 20th ult., pushed on to the Adansi Hills, forty or fifty miles from Coomassie. The General stopped at Moinsie, on the south side of those hills, having with him only the staff of the Naval Brigade, under Commodore Hewitt. Lord Gifford was sent up the hill to reconnoitre, with fifty scouts, picked from the best native auxiliaries, Kossos, Houssas, and Bonny men. While climbing the steep ascent through a tangled forest Lord Gifford's party were met by an Ashantee priest, or wizard, sent to warn them not to go any farther. It was near the supposed boundary that separates the proper Ashantee territory from that of Assim. The priest, who was accompanied by half a dozen other men, waved his arms with uncouth gestures, and made various strange noises, after which he shouted to the party at a little distance, and said that the Ashantee army was assembled in thousands at the top of the hill, and that they would kill every man who went up. Neither Lord Gifford nor the men he led were in the least degree alarmed by the declaration. The Houssas and Kossos were quite wild to get at the enemy. They fairly broke away, like hounds from the leash, and rushed up the hill, all shouting, and brandishing their swords and breech-loaders with both hands. When they got to the top all they could see was five men running away, whom it was of no use to chase. There was a fetish on the spot, fixed in the ground like a scarecrow, but consisting only of a stick, with bundles of cotton and grass tied round it. This was the terrible guardian of the Ashantee kingdom.

FOREIGN AND COLONIAL NEWS.

FRANCE.

Thursday, Feb. 26.

Paris cannot exist for long without a sensation, and the all-absorbing incident of the moment is the candidature of M. Ledru Rollin for the department of Vaucluse, the election for which takes place on Sunday next. The reappearance on the political stage of the once all-powerful Republican leader seems to have filled the Royalist party with dismay, his election, which is wellnigh certain, being rightly regarded as a formal protest against the reactionary policy of the Government, and more especially against any mutilation of the principle of universal suffrage, such as is contemplated by the majority of the Assembly, the present electoral system having been initiated in 1848 by M. Ledru Rollin himself. His candidature has already provoked an "incident" in the Chamber, and a letter from M. Thiers, who has at last broken the silence he has so long preserved respecting matters political. Last Monday afternoon MM. Naquet, Gent, and Taxile Delord sought permission to question the Duc de Broglie relative to the manoeuvres of the Royalist and Bonapartist Mayors recently appointed in Vaucluse, who are abusing their position to thwart the efforts of M. Ledru Rollin's supporters. At the Minister's request, however, the majority decided that the interpellation should be postponed until the election came before the Assembly for ratification.

M. Thiers's manifesto, which appears in the form of a letter addressed to M. Lepetit, the Democratic candidate in the Vienne, is artfully composed of phrases capable of a double interpretation. The ex-President wishes M. Lepetit all possible success, and states that he considers the restoration of the Monarchy impossible. The interest of the nation, in his opinion, is to establish a definitive Republic; but, on the other hand, he counsels the electors to enlighten the Assembly without alarming it, otherwise commerce will suffer from fresh anxieties, and the reorganisation of the country will be certainly delayed. The Radical organs print this letter with affected jubilation; but it is quite evident that the final warnings are given in reference to the candidature of M. Ledru Rollin, who in former times was one of the ex-President's most bitter political adversaries. The Republique Française, M. Gambetta's organ, somewhat naively asserts that the two enemies are reconciled, and that M. Thiers would have preferred the election of M. Ledru Rollin to that of M. Vautrain, in January, 1872, or to that of M. Barodet, in April, 1873. On the other hand, M. Thiers's private organs, the Débats and the Bien Public, are most bitter against Ledru Rollin, conjuring up the "spectre rouge," and prophesying all manner of disagreeable things in the event of his being elected to the Assembly.

On the 16th of March the Prince Imperial attains his majority, and the Bonapartists, in this age of political pilgrimages, having expressed their intention of organising a series of excursions to Chiselhurst, the Duc de Broglie has addressed a circular upon the subject to the préfets and sous préfets:—"We do not wish (says the Minister) to restrain any citizen's liberty of action, or to prevent the friends and servants of the Empire expressing their attachment to the Bonaparte family; but the projected manifestation of March 16 coincides with the Prince Imperial's coming of age, and might be considered as a protestation against certain decisions of the National Assembly. In consequence," the Duc de Broglie forbids functionaries of every kind to visit Chiselhurst, under penalty of immediate dismissal, and requests his subordinates to apprise him should any attempts be made to throw doubt upon the sovereign decisions of the Assembly. He, moreover, vigorously forbids the public circulation of petitions or addresses for signature. It has since been rumoured that, in consequence of this circular, the Prince Imperial has written to his friends in Paris countermanning the proposed manifestation.

The National Assembly, which has again indefinitely postponed MM. Gambetta and Lepère's interpellation apropos of the arbitrary manner in which the Government is carrying the new municipal law into effect, has been occupied this week in discussing various financial measures, but without agreeing on anything calculated to make up the deficit which still exists in the estimates for the next year. At yesterday's sitting a proposal to increase the succession duties was rejected by 507 votes against 135.

The destitution just now prevalent in Paris has induced the formation of a relief committee, presided over by Madame de MacMahon, and the opening of a public subscription, which has as yet produced some £4000. In addition to the forty soup-kitchens now existing, the committee is about to open fourteen fresh ones, at which 30,000 rations of bread, meat, and vegetables will be distributed daily, partly gratis and partly at the nominal rate of a sou the ration. M. Hubert Debrousse, the proprietor of the Presse newspaper and the originator of the great fête that will be given to Marshal MacMahon at the Palais de l'Industrie on March 15, having presented the committee with a sum of £4000, it has been devoted to redeeming the bedding of the working classes pledged at the Mont de Piété.

The Treasury has repaid to the Bank of France its advance of 150 million francs, made in order to accelerate the payment of the fifth milliard to the Germans.

M. Ollivier's reception by the Academy is fixed for March 5. There is to be an International Exhibition of Arts and Manufactures here next year, in the Palais de l'Industrie, which will be considerably enlarged for the purpose.

The murderers of Vicenzini, the police agent, who was drowned in the Seine, on Feb. 26, 1871, by a mob of National Guards, have been tried this week by the eighteenth council of war. The circumstances of this outrage are of the most painful character. The unfortunate victim, who was recognised as a mouchard by a crowd of Communists engaged in a manifestation round the Bastille Column, was tied to a plank and precipitated into the river, after undergoing every species of ill-usage. He succeeded in freeing himself, but was assailed with stones and driven back from the river banks every time he succeeded in approaching them; and at length, having ineffectually hailed a steam-boat, which passed on without paying any attention, his strength failed him and he sank. The evidence against two individuals, charged before the Council of War with participation in this barbarous outrage, was conclusive on several points; and, although judgment has not yet been given, there is little doubt but that the prisoners will be found guilty.

M. Cahen-Lyon, the wealthy army tailor, has just been condemned to two years' imprisonment and 100*fr.* fine for fraud in carrying out his contracts with the Imperial Government and the Government of National Defence. One of his accomplices, named Boulanger, is sentenced to five years' imprisonment, a second to one year's, and a third to three months' of the same penalty, a nominal fine of 100*fr.* being exacted from each.

ITALY.

The debate on the Paper Currency Bill was resumed, yesterday week, in the Chamber of Deputies. Clause 28, proposed by the Committee with a view to authorise the popular banks to issue notes to the amount of 30,000,000 lire, was opposed by the Minister of Finance and rejected. The debate was concluded on Saturday, and the measure was adopted by 189 votes against 63. On Wednesday, the Chamber, after a short discussion, approved all the clauses of the bill relative to the purchase of the Cavour Canal.

The Senate has passed the bill on the organisation of the judiciary, and has agreed to a motion for sending a deputation to the King on March 23, to congratulate his Majesty on the twenty-fifth anniversary of his accession to the throne.

SPAIN.

It is announced that General Moriones and General Primo de Rivera, with their 20,000 men, have not yet relieved Bilbao, though they have taken the first line of defence, twelve miles distant from the town. The weather has retarded them, and prevented the co-operation of the fleet. The Carlist leader, Dorregaray, holds the heights above Somorrostro, with (it is said) 25,000 men; and there has been severe fighting there, in which the Republican troops captured some of the Carlist positions, but with considerable loss.

At their meeting on Wednesday, to consider the Government scheme for the organisation of a new national bank, the shareholders of the Bank of Spain came to no definite conclusion.

HOLLAND.

In the Second Chamber, on Monday, a vote of thanks was passed to the forces operating against the Acheenes. An official despatch from Acheen, dated Feb. 16, has been received at the Hague. It announces the capture of a fort on the previous day, notwithstanding the determined resistance offered. The enemy are said to have lost 200 killed, and the Dutch six killed and fifty-six wounded.

GERMANY.

The Prussian House of Lords has passed the Civil Marriage Bill by a majority of 89 to 51; and the Lower House, on Tuesday, adopted the Civil Marriage Bill in the amended form in which it was sent down from the Upper House. A motion, brought forward yesterday week by Count Brühl, in favour of abolishing the ecclesiastical laws enacted in May, 1873, was rejected by 129 votes against 15. The Prussian House of Deputies, in debating this year's Budget, struck out a small vote of 51,000 thalers, which has been set apart twenty-five years for race prizes and bounties to breeders, on the plea of economy. Both Houses have adjourned until April 13.

In the Senate the question of withdrawing from circulation the National Bank currency, so that the legal tenders known as "greenbacks" should remain the only currency of the country, came on for discussion last week. After a long debate, a motion to redeem the National Bank notes with specie or United States Bonds was rejected by 30 against 28 votes. By a small majority the Senate has resolved to increase the National Bank circulation to 400,000,000 dols.

A general rising of Sioux Indians is reported. A telegram from Wyoming states that near Fort Laramie two officers were murdered. Their bodies, when found, were scalped, riddled with bullets, and stuck with arrows. The Sioux are reported as raiding in almost every direction, burning ranches, murdering ranchmen, and stealing stock.

We learn from Toronto that two members of the late British Columbian Ministry have been elected members of the Dominion Parliament, and that both support the present Cabinet.

INDIA.

The weekly telegram of the Viceroy of India, respecting the famine, received at the close of last week, confirms the report that beneficial effects had been produced by the late rain. In North Behar the distress was increasing rapidly, but was everywhere being effectually relieved. Nearly 100,000 tons of grain had been sent into the distressed districts, and 213,000 labourers were employed on the relief works.

The chairman of the Central Relief Committee at Calcutta has telegraphed, in answer to advices of a first remittance of £10,000 from London, that the sympathy of the English nation will be gratefully appreciated by the people in the famine-stricken districts. After describing the relief operations in progress, he states that the distress is likely to be severe, and that subscriptions are required early. A private telegram handed to the Mansion House committee yesterday week says that mortality has already commenced in the Nepal district.

A telegram from the Daily News Special Commissioner in India states that the distress is gradually intensifying. Fifty thousand persons are now engaged on the relief works in the three worst sub-divisions of Tirhoot. Delay is taking place in forwarding grain into the northern districts, and great difficulty is experienced in finding competent persons to superintend the relief works.

The Times' correspondent at Calcutta telegraphed on Tuesday regarding the progress of the famine:—"The Government narrative admits an increase of vagrancy, crime, and child-desertion. Women and children are suffering severely. It is ascertained that there have been deaths from sickness caused by starvation. Sir G. Campbell doubts whether the Government can supply enough food. Three hundred and thirty-three thousand tons are wanted now, with coolies to carry 60-lb. loads. The doctors are supplied. The labour test has been relaxed. The exports of rice since October have been 165,000 tons."

The same correspondent telegraphed on Wednesday as follows:—"Sir R. Temple's appointment to Behar has always had Sir G. Campbell's hearty approval. The Sarun correspondent reports increasing crops and the establishment of relief works. The North Tirhoot correspondent reports that infants are dying. Nurseries have been established in North Champaran, the district most exposed to suffering. The Nepalese are treated as British subjects. In Goruckpore prospects are improving as the pulse harvest matures."

The latest accounts of the growing crops are favourable.

JAPAN.

Serious political troubles are anticipated, according to a Jeddo telegram of Thursday week. Iwakura, the Prime Minister, has tendered his resignation, which has been refused. The people clamour for a war against Corea, and this or a civil war is deemed inevitable. From Nagasaki we are told that a serious insurrection has broken out in the district of Fizen, and that the insurgents had destroyed the land telegraph lines. But a telegram received by the Japanese Legation denies that the revolt near Nagasaki is anything serious. It states that 3000 troops had arrived in the district, and were expected to have no difficulty in restoring order.

The Government have appointed Mr. R. Routledge (a nephew of Mr. Routledge, the publisher) to the Professorship of Chemistry and Physics in the Imperial College at Jeddo.

There are 700 of his followers awaiting trial.

Mr. Charles Gilpin, M.P., writes to the Times to contradict some reports which have been published stating that M. Kossuth was living in a state of destitution in Turin. Mr. Gilpin says that he saw M. Kossuth in May last in Turin, and found him living in "a comfortable and well-furnished salon on the ground floor, opening by French windows into a little garden, where he spends a good deal of time. Colonel Ehaz, who was his friend and aide-de-camp in the time of his prosperity, is with him still, and periodically they go together into Switzerland and the Tyrol in search of new plants for the garden at home." With reference to reports that Kossuth was compelled to give lessons in order to earn a livelihood, Mr. Gilpin says:—"Those who know as well as I do François and Louis Kossuth would feel, as I do, quite assured that their honoured and revered father would never be permitted, in his declining years, to undertake the office of teacher. It is Kossuth's choice to live retired as he does."

There is only one mail weekly to Lerwick, which leaves Aberdeen every Friday evening.

The new ship Hesperus, Captain Legoe, 1700 tons, chartered by Mr. Francis S. Dutton, agent-general for South Australia, for the conveyance of emigrants to Port Adelaide, sailed, on Monday, from Plymouth. This ship was built at Greenock for Messrs. Anderson, Anderson, and Co., of Billiter-court, E.C., expressly for the Adelaide trade. Besides cabin passengers and a valuable cargo, she had on board 416 emigrants, equal to 348 statute adults. These have been carefully selected by Mr. Dutton, and comprise people of all trades and industrial occupations, besides 45 single female domestic servants, who are in much request in the colony. The emigrants consist, as is usual, of the classes described as "full passage paying," "assisted passage," some "free passage," and others, part of whose passage-money has been sent by their relatives, already in the colony. They come from all parts of the United Kingdom and Ireland. Dr. Belgrave is surgeon-superintendent, and Mrs. Collinsmatron in charge of the single women—the latter selected by the British Ladies' Female Emigrant Society.

It has for several years past (writes the Globe correspondent in Brussels) been a matter of complaint amongst English and American resident families in Brussels that there has been no church for their exclusive use. The Chapel Royal, where Divine service is now held, is rented of the French and German Protestants, and can only be used at very inconvenient hours. In 1862 a committee was formed by the Rev. C. E. Jenkins (since deceased) having for its object the building of a church for the especial accommodation of the Anglican community in Brussels, an eligible site having been procured. Subscriptions have been occasionally made, and the building has been proceeded with, and it is expected to be shortly completed and opened for service. In the meantime the committee are greatly in want of funds, and appeal to their countrymen in England, particularly to all past residents in Brussels, both English and Americans, to assist them in completing their work. Subscriptions to the building fund may be paid to the Union Bank of London, as correspondents for Messrs. Bigwood and Morgan, of Brussels, the bankers of the committee.

A more wonderful gorge or canyon than that of the Yosemite, but similar to it in its peculiarities of towering granite cliffs and lofty waterfalls, has been recently discovered and explored. It is situated seventeen miles north of the Yosemite Valley, and is called the Great Tuolumne Canyon. One of the main rivers of the State flows in rapids, thunders in waterfalls, and flows in milk-white eddies through this gorge, which is twenty miles long, with an average width of about a quarter of a mile. The Yosemite Valley is only six miles in length, with an average breadth of nearly a mile. The narrowness of the Tuolumne Gorge gives an appearance of still greater elevation to its precipitous boundary walls, some of which rise to a height of three-quarters of a mile above the river, at the bottom of the canyon. The largest of the few glaciers met with in the United States are to be found in this wild portion of the Sierra Nevada range of mountains. Forests of trees of the order Sequoia Gigantea, and of the largest and finest descriptions of the sugar, yellow, and white pine-trees in the United States, exist in this high mountain region. The main peaks of the Sierra Nevada chain have an elevation of over 13,000 ft.

The decision will settle the dispute in the factories.

On Wednesday night Mr. Beresford-Hope read a paper at Zion College on the Place and Influence in the Church Movement of Church Congresses. He dealt at length with the Church as an establishment, and as the Anglican communion.

In a newly-issued charge Bishop Wordsworth draws a moral from the abolition of purchase in the Army, and denounces simony, which he affirms to be increasing in the Church. From the Ecclesiastical Gazette he cites specimens of its advertisements to show how systematically the unholy "traffic in spiritual things" is conducted.

At the meeting of the new Parliament the Right Rev. Dr. Hughes, Bishop of St. Asaph, will take his seat in the House of Peers and will act as Chaplain. The Right Rev. Dr. J. R. The annual court of the Clergy Orphan Corporation was held on Thursday, under the presidency of Lord Hatherley. The report showed that the ordinary income for 1873 was £9895, and the expenditure £11,393. The deficiency had been partially met by the sale of capital, but it had been found necessary to reduce the number of orphans in the school by seven, although the applications for admission had been painfully urgent.

The Bishop of Ely, in instituting a clergyman at Chesterton, on Tuesday, delivered an address, in which he urged the absolute necessity for daily service being instituted in every parish, and the celebration of the holy communion at least weekly, without which no clergyman could keep religion alive in his heart. He spoke in very condemnatory terms of the family pews of the Church, and urged the immediate necessity of restoration and the removal of all distinctions.

The Archbishop of York presided, on Tuesday, at the inaugural meeting of the Hull branch of the Seamen's Mission. His Grace said the country was now awaking to a sense of its duty, yet the balance remained on the wrong side. In the evening his Grace addressed an audience of about 3000 persons connected with the Church of England Temperance Society. He did not wish to hector and drag the people of England into the virtue of temperance. He did not even hope by legislative means to force rules of temperance upon the people. He believed such an idea to be perfectly vain unless the foundation was first laid in the minds and convictions of the people themselves. He had long thought the Church of England had been a little too dainty about dealing with the great question. His Grace at some length pointed out the advantages of temperance.

They will be of the annual value of £40, and will be tenable during residence for four years. The Provost and Fellows of Worcester also offer an exhibition of the annual value of £70, and tenable during residence for four years.

The examination for the classical tripos at Cambridge began on Monday. There were 76 candidates, showing an increase over last year, when only 68 presented themselves. With the exception of Queen's and Magdalene, each college has one or more candidates, who are distributed as follows:—Trinity, 25; St. John's, 14; King's, 5; Emmanuel, Jesus, Caius, and Clare, 4 each; St. Catherine's, Christ's, and Pembroke, 3 each; St. Peter's and Trinity Hall, 2 each; Sidney, Downing, and Corpus, 1 each. Among the candidates there were six who obtained honours in the mathematical tripos, four of them being Wranglers. The list of those approved for the tripos, arranged in order of merit, will be published on the morning of March 26.

A valuable endowment in trust for ever has been presented to the Belfast Queen's College by Mr. William Dunville. It consists of two studentships, one for the encouragement of the mathematical and physical and the other for that of natural sciences. They are intended by the donor to enable distinguished students who attain graduation to pursue their collegiate studies further. The studentships are tenable for two years, and are of the value of £45 for the first and £100 for the second year.

The annual demonstration by the fourth-year students of St. Andrew's University, in commemoration of Kate Kennedy, daughter of the founder of the college, was observed yesterday week. About noon "Kate," equipped in riding-habit, appeared, followed by a retinue, gorgeously attired. The college and professors' houses were duly honoured with a call. During their progress throughout the city the processionists busied themselves vending their "annual" and the carte. Principal and professors are represented as an assembly of immortals on Mount Olympus considering the lady-students' question. Kneeling before the presiding deity is a lady student, while in the background is seen the shade of John Stuart Mill, bearing in his hand the gift of £5000.

The Extra Supplement.

FOX-HUNTING IN FRANCE.

Although stag-hunting has been a favourite sport for many years in France, tho chasse au Renard is quite of modern date. There is no reason, however, why it should not be there brought to perfection, as foxes are plentiful, the country in most parts is open, and hounds and horses can easily be procured from England. Perhaps it would be advisable that our volatile neighbours should borrow our hunting costume. A plain scarlet coat, a pair of well-made breeches, and neat top-boots would certainly look better than the embroidered coat, the heavy jack-boot, the French horn, and the coureau de chasse of the sportsmen represented in our Illustration. The servant's dress, too, his coat and hat bedizened with gold lace, might well be exchanged for the simple attire of a Meltonian groom—dark pepper-and-salt coat, top-boots, and leathers. The pack does not appear to be very numerous, which seems fortunate, as the wily animal, we see, has not got much of a start, and the gentleman and lady in the distance determined on winning the brush. But the sketch is very spirited, and gives a fair notion of French fox-hunting.

Had the life of the Duc d'Orleans been spared, his Royal Highness would probably have become a master of foxhounds; for he was devoted to the chase, and his hunting establishment was that of a thorough sportsman, free from the "pomp and circumstance" of foreign Royalty. It is only within a few years that sporting books and newspapers have appeared in France. The French are indebted to us for their favourite phrase "Le Sport," which includes every field amusement. Nothing could be tamer or more dull than stag-hunting was in France. It was a system of galloping up and down large forests, amidst the sound of horns, the anathemas of the Royal huntsmen, the hallooing of the piqueurs, the yells of the hounds as they were ridden over by some forward Nimrod, and the shouts of the assembled population on foot.

As the love for the "noble science" increases writers will probably arise, in every nation, to describe its glories, since from time immemorial hunting has been the theme of prose and poetical authors. The works of Xenophon, Pliny, Homer, Virgil, and Ovid abound in descriptions of hounds and horses. Our own Shakespeare has eulogised the "echoes loud, redoubled and redoubled, concourse wild of mirth and jocund din." Of all the poets, however, Somerville must be noticed as not only a speculative, but a real sportsman. His language, sentiments, and the incidents he describes display a thorough knowledge of the subjects he writes upon. His correct description of the kennel, his vivid portraiture of the hounds, his philosophical discussion upon scent, and his lively and full-length portraiture of fox-hunting—the "casting" of the hounds, their working upon the scent, the un-kennelling of the fox, his breaking cover, and the full cry of the pack are most exciting pictures. We strongly advise those interested in the chasse au Renard to employ some talented writer to translate Somerville's "Chase" into French. The truly graphic delineation by Guillaume Regamey, which we have engraved, shows that there are artists in France fully competent to illustrate such a work; and it is one that we think would be sought for with avidity by La Jeune France.

THE FESTIVITIES IN RUSSIA.

In addition to the sketches by our Special Artist which have been published upon the occasion of the marriage of his Royal Highness the Duke of Edinburgh to the Grand Duchess Marie, daughter of the Emperor of the Russias, we give an illustration of the grand fête on the ice, prepared by the English Neva Skating Club, at which the Prince and Princess of Wales, the Duke and Duchess of Edinburgh, Prince Arthur, the Czarevitch and Czarevna, the Crown Prince of Denmark, and the Grand Dukes Vladimir and Alexis were present. This beautiful entertainment was on the night of the 11th inst. The Neva Skating Club occupy in winter several acres of inclosed river ice, nearly opposite the English church. They had converted this space into an Elysian field of ice temples, magnesium lights, coloured lamps and fires, pavilions, and buffets. All round the ice-field were hung chains of lamps, red and blue and green, festooned in pretty patterns. At one side was the Royal pavilion, with a small supper-room behind, built on the ice. Opposite this were two kiosks for military bands. At each end of the skating-field were cloak and refreshment rooms for the general company. In the centre of the inclosure rose a castle of frozen water, a trophy of ice masonry, converted into a chapelle ardente by a blaze of fires and lanterns burning at its windows and battlements. Small citadels were also built at the corners of the inclosed space, their mimic architecture flushed with Bengal lights burning within. But the most beautiful decoration was the soft light streaming from electric or magnesium lamps fixed at intervals round the inclosure. The Royal guests seemed to enjoy themselves heartily; and the English committee of management—Messrs. Edward Gibson, E. J. Morgan, A. F. Clarke, E. Cattley, and H. Auderen—must be congratulated on the success of their arrangements.

The subject of another Illustration is the scene upon the arrival of the Emperor of Austria at St. Petersburg, on the 13th inst. His Majesty was met at the railway station by the Emperor of Russia, the Prince of Wales and the other English Princes, the Czarevitch and Russian Grand Dukes. The two Emperors were conveyed from the station through the city to the Imperial Palace in a closed carriage, followed by General Trepoff, Chief of Police, in a sleigh drawn by two horses; and the Princes came after, in sleighs of the same kind. They passed beneath a triumphal arch from Great Morskaya, as shown in our Illustration.

It is stated that Mr. Crum-Ewing, late M.P. for Paisley, is to be Lord Lieutenant of Dumfriesshire, in the place of the late Sir James Colquhoun.

The Saddlers' Company is promoting not only technical but liberal education. This week it has held a competitive exhibition of military saddles, which was honoured with a visit from the Duke of Cambridge. It has further offered to the Corporation two scholarships of £80 each, tenable for three years, to be given to pupils of the City of London School proceeding to either University.

A meeting was held at the Watercress and Flower Girls' Mission, Laystall-street, on Tuesday, in connection with the "Emily Loan Fund," of which the Earl of Shaftesbury is the president. The object of the fund, which has been established some time, is to advance to this very poor class of the community the small capital they may require to set them up in business during the winter, when the supply of crosses and flowers fails. Already nearly 300 poor street hawkers have been assisted by the fund, and many have been thus kept from actual pauperism. In connection with the fund there are religious services, school, penny banks, &c. About 200 girls sat down to tea on Tuesday night, and the Earl of Shaftesbury presided at the subsequent meeting.

NATIONAL SPORTS.

Voltigeur—the chief representative of the Blacklock blood, the merits and demerits of which have given rise to so much fierce controversy—received a kick from a mare on Saturday last, which broke one of his thighs, and necessitated his immediate destruction. He was a comparative failure as a sire, but will be much missed by Dr. Shorthouse, who will truly be able to say, "Othello's occupation's gone." Voltigeur was by no means a promising yearling; indeed, he was returned unsold from Doncaster, as no one would give 100 gs. for him; but, as a two-year-old, he performed so well in a trial that the late Lord Zetland bought him for £1000 and certain contingencies. Ridden by Job Marson, he won the Derby; and also secured the St. Leger, after a dead-heat with Russborough, who was greatly interfered with, in the run off, by the crowd swarming into the course. The Doncaster Cup was, however, his crowning triumph, as at weight for age he beat the hitherto undefeated Flying Dutchman. This race led to the famous match, which is one of the great landmarks of turf history, and in which the Flying Dutchman fully revenged himself on his conqueror. It is generally believed that Voltigeur was over-trained for this engagement; and, in any case, it is certain that he never again displayed much form. Vedette, Sabreur, The Ranger, Buckstone, Fortunio, The Starter, Tibthorpe, and Falkland are about the best of his descendants.

From various causes, the Waterloo Cup scarcely excited as much attention as usual this year, but the running for it was of a most sensational character, as favourite after favourite succumbed in succession; and finally Magnano and Surprise, against each of which 200 to 1 could have been obtained after the draw had taken place, were put into the slips to run off the final course. In the first round Fugitive, who performed in the much-talked-of trial with Peasant Boy, ran clean away from Satire, and was at once made first favourite for the Cup; Tyrant was too fast for Royal Mary, the chief hope of Ireland; and then came a terrible blow to backers, for Muriel, starting very slowly, was led to the hare by Magnano, and beaten in a short and not very satisfactory trial. Mr. Jardine was also unlucky with two of his other representatives, Progress being well beaten by Diaticus, and Lucetta succumbing to Darcacolle. Peasant Boy had some trouble in defeating the moderate Red Prince, and had so evidently lost the smartness which characterised him on his two previous essays that he became a worse favourite than before his victory. Fugitive again ran well in the first ties; but White Slave, Mr. Jardine's last representative, was put out by Willie Galwey. Old Black Knight ran with all the fire of a puppy, and, in spite of a heavy fall, beat Croesus cleverly. Magnano never allowed British Crown to score a point, and Diaticus ran one of the most brilliant courses of the meeting against Whinblossom. Odds of 3 to 1 were laid on Peasant Boy against Surprise; but the latter not only led "the black" to the hare, but had far the best of the work in a long trial, to the great delight of the crowd, with whom Peasant Boy has always been very unpopular. In the second ties Magnano had to run twice against Tyrant, and only just beat him "at the second time of asking;" Amethyst, though running unsteadily, was too fast for Milky Way, and Surprise fairly outworked Darcacolle. Fugitive commenced the third ties with a very brilliant exhibition against Willie Galwey; Magnano and Diaticus were far too good for Sir William Don and Amethyst respectively; and Bannockburn was beaten pointlessly by Surprise. Fugitive was backed at 7 to 4 against Magnano in the fourth ties, but the latter took the first turn by several lengths, and, after Fugitive had scored three or four points, drew past him and effected a very meritorious kill; and, after an undecided, Surprise gave Diaticus no chance. The final course was very close, and Magnano, who took first turn, just won, owing to his superior speed. The winner is by Cauld Kail—Isoline, and belongs to Mr. C. Morgan, a south-country courser; while Surprise, nominated by Mr. Massey, is the property of Mr. Martelli, and is by Sir William—Modesty.

Want of space will not allow us to go fully into the running for the Purse and Plate. In the former, Muriel and Progress, who seemed to have recovered the effects of the trials which they were injudiciously allowed to run on the previous Saturday, showed their best form, and eventually divided; and Mr. Jardine also ran up for the Plate with White Slave, by Improver—Emma Snow, who was beaten by Gallant Poe, by Don Antonio—Maggie Smith, in the final course. Peasant Boy had been sent home lame, and took no part in this stake.

Earl Granville presided, on Tuesday evening, at a banquet given at the Lord Warden Hotel, Dover, to the Earl of Guilford, master of the East Kent foxhounds.

For nearly two years W. Cook has been left in undisturbed possession of the title of billiard champion; but, at length, John Roberts, jun., once more challenged him, and the match took place at St. James's Hall on Tuesday evening last. Every seat was occupied; indeed, so many people were refused admission, that the players would do well to secure a larger room on future occasions. Roberts broke the balls, and was the first to score, but had only made 7 when Cook got well away with a superb contribution of 121 (the largest break ever made on a championship table), and followed this up with 82 and 40, which brought him to 244 against 18. His wonderful delicacy of touch and knowledge of strength was never better exhibited than in these breaks, which included some beautiful cannons. It was now Roberts's turn, and in four successive innings he made 110, while his opponent only added 5. An opportune fluke enabled the champion to add 61 to his score, against which Roberts contributed 25, 24, and 45, reaching 295 to 379; but Cook once more drew away, and, at the interval, had reached 537 to 397. On resuming play, Roberts at first made up a little of his lost ground, but the advantage was only temporary, for Cook again increased his lead, and, though no larger breaks were made on either side, won by 216 points. The game lasted 3 hours 41 minutes.

On Monday last, in spite of the incessant rain, a large number of spectators assembled at Kennington Oval to witness the football-match between picked twenties of England and Scotland, which was played under the Rugby Union rules. The visitors were undoubtedly the faster team; but England made up for this by more combined play, and, when "time" was called, had won a hardly-contested game by one goal against a try. We append the names of the players:—

ENGLAND.—T. Bateson, F. J. Batten (back), M. Brooks (back), H. A. Bryden, E. C. Cheston, W. E. Collins (half-back), C. W. Crosse, T. Cunliffe, H. Freeman (three-quarter-back), E. Genth, A. St. G. Hamersley (captain), E. Kewley, H. Hon. H. A. Lawrence (back), M. W. Marshall, W. H. Milton (half-back), S. Morse (half-back), the Hon. S. Parker, W. H. Stafford, D. P. Turner, and R. Walker.

FINE ARTS.

The Queen has lent her picture, by Frith, of the Marriage of the Prince of Wales, to the Hibernian Academy Exhibition.

The Print Room of the British Museum will in future be opened every day of the week.

Mr. Edward Samuelson, the last Mayor of Liverpool, has presented a picture by Turner to the Corporation of that town for their new art-gallery. The Town Council lately voted £1200 for the purchase of pictures this year for the gallery.

An action has been brought against Mr. Hayes, the Irish artist, a member of the Royal Hibernian Academy, for libel arising out of the "Civic Celebrities" caricatures, attributed to him, the plaintiff being Sir Wm. Carroll. The publication on which the action is based represents the plaintiff in the costume of a clown, with his left foot and leg enormously swollen, and a ridiculous legend appended. Damages are laid at £500.

Active arrangements are being made for the adequate representation of French art and industry at this year's International Exhibition. French artists are making large demands for the admission of their pictures and works of art. The city of Paris will exhibit an extensive illustration of the municipal works of the French capital, accompanied by models of public buildings and sanitary appliances.

There was a grand show, on Friday week, of Mr. Vernon Heath's landscape autotypes, in the library of the Royal Institution, when that gentleman read a paper, which is reported in another column. We take this opportunity of drawing attention to the extraordinary perfection to which Mr. Vernon Heath has brought landscape-photography, as exemplified in his large autotypes. To consummate artistic taste in the selection of his subjects he combines rare skill in the management of his chemicals, so that his half-tones are always clear and his shadows are never black. The picture of "A Fallen Monarch," an ancient tree laid low by a tempest, is a grand example of successful autotype photography. Mr. Vernon Heath's collection, at 43, Piccadilly, is well worthy of a visit.

Some of the first reports as to losses of pictures in the fire at the Pantechnicon are, we are glad to know, unfounded or exaggerated. No pictures of importance belonging to Sir Richard Wallace are destroyed, though all will regret to learn that he has lost armour, plate, objets d'art, and furniture, collectively of great value, and including articles of great rarity. Mr. Wynn Ellis has lost none of the old masters of his collection, several of which are of historical importance. Some modern pictures belonging to Mr. Ellis were destroyed, but they were not of very considerable value. A most painful loss has, however, been sustained by Mr. Brittan Willis, the well-known animal-painter of the Old Water-Colour Society. The entire series of sketches, studies, and drawings of this artist were destroyed, together with many works by J. D. Harding and other members of the Water-Colour Society. The entire collection was about 2000 in number, and represented a money value of several thousand pounds. The artists' own works were the efforts of a long and laborious life, chiefly drawn from nature in the three kingdoms, on the Continent, and in America. The artist, who is at a distance from home in feeble health, and, we regret to add, uninsured, is prostrated by the disaster.

A movement is on foot at Oxford to raise a subscription for the purpose of procuring the restoration of the paintings on the walls of the Union debating-room, which are now rapidly decaying. The cost of the proposed restoration is estimated to be not less than £700, and the restoration is strongly opposed by a majority of the members, because the society is now in debt, as well as for other reasons. The paintings in question are illustrative of the Arthurian romances, and the immature productions of Messrs. Rossetti, Burne Jones, V. Prinsep, and, if we remember rightly, one or two other painters of the romantic section of the pre-Raphaelites. The paintings are of small artistic value, unless regarded as marking a revival in our school, which has, however, proved nearly abortive. Moreover, the works are executed in distemper, not in genuine or buon fresco; it is therefore impossible for them to stand this climate, and to restore them effectually would involve their entire repainting in some durable medium.

Our Number for last week contained portraits and memoirs of two artists who had respectively reached the ages of ninety-two and ninety-five years. A still more remarkable instance of artistic longevity is that of Count Waldeck, the painter, residing at Paris, who has, says Galignani, just arrived at the great age of 108 years, and is in excellent health. In 1826 M. Waldeck, being then sixty, and in want of money, offered some of his pictures for sale at the Ecole des Beaux Arts, and asked 40,000 francs for them. M. Bastard, the director, replied that the resources at his command did not permit him to make a purchase of that importance, but offered to procure the painter an annual allowance of 2000 francs. This was done, and the Count has therefore received during forty-eight years a total sum of 96,000 francs.

It is remarkable that in Paris, although the number of French artists is doubtless proportionately greater than the number of English artists, an art-exhibition other than that of the Salon is of rare occurrence: there is nothing corresponding to the multitude of exhibitions by independent bodies of artists which we have here. The want of additional exhibitions has indeed been long felt, and at length a "co-operative" society of artists has been formed to supply the desideratum. The objects of the society are the organisation of open exhibitions, without jury or honorary awards, at which each member may exhibit his works; the sale of the said works; and the publication of a journal relating exclusively to the arts. The society is composed of painters, sculptors, engravers, and lithographers. The expenses are to be met by charges on the entries of works, and commission on sales; and should any profit arise it is to be divided among the members.

According to the French critics, the statue of Joan of Arc, lately erected at Paris on the Place des Pyramides, does as little honour to the memory of the heroine as does the satire of Voltaire. The attitude, say these authorities, suggests the idea of a gamin on horseback; the statue has no heroic qualities, and the face is equally devoid of character, beauty, and expression.

The "Venus of Falcrone," a statue in Parian marble, found, in 1836, in the town of Falcrone, among the ruins of an ancient theatre, has been added to the sculpture galleries of the Louvre. The statue closely resembles, but, though beautiful, is inferior in style and execution to the famous Venus of Milo in the same galleries. It is conjectured by M. Ravaisson, the curator of the antiques of the Louvre, and other connoisseurs, that each of these statues once belonged to a group completed by a statue of Mars, such as the two groups of Venus and Mars to be seen in the Uffizi at Florence. The conjecture acquires some probability from the fact that the left side of the Venus of Milo, which would, in a group, be concealed by the form of Mars, is less carefully chiselled than the rest of the statue.

AMONG THE NOVELISTS.

The first volume of The Blue Ribbon, by the author of "St. Olave's," &c. (Hurst and Blackett), creates a feeling of almost enthusiastic admiration, and leads one to anticipate extraordinary gratification. And, indeed, that single volume is worth a round dozen of even the most highly-praised recent novels; so fresh, piquant, and exquisitely pathetic are the portions it contains of the whole story. Nor do the author's creations resemble mere airy phantoms of the brain; they seem to have coverings of solid flesh and plenty of strong backbone. Nearly all the characters have their distinct peculiarities, and at once enlist the reader's interest or sympathy. We may fear that Mr. Ballinger, amusing as he is for a while, will eventually become a bore; but he promises to compensate for that by developing into a thorough villain. The mystery that hangs about Patch combines with her fierce temper, her foreign tongue, and her gift of song, to set expectation on tiptoe. We acknowledge in Gurtha an excellent specimen of the rough, honest, faithful, kindhearted, shrewd, laughable, somewhat irritable, but wholly valuable and greatly lovable, domestic servant; and in Mrs. Bratchet an equally excellent specimen of the motherly, garrulous, conscientious, overworked old woman, as ludicrous as she is good and as good as she is ludicrous, whose religious views are nondescript but strong, and who mingles the washing of linen with the singing of psalms. The widowed mother and her cares and her struggles and her triumphs, and the stranger who befriends her and the friends who desert her, are very truthfully and touchingly described; and the society of the cathedral city is slightly and partially, but vividly and characteristically, sketched. The brother and sister, the strong, manly boy and the weak, deformed girl, the former the unconscious cause of the latter's life-long cross, take one's heart by storm from the very moment when we see them, first fishing for minnows together, then cutting into fantastic shapes and ultimately devouring blancmange together, and then "making believe" to be at an astronomical lecture together. So sweet and noble a conception as the girl required very tender, careful, delicate treatment; and very tenderly, carefully, and delicately it is treated. We take to the old scientific gentleman, too, from the very day when he rides up to the wicket-gate just in time to see one young gentleman knock another young gentleman into a bed of nettles and to deliver some dry remarks upon the subject; and we like him still better as the tale proceeds and as we learn more and more about the "works" of which he is the master; for then we make the acquaintance of the pretty, charming, winning girl who wears the "blue ribbon;" and surely a simpler, quainter, more picturesque, more captivating maiden, beloved of Apollo and the Muses, was never imported by novelist's fancy from her German home into this country to fascinate the hero and the readers of a novel. The second and third volumes are somewhat prolix and commonplace compared with the first volume; indeed, it was, perhaps, too much to expect that so exceptionally good a beginning should have as exceptionally good a continuation.

A collection of more or less exciting stories, written with the skill that comes of experience strengthening natural aptitude, is to be found in the three volumes entitled Monsieur Maurice, and Other Tales, by Amelia B. Edwards (Hurst and Blackett). If the tales were published with any object beyond the perfectly legitimate one—which, it may safely be predicted, will be attained—of affording a very appreciable amount of entertainment to whosoever has leisure to read them, that object, one would think, must be a revival of the almost obsolete belief in ghosts and supernatural warnings. Whether we read how Monsieur Maurice, the French prisoner on parole, was miraculously preserved from firearms and poison; or how a third man, who came and went like a puff of smoke, suddenly stood upon the steam-engine, "and turned the steam off" just in time to prevent an awful sacrifice of life; or how the brother of Egerton Wolfe did or did not come back from the dead to save the living; or how twenty men without their leader are seen "riding through the hollow way" after they have been "cut to pieces;" or how Gustave Berghem "avers that in that awful dream, in which his senses came back to him, he distinctly saw, as in a vision, the mouldering form beneath the hearth, and the others under the sluggish waters of the pond;" or how the "gracious spirit" of Salome was seen "thrice, haunting the spot where . . . ;" or how phantoms or illusions, or whatever they may be most properly called, are put to really useful work, and not to mere thrumming of banjos, or rapping of tables, or tying and untying of knotted ropes, we are continually confronted by the preternatural. One vision that may haunt the reader all the way through is traceable to the fact that the author has for the most part, if not entirely, adopted the autobiographical form of narration; and the consequence is that, to those who cannot divest themselves of what has clung to them from a perusal of the titlepage, a grotesque image presents itself of an author epicene in gender, of fabulous age, and engaged in all kinds of impossibilities.

There is plenty of wild rattle, modified by something, tuneful or other, of a more sober kind, in Transmigration, by Mortimer Collins (Hurst and Blackett). It is a fanciful story, the leading idea whereof may be gathered from the following statement. The third volume opens with a startling announcement, from which it is to be inferred that one and the same person dies "at seven in the afternoon of the 29th of June, 1840," and is born "at eleven in the evening of the 29th of June, 1840," having passed the interval, chiefly amongst personages famous in Grecian or Roman mythology or history, in the planet Mars. The author's sentiments and speculations are pervaded by earthiness, and he seldom or never rises above the sensual, not to say the sensual. According to him, a second existence may enable you to marry the lovely woman whom you loved and lost in your and her first existence; but it does not appear that, so far as your nature is concerned, you undergo what may be properly termed metempsychosis; you do not seem to become a superior, even if you be not transformed into an inferior, type of humanity; you have the same somewhat grovelling tastes and passions, though your reminiscences of a former state of life may help you to astonish your teachers by your manner of dealing with Euclid and arithmetic or to have the advantage over a bullying school-fellow by your scientific method of plying the fist. The novel is, in parts, very amusing and, throughout, very brisk, buoyant, and readable; but though the author's fancy was, as he himself states, suggested to him by the very mouth of Wordsworth, who quoted:—

Our birth is but a sleep and a forgetting:
The Soul that rises with us, our life's star,
Hath had elsewhere its setting,
And cometh from afar,

he has worked it up (or down) into a mundane structure, wherein Strasbourg pie and strong drink are not by any means prohibited, such as the illustrious poet may not have contemplated. One of the author's curious notions is that "in the present state of Great British modesty it is hard to put into sufficiently decorous prose anything that bridegroom and bride are likely to say to each other when yachting in the Mediterranean." Surely there is some mistake here; there is either a complete misapprehension of facts or a great inaccuracy of expression. That the conversation of a newly-married couple would be uninteresting to anybody but themselves is likely enough, if not quite certain; but that it is, as a matter of course, indecorous and calculated to shock "Great British modesty," and that the author, "as a moral man," cannot record anything of the kind in his pages, is an assertion at which one's hair would stand on end, if one's sides did not shake with derisive laughter.

Two or three bushels of short stories, such as children and some adults delight in, with fairies and brownies and all sorts of impossible creatures performing all sorts of impossible feats, are contained within the covers of Tales from the Fjeld, from the Norse of P. Chr. Asbjørnsen, by E. W. Dasent, D.C.L., (Chapman and Hall). Some of the stories are quaint and pretty and amusing enough of themselves; some are interesting because of the witness they bear to a family likeness between what is called the folklore of all nations; some are of an allegorical or quasi-allegorical kind, and probably teach a moral lesson to those who are sharp enough to detect it; all are of the good, old-fashioned, seven-league-booted sort. There are many reasons for supposing that the translation is well done; and therefore, as the translation does not exhibit many, if any, marks of fancy's higher and more poetical moods, it may be taken for granted that they would not be discovered even in the original. The collection, in fact, is not much, if at all, above the level of "Gammer Gurton."

LAW AND POLICE.

TRIAL OF THE TICHBORNE CLAIMANT FOR PERJURY.

The Lord Chief Justice, yesterday week, continued his summing up of the evidence in the Tichborne trial. Before proceeding with it, however, he called attention to a letter sent to him by Mr. Guildford Onslow, which had been elicited by some observations of the learned Judge a day or two previously. In this communication Mr. Onslow explained the part he had taken in reference to some of the pecuniary details of this case. His Lordship, in the course of the day, reviewed the defendant's statements upon points on which it must be assumed that Roger Tichborne possessed the necessary knowledge, such as his life at Stonyhurst, in the Army, and in South America, and drew notice to many discrepancies between these statements and the facts as they must have been known to Roger Tichborne.

Defendant's version of his school life at Stonyhurst was summed up on Monday. Taking the authentic account obtained from the family correspondence, the Lord Chief Justice showed, one after another, the many instances in which the defendant was at fault. The ingenious theories and assumptions by which his counsel had attempted to reconcile discrepancies were treated as requiring very little refutation. The cottage in which he said he had lived could not be discovered on satisfactory evidence. His statement of the date when he left Stonyhurst was directly at variance with the college records. His Lordship proved still more against the defendant from cases in which he remembered too much—as when he told Mr. Hoffman, the drawing-master, about the Rev. Father Walmsley, who had not been rector of the college until after Mr. Hoffman's time; and in his alleged meeting with Mr. Bertram Talbot at Bilton Grange, which was contradicted by Mrs. Hibbert, the lady of the house. It was shown that defendant's account of his examination at Sandhurst did not tally with the facts.

On Tuesday his Lordship went over many of the salient episodes in Roger's life, applying to them the question—"Could Roger's memory of these have been like the defendant's?" Among the incredible things that the defendant had forgotten were Roger's last visit to Mr. Seymour at Bath, his acquaintance with Lady Clanricarde and other people of fashion in Dublin, his correspondence while in Ireland, the books he had read and annotated, and his military knowledge both as respects his own regiment and the army generally. His Lordship clenched these disproofs of identity with a series of special objections. As to the defendant's having forgotten his native tongue, it might not be intellectually impossible, but it must be a very exceptional case, and was all the more surprising in a man whose memory seemed to be marvellously tenacious in other matters. Roger's love for his cousin, Miss Doughty, inspired his Lordship with the most solemn reflections, unfavourable to the defendant. It was a feeling, he thought, which could never have died in Roger's heart.

The Lord Chief Justice, before resuming the summing up on Wednesday, informed the jury that he required a day's rest, and therefore the Court would not sit on Thursday. He thought he could conclude his observations on the evidence on Friday, and that two hours on Saturday would finish the whole, so that by midday the jury would be able to consider their verdict. The learned Judge then went into an exhaustive examination of the circumstances surrounding the sealed packet and the relations between Roger Tichborne and his cousin, Miss Doughty. His Lordship's treatment of this part of the case was followed with deep attention by a crowded court.

In the Rolls Court on Tuesday a bill filed by a trustee to ascertain the validity of a deed by which property had been made over to a convent in Belfast, by a lady who had become a nun, was dismissed with costs by the Master, Sir George Jessel, who said the plaintiff's proceeding was most unjustifiable; for that he had nothing to do in the matter but to carry out the wishes of the lady, who might order her possessions to be thrown into the sea if she chose.

By consent, a verdict of £150 was taken, in the Court of Exchequer, last Saturday, to compensate the widow and children of an army accoutrement maker, who, sustaining a mental shock by a gas explosion, which happened as he was passing the house of the defendant, died, after a painful illness, raving mad.

In the Court of Exchequer an action was brought, on Monday, by Mr. John Glendinning, a corn merchant, at Newcastle-on-Tyne, to recover from a "bookmaker" calling himself Pleasant Hook the sum of £100, deposited with the defendant as stakeholder during the Birmingham races, in July last, and having reference to the question whether a horse named Hermit won the Two Thousand Guineas Stakes. The allegations were denied by the defendant; but a verdict was given for the plaintiff—damages, £100.

Lord de Mauley summoned Captain Carr on Monday, at Marlborough-street, for an assault committed at the Horse Agency, in Piccadilly, where the defendant has an office. A fine of twenty shillings, with costs, was inflicted.

M. Rivière appeared, on Tuesday, at Westminster, with the woman who, a short time ago, made a statement there about some music having been abstracted from her luggage, and afterwards published under another name. Miss Wood, the complainant, now absolutely withdrew her charge, and her retraction was enhanced by the evidence of her landlady that she was not over-sane.

In hearing another batch of summonses against parents for not sending their children to school, Mr. Ingham entertained the question whether an inspector might not be employed to go about and look after the truants.

In the Sheriffs' Court, on Wednesday, Mr. Hynam sued for compensation for the compulsory taking of his premises in Princes-square and Wilson-street, Finsbury, they being required for the London and North-Western Railway for a new station. A verdict for £16,000 was agreed upon.

Mr. Charles Semple, lately a Lieutenant in the 93rd Highlanders, was charged at the Middlesex Sessions, on Wednesday, with assaulting Mr. Henry Frisby, a member of the Stock Exchange. He pleaded guilty to a common assault, and was fined £50. He was also ordered to enter into his own recognisances in £500, and to find two sureties each in the sum of £250, to keep the peace for twelve months.

Antonio Antoniadis, twenty-three years of age, who is said to be an Englishman, notwithstanding the Greek name he had assumed, and who had already been committed for trial on a charge of obtaining £40 on the false pretence that he was a member of the firm of Baring Brothers, was, on Monday, placed before the Lord Mayor on a fresh accusation of forgery and fraud, and upon this also was sent for trial.

Colonel Allen, of Curzon-street, Mayfair, was, on Wednesday, summoned to Marlborough-street for an assault on his valet, and was fined £5 and costs.

The Countess de Civry, also calling herself the Countess de Bar, was again placed before Mr. Knox, yesterday week, charged with having obtained a large quantity of goods from various tradesmen by fraud. She was committed for trial, bail having been accepted.

William Colden, an absent minded person, of independent means, has had to answer at Westminster for an indiscretion in walking off with an unpaid pork chop from a butcher's in Vauxhall-bridge-road. The magistrate, having doubts about Colden's moral responsibility, accepted his recognisances to come up for judgment when called upon.

Mr. A. Hickey, a chemist and dentist, at Silver-street, Notting-hill, has been prosecuted by the Metropolitan Railway Company for smoking in one of their carriages. The evidence showed that he had grossly insulted a lady, and, when remonstrated with, had used disgraceful language. The magistrate regretted that he had been charged with only one offence, and required him to pay 40s. fine, with 44s. costs.

Collin Kelly, a carpenter, having no home, but who gave the name of Benjamin Leslie Nicholls, residing in Oxford-street, was charged at Marylebone, on Monday, with breaking into a house in Islop-street, Kentish Town, and threatening to murder his brother, Mr. Henry Kelly. He was also charged with attempting to murder Henry Davis, by stabbing him. The witnesses included both Mr. Kelly and Mr. Davis, and, after some evidence had been given, a remand was granted.

At Westminster Police Court, yesterday week, Mr. Conquest, milk-seller, Montpelier-street, Brompton, appeared to an adjourned summons charging him with selling milk adulterated with water. The adulteration was admitted, but the guilty party, it was said, was the man who sent it from the country. He had been in the habit of calling for his account every three weeks, but since these proceedings were taken he had never been near the place, and another sample of his milk was found to contain 16 per cent of water. The defendant said he intended to proceed against that person, first for selling adulterated milk, and then by action to recover damages for the loss the defendant had sustained by conviction. Mr. Arnold fined the defendant only £3, as the costs were exceedingly heavy—£6 12s. 6d.

Mr. T. F. Dillon Croker was attacked in the Fulham-road about midnight on Friday week by two men, who threw him into the road and robbed him of his watch, chain, and gold locket set with diamonds. They then ran away in the direction of Kensington. Mr. Croker, though much bruised and partially stunned, pursued them, but was unable to overtake them.

A convict named Davison, employed upon the dockyard extension works at Chatham, refused, on Tuesday, to continue his labours. Upon being remonstrated with by Warden May, he seized a spade and dealt a murderous blow at May's head. The warden to some extent parried the blow with his hand, but his head was at the same time severely cut.

A daring attempt at shop robbery was made at Windsor on Saturday afternoon. Shortly after five o'clock, in the midst of a busy market, a man with his clenched fist broke a large pane of plate glass in the shop of Mr. Willoughby, jeweller, and attempted to seize a tray of valuable gold rings; but a policeman who saw what he had done ran up to him and seized him before he was able to effect his object. The prisoner was only discharged from Reading gaol that morning.

At the Sheffield Townhall, on Tuesday, two butchers, living at Tideswell, Derbyshire, were summoned for sending diseased meat to Sheffield. One, named Walter Gilbert, was fined £20 and costs; and the other, Frank Hill, £5 and costs.

A female burglar, in the person of a girl fifteen years of age, named Harriet Keece, was on Monday before the magistrate at Cardiff. She had, until within the last fortnight, been servant to Mr. E. Thomas, in Edward-place. During the night of Thursday week she entered the house by the kitchen window, and proceeded to a bed-room, from which she took money amounting to £55 and a gold watch and chain, and then decamped. On the following morning the girl made some extensive purchases of clothing, and this led to her apprehension.

With a view to increased popularity and the promotion of recruiting, the Royal Aberdeenshire Highlanders will henceforward assume the kilt in lieu of their less picturesque uniform.

At a gathering of agriculturists at Sevenoaks, on Tuesday, it was decided to agitate for a repeal—or, at any rate, the reduction—of the malt duty.

Mr. John Kirk has been appointed to the post of Director and Principal Clerk of her Majesty's Chancery in Scotland, vacant by the death of Mr. John Mackenzie Lindsay.

A fine example of the rare Dutch landscape-painter, Hobbema, dated 1663, the master's best period, has been added to the museum at Brussels.

A number of working men in Westminster have, by means of a small subscription, bought the land and built suitable premises for a working men's club, reading and refreshment rooms, and lecture-halls, capable of accommodating 600 or 700 persons. The building has cost £1200, which has been subscribed entirely by the working classes. One of the subscribers designed the building, another acted as architect, and others worked as carpenters, bricklayers, and gasfitters. The hall is situated in Regent-street, Westminster, where a fancy bazaar has been held, closing this (Saturday) evening. The proceeds will be applied in furnishing the club.

ARRIVAL OF THE EMPEROR OF AUSTRIA AT ST. PETERSBURG.
FROM A SKETCH BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST.

THE LATE M. MICHELET, FRENCH HISTORIAN.

THE BAY AND TOWN OF FUNCHAL, MADEIRA.

THE LATE M. MICHELET.

The death of this learned and popular French writer has been mentioned. Jules Michelet was born at Paris in 1793. He early distinguished himself as a student of history, and was, in 1821, appointed to a chair in the Collège Sainte Barbe, where he taught the ancient languages and philosophy until 1826. Shortly after the Revolution of 1830 he was appointed chief of the historical section of the archives of the realm; and M. Guizot, unable on account of his political duties to continue his lectures on history in the Faculty of Literature in Paris, named Michelet as his substitute. In 1838 he succeeded M. Dunon in the chair of history in the Collège de France, and was elected member of the Institute. M. Michelet regarded history as "philosophy teaching by example." His first work, "Tableaux Synthétiques de l'Histoire Moderne," appeared in 1826; his "Histoire de France," in 1833-63; and his "Histoire de la Révolution Française," in 1847-53. He was a great opponent of the Jesuits, against whom he has written "Des Jésuites," published in 1813; "Du Prêtre, de la Femme, et de la Famille," in 1844; and "Du Peuple," in 1846. He wrote "L'Oiseau," published in 1856; "L'Insecte," in 1857; "L'Amour," in 1858; "La Femme," in 1859; "La Mer," in 1861; "La Sorcière," in 1862; "La Bible de l'Humanité," in 1864; and "Nos Pères," a plea for compulsory education, in 1869. The Government of Napoleon III. in March, 1851, interdicted his lectures, and he from that time retired into private life.

The portrait is from a photograph by Reutlinger, of Paris.

FUNCHAL, MADEIRA.

The island of Madeira, famous for its mild winter climate, and frequently sought by the consumptive patients of England for a refuge in that season, has lately received a few of the victims of African fever, disabled from exposure to the climate of the Gold Coast in our Ashantee war. Madeira is situated in the Atlantic Ocean, about latitude 32 deg. N., longitude 17 deg. W., 400 miles off the north-western shore of Africa. The island is nearly forty-two miles long and twenty miles broad. It is mountainous, being a mass of basalt rock, with summits from 4000 ft. to 6000 ft. high, but it is intersected by fertile valleys, with streams of clear water. The vineyards are formed on the sides of the hills, to the height of 2300 ft. above the sea level. In the lower parts many tropical plants are cultivated, the sugar-cane, the date palm, and maize. The population is about 100,000, of mixed race, but the Portuguese nationality is in the ascendant. Madeira was discovered and colonised by the Portuguese in the fifteenth century. We present a view of the harbour and town of Funchal, the only town in the island.

Last week 2476 births and 1616 deaths were registered in London. After making due allowance for increase of population, the births were 42 and the deaths 32 below the average numbers in the corresponding week of the last ten years. MERSEL KEBIR BAY, NEAR ORAN, WITH SPANISH VESSELS OF WAR.

THE SIEGE OF CARTHAGENA.

The prolonged resistance of the Intransigentes or Red Republican insurgents of Spain to the military and naval forces of the Madrid Government at Carthagena is now an affair of the past. Some interest may yet belong to the subjects of our present illustrations, which are from sketches made by Mr. Algernon Yockney, assistant paymaster of H.M.S. Toroh, showing the condition of the gates and batteries, and outlying forts, immediately after the surrender of the town and the entry of General Dominguez. The place seems to have been a good deal knocked about, but there was not much loss of life. It will be remembered that the rebel leaders, with several hundreds of the men they had engaged in the defence of Carthagena, made their escape in two of the Spanish frigates. They arrived at the French port of Oran, on the coast of Algeria, where they were allowed to land, but were disarmed and placed for a time in confinement. The ships were, upon demand, given up to the Spanish Government. Our correspondent has furnished a view of the port of Oran, with the Spanish and other ships of war lying there, to illustrate the last act in that preposterous exhibition of party strife, the performance of the Intransigentes of Carthagena.

ROYAL INSTITUTION LECTURES.

ANALOGIES OF ANCIENT AND RECENT LIFE.

Professor P. M. Duncan, M.D., F.R.S., began his sixth and concluding lecture on Palaeontology by showing that the break in the succession of living things at the close of the palaeozoic age was not so great as has been asserted. He then noticed the intermediate character of the Triassic corals, pointing out that they clearly, in many instances, retained palaeozoic peculiarities in addition to those possessed by mesozoic species. The nature of so-called "characteristic" fossils, and the apparently sudden appearance of certain groups of fossils and their equally sudden disappearance, were next considered; and it was shown that, in distant and equivalent strata, the "characteristic" form became less so, and either did not exist, or was represented by a similar but not identical species, which usually had an extended range. The law that widely-ranging species are found in many consecutive strata was noticed, as well as the nature of endemic and widely-spreading sporadic forms; the former being limited to particular areas by physical conditions; the latter being true wanderers over the surface of the globe: all which tends to substantiate the existence of distributional provinces of animals and plants from the earliest times in the history of the earth. In relation to the imperfection of the geological record, the Professor described strata as the burial places of the organisms of the time of their deposition, and usually accumulating during the subsidence of the crust only. He then described the nature of the lingulella, leperditia, and trilobites, the earliest forms of life known at present except the cozoön, and commented on the structural relations of these early forms to those of the present day, especially in regard to their embryonic and progressively developed condition. After describing the cephalopoda of the Tremadoc rocks and the gradual rise of this great group, followed by a notice of the anatomy of the nautilidae, ammonitidae, and belemnitidae, Professor Duncan commented on the remarkable relation between the shape of the genera of nautilidae and ammonitidae, concluding his discourse with remarks upon the difficulties which surround the two opposite hypotheses of the day—the theories of the special creation and of the evolution of living things.

THE AUTOTYPE PROCESS.

Mr. Vernon Heath, at the Friday evening meeting on the 20th inst., began his discourse by stating that he was present in the lecture theatre, in January, 1839, when Mr. Faraday announced two discoveries—the Daguerreotype, and that which its author, Mr. Fox Talbot, then termed Photogenic Drawing. Mr. Heath then illustrated the extraordinary progress which photography had since made by contrasting a little calotype taken by himself in 1842 and a very large, fine landscape recently produced by the autotype process. He briefly adverted to the experimental researches of various ardent experimenters who had endeavoured to remedy the well-known instability of photographs, a defect which, he said, had been at last removed by the autotype and its kindred processes. Among the persons whose discoveries had conducted to this result he especially mentioned Mungo Ponton, Becquerel, Poitevin, Pouncy, Blair, and Swan; the principles in the new process being the result of the researches of Mr. J. R. Johnson. The basis of the autotype process is the action of light upon gelatine and a pigment in contact with bichromate of potash; the light's action rendering this compound insoluble. By means of an ingenious diagram Mr. Heath explained that the insolubility which is attained, and the solubility that is preserved, are in strict accordance with the degree in which light is shut out from or let into the coating of bichromatised gelatine—the resistance which an ordinary negative offers to the action of the light being translated into the same exact gradations of the pigment used with the gelatine. This was strikingly illustrated by the development of an autotype print made from a plate which had been covered with various thicknesses of tracing paper; and still further demonstrated by the development of a landscape autotype of large size in which gradations of tone were very perfectly rendered. After explaining certain points in the manipulation, Mr. Heath exhibited the method employed in the production of his large landscapes in autotype, stating that, though the means adopted were not new, the present success was due alone to the extremely perfect character and quality of the autotype transparency from which the enlarged negative was made. In regard to magnitude, he stated that negatives can be produced of any reasonable dimensions, 48 in. by 38 in. being now a usual size. Mr. Heath then said that the processes which had been considered up to that point were those which substituted the usual photographic processes; but he added that the surface of the gelatine, rendered insoluble by the action of light, was found to have acquired the property of repelling water as from a greasy surface, thereby enabling a design to be inked with printing-ink, and an impression to be taken from the inked surface on paper in a way analogous to lithography. This process was fully illustrated by means of one of the presses employed for autotype mechanical printing, and pictures were actually produced. These and many other appliances and means for the illustration of the discourse were furnished by Messrs. Spencer, Sawyer, and Bird, from their works at Ealing Dean; and the lecturer was also under great obligations to many persons for a great number of specimens exhibited in the library, more especially to the Autotype Fine-Arts Company. After commenting on the autotype process as a most important adjunct to photography, both in regard to the permanence of its works and its influence on the progress of the art, Mr. Heath concluded with the words of Mr. Faraday when he introduced Mr. Fox Talbot's photogenic drawings to the Royal Institution. "No human hand has hitherto traced such lines as these drawings display; and what man may do, now that Dame Nature has become his drawing-mistress, it is impossible to predict." George Busk, Esq., F.R.S., the treasurer and vice-president, was in the chair.

LIFE AND CHARACTER OF MOHAMMED.

R. Bosworth Smith, Esq., M.A., in beginning his second lecture, on Saturday last, passed in review the leading opinions that had been held respecting Mohammed—for instance, the belief that the destroyer of idolatry was himself worshipped as an idol, Dante's treatment of him as a heresiarch, the fable of a dove that inspired him, his identification with Antichrist or the Man of Sin by Christian writers, and the misconceptions to which the English language, in such words as Paynim, termagant, and miscreant, still bore witness. Then, treating of the reaction in his favour, the lecturer referred to the views of Gagner, of Gibbon, and of Carlyle, and the works of subsequent writers. The condition of Arabia before the time of Mohammed was then described, especially in regard to its home-sprung religious star-worship, fire-worship, and fetishism, and the partial introduction of Judaism and Christianity. Passing to the social state, the passion of the Arabs for poetry and plunder was noticed. In regard to the question how far Mohammedanism could or could not have been predicted, Mr. Bosworth Smith remarked upon the limits to the influence of great men, and pointed out what must fairly be put down to Mohammed and what was due to the moral and national upheaval which carried him on. Passing rapidly over Mohammed's uneventful youth, he dwelt at some length upon the phenomena attending the call to be a prophet, the long agony, the hoping against hope, and the indisputable evidence of sincerity which they afforded. The more prominent personal characteristics of the Prophet at the epoch of the Hegira—including this appearance, his dress, and his mode of life—were next described, and it was remarked that a belief in the prophetic office was peculiar to the Semitic races. Then coming to the Prophet's life at Medina, it was shown how entirely the external conditions were changed, and how new temptations brought new dangers, which occasionally got the better of him; but, entering on a minute examination of the moral value of consistency on the one hand and of the alleged crimes of the Prophet on the other, the lecturer combated the ordinary belief that there was a gradual but complete moral deterioration. As to the accusation of Sir William Muir, that Mohammed "forged the name of God" in the Koran for his own private purposes, two crucial occasions were referred to which showed that he was at least as ready to use the Koran in his own condemnation as in his defence. The Prophet's belief in the exact nature and limit of his mission was illustrated by a series of anecdotes drawn from very different, but very critical, occasions in his life. The subject of next Saturday's lecture will be Mohammedanism—an examination of its articles of faith and its leading practical duties; an account of the Koran and its chief characteristics; and an inquiry into Mohammed's attitude towards the miraculous, fatalism, and religious wars, with remarks upon the general religious questions that are involved therein.

PHYSICAL PROPERTIES OF LIQUIDS.

Professor Tyndall began his second lecture, on Tuesday last, with remarks on the solubility of air and other gases in water in different degrees, varying with the pressure; and, after explaining that the cohesion of the molecules of the liquid is diminished by the dissolved air, he showed that the cohesion is greatly augmented when the air is removed by boiling or otherwise. Mercury is rendered much denser by boiling; and water deprived of air, when shaken in a tube, produces a sound resembling the collision of two hard bodies—an apparatus of Donny's, termed the "water-hammer." After illustrating this with other experiments, Professor Tyndall exhibited the effect of the presence or absence of air on the act of boiling. When air was pumped out of some water not quite blood-warm the water boiled for a short time and then became still. It was then aerated by shaking, and the boiling recommenced when the air was once more removed by the air-pump. Reference was then made to the remarkable experiments of Mr. Justice Grove on boiling water in connection with those of Donny, who had observed that in proportion as water is deprived of air the character of its ebullition changes, becoming more and more abrupt, and boiling with violent sudden jerks, between which it reaches a temperature above the boiling point. Justice Grove, when decomposing water by heat, always found nitrogen present with the oxy-hydrogen gas given off, showing that the air also had been decomposed. This fact Professor Tyndall attributed to the vibration of the atoms, as distinguished from that of the molecules, by radiant heat. He then adverted to Dr. Thomas Young's sagacious paper on the Cohesion of Fluids, published in 1805, in which he shows that the particles at and near the surface of a liquid are so attracted by the particles within it as to produce a tension of the surface, exactly as if a thin membrane was stretched over it. This tension, which differs in different liquids, was illustrated by Professor Tyndall in various ways, especially by a soap-bubble; and the air expelled by the bubble, in contracting, strongly affected the flame of a candle. Some beautiful effects produced by mixtures of alcohol and water showing different degrees of tension were exhibited by means of the electric light; and the phenomenon termed the "tears of wine," due to evaporation and tension, was explained and exhibited by means of a little brandy in a claret-glass. After showing that an egg, which sinks to the bottom in ordinary water, may be made to float if enough brine be added to make the water of the same specific gravity as the egg, the Professor, in a series of experiments, illustrated the celebrated researches of the blind philosopher of Ghent, M. Plateau, on the forms of bodies withdrawn from the action of gravity. This condition he obtained by placing a small quantity of olive oil in a mixture of alcohol and water of precisely the same density. The oil, which at first became a perfect sphere, when made to rotate flattened at the poles. When it was more rapidly rotated it flattened still more, and eventually a revolving ring of oil was thrown off. These phenomena Professor Tyndall applied to the explanation of the resolution of a liquid vein into drops, and the deduction of a law therefrom; and, in conclusion, commented on the action of musical sounds in synchronism with the succession of the drops, so as to help the force of configuration to detach the drops sooner, and thereby shorten the continuous portion of the vein. The researches of Savart and Plateau were thus shown to be remarkably correlated.

Sir Samuel W. Baker on Friday next will give a discourse on the Suppression of the Slave Trade on the White Nile.

A general meeting of the Cheshire Chamber of Agriculture was held at Crewe, on Monday, under the presidency of Lord de Tabley. The subject under discussion was the points of agreement between landlords and tenants which would be most just and beneficial to both parties upon taking and leaving farms. The points had received the careful consideration of the Council of the Chamber, and it was the opinion of the Council that they would form a practicable as well as an equitable base on which farm tenure might be placed. The whole of the proposed points of agreement, after they had undergone alterations, were adopted.

THE NEW PARLIAMENT.

In contemplating the personal composition of the new Parliament most persons must have observed that amongst the recruits, so to speak, there are few, if any, men distinguished, in the popular sense, who can be recognised at a glance. It may be that "many a flower" which has blushed unseen may be about to become palpably efflorescent; there may be many a hidden gem which will gleam brightly in its new sphere; but that is all to come, generally speaking. It will be interesting to watch the process of development, whenever it begins, in individual cases; but at present scarcely any novel member stands out in broad relief. Apparently, we have got rid of the philosopho-political, and obtained more than ever of the bucolic and plutocratic element. Possibly it may not be without interest to examine cursorily the list of legislative neophytes, and extract from it, as far as limited means of information go, the characteristics, socially factitious, reflected from the constituencies, or which are actually personal in some of them. In doing this the constituencies, as the most stable and worthy entities, may be taken in alphabetical order, and the representatives, in some sort, described.

Thus Andover, after having been wooed by him several times, has at last accepted Captain Wallesey, who, as he is the presumptive heir to the dukedom of Wellington, will some day be a historic personage, and therefore is noticeable in his present embryo state. Barnstable has contributed its share to the lawyer-dom which is considerable in the present House by its choice of Mr. Waddy, who, as he has just been created a Queen's Counsel, may be assumed to be a rising barrister. Another item has been added by Beaumaris to the legal contingent in the person of Mr. Morgan Lloyd, Q.C., who in a great degree may be said to be a risen professional man. Captain Polhill-Turner, who has been returned for Bedford, has some hereditary claims on that borough, as a near relative of his once sat for it, while he himself is notable as one of the Carabinier witnesses in the Tichborne case. The selection of Mr. Briggs by Blackburn adds to the cotton-spinning element in the House; while the substitution of Mr. Ripley for Mr. Miall at Bradford is, psychologically, a radical change. But for turning its representation upside down, inside out, and every way metamorphosing it, Brighton has been of all constituencies the most conspicuous. For Mr. James White, who is a rough-and-ready financier, and Mr. Fawcett (everyone knows what he is, politically and parliamentarily) it has selected Mr. Ashbury, who is, so far as mankind in general knows, an amateur sailor—that is, a yachtman—chiefly, if not wholly; and General Shute, a cavalry officer, whose name has been familiar to the public, though not in connection with his obtaining the Victoria Cross. Buckingham has in a manner restored a Parliamentary tradition by its choice of Mr. E. Hubbard, inasmuch as his father for long represented the borough when it was twomembered. It is not now that the constituency of Cambridge has shown itself fanciful in its representation, though it has just displaced two Liberals for two Conservatives; thus finding a Parliamentary haven for Mr. A. Marten, a somewhat prominent Chancery barrister, which he has several times sought in vain; while by replacing Mr. Smollett in the House it has contributed something to the promotion of mirth in the Legislature, inasmuch as, in the possession of a now racy, now caustic, humour, that gentleman shows that the blood of his ancestor, the novelist, has not grown thin in his veins.

The dockyard constituencies have in almost every instance turned and rent the late Government, and, as they think, pour cause, so it is no wonder that Chatham preferred Conservative Admiral Elliot to Liberal Mr. Otway, tried friend as the latter was of the "employed" in the borough. Besides being a not undistinguished naval officer, Admiral Elliot is, we believe, an ardent promoter of a scheme for cleansing, physically, the people, by a wide system of baths. The vanquisher of Sir Henry Hoare in Chelsea, Mr. Gordon, is said to be a solicitor; and no more need be said. Another legal member has been contributed by Coventry in Mr. H. Jackson, Q.C., who represented the place in the Parliament of 1865, but was removed in 1868. The election of Mr. T. W. Evans for South Derbyshire is only a restoration, for he was member for that division of the county, being a gentleman of position therein, from 1857 to 1865. One of the recalcitrant dockyard boroughs above alluded to—Devonport—has preferred Mr. Puleston, a Welsh gentleman of consideration, to Mr. J. D. Lewis, of whom they were not worthy. Dover has re-chosen Mr. Freshfield, a former member, who is one of an eminent firm of solicitors, and who was, maugre his profession and his Conservative politics, a legislator of wide ken, and practical withal. Another barrister, who is in effect the leader of the Western Circuit—to wit, Mr. H. T. Cole—has been elected for Penryn, and has displaced, assisted by Mr. D. T. Jenkins, two staunch Conservatives. A new member for Gloucestershire, Mr. Plunkett, is a son of the Baron of that name and title. At Grantham the influence of the family, the head of which is Lord Brownlow, has sensibly, or insensibly, as the case may be, procured the return of Captain Cust. Guildford holds to its faith in the house of Onslow, though it has preferred Conservative Mr. Denzil of that name to his cousin, the former member. The family of Crossley is very potential in Halifax, and it is a question which is most potential, that or the family of Akroyd, both great in manufactures. This time the ascendancy has been gained, Parliamentarily, by the Crossleys, one of whom sits in the seat of Mr. Akroyd, the late member. In the place of Mr. Wren Hoakyn and Major Arbuthnot, the choice of Hereford has fallen on Mr. Pateshull, a more or less local magnate, and Mr. George Clive, also of the vicinage, but who is a Parliamentary resurrection, having been many years in the House, and having been unseated after the election of 1868, besides which he was Under-Secretary for the Home Department in Lord Palmerston's Government. Sir Seymour Fitzgerald has re-entered for Horsham, which he formerly represented, and which enabled him to hold the office of Under-Secretary for Foreign Affairs, and he has employed an interval of ex-Parliamentary life by exercising the functions of Governor of Bombay.

It cannot exactly be said that Hythe has chosen a new member, for a fresh choice would have been necessitated by the death of Baron Meyer de Rothschild, even if Parliament had not been dissolved. The present occupant of the seat is Sir Edward Watkin, whose name is familiar as a railway potentate, and who has had experience of the House in former years as member for Yarmouth and Stockport. Not undistinguished wholly are the gentlemen who come fresh from Ipswich, for Mr. Cobbold's father was once a representative of the place, and Mr. J. R. Bulwer, Q.C., is connected by family with the county of Norfolk, and is one of the leaders of the Norfolk Circuit. A new representative of the city of Lincoln, Colonel Chaplin, is a brother of the Mr. Henry of that name, who has since 1868 sat for Mid-Lincolnshire, and who is otherwise distinguished; and another Baronet, Sir Jacob Astley, sits in the place of Sir Montague Cholmeley (who died just before the dissolution) for North Lincolnshire. Conservatism may be said to be rampant in the representation of the city of London, and commerce is predominant there; for Mr. Twells and Mr.

Hubbard are merchant princes, and Mr. Alderman Cotton, with a certain appropriateness, according to ancient tradition, is a provision merchant. Sir Sydney Waterlow has been of late so much in the public eye that it only needs to say that he is a choice of Maidstone, and Malton has returned a former love in sending back Mr. Sandford, who once was Mr. Peacocke, to the House. After multiple efforts to become a senator, Mr. Forsyth, Q.C., has floated into Parliament on a full tide of favour in Marylebone, and at last adds legislative function to his professional vocation. The brewing interest was already strong in the House, but an "X" has been added to it by the return of Mr. Octavius Coope, who has more than once tried fruitlessly to obtain the suffrages of the Tower Hamlets. At length we have working-men members in the House of Commons, and, though scantily, the class to which they belong are worthily represented. Mr. T. Burt, who has been returned for Morpeth, was a working miner, and, by his ability and his high character, has raised himself to a power amongst his peers. He has been a guide and leader amongst the miners of the north for long, and he is now secretary of the Northumberland Miners' Mutual Confidence Association. In what estimation he is held may be judged from the fact that his immediate constituency—that is, the mining population in the north—has guaranteed him an income adequately commensurate to his present position. The other working-man member—Mr. Macdonald, who sits for Stafford—is an equally trusted leader and officer of an association of miners in Scotland; and he is understood to be a man not only of great ability, but of large thorough practical views.

Norwich sends Mr. Huddleston, Q.C., into a sphere where he is likely to have an opportunity of fulfilling any ambition, as a political and professional man, he may have; Nettingham—ever eccentric in its electoral fancies, to one man or to a political creed constant never—has the distinction of sending the first Conservative Jew to Parliament, in the person of Mr. Saul Isaac; and Pembroke, in the great party struggle that has been going on, has proved itself the Abdiel of dock-yard constituencies by returning Mr. E. J. Reid, the late Constructor of the Navy, who is a Liberal, but who would have been, probably, no adherent of the late Government if it had remained in office. Retaining its old delusion about Mr. Whalley, Peterborough has given that gentleman a former colleague again in Mr. Thomson Hankey, who is an eminent representative of high commerce. A younger representative has stepped into Sir Henry Stork's place at Ripon, pretty much, as a matter of course, as he chose to do so; for Earl De Grey is hereditarily connected—to use a mild term—with the borough. Political independence, in its fullest, most vagaried sense, is typified in the reseat of Mr. Roebuck for Sheffield, and he will at least give a tone of originality to the debates in which he may take part. It is not wonderful that Southampton should delight to confer the highest honour in its power on a gentleman who, if the inclination of the townspeople had prevailed, would have made him their perennial Mayor, and possibly his having been a Sheriff of London did not diminish the attractiveness of Sir Frederick Perkins as a candidate. Yet another legal member is to be found in Mr. Hopwood, a brand-new Q.C., who has caught the electoral favour of Stockport; while Sunderland, in choosing Sir Henry Havelock, has in a manner paid a tribute to one of England's most revered military heroes. For aught the public knows, Mr. Ritchie, who displaced Mr. Ayrton in the Tower Hamlets, may be a proper person to represent that borough; but he is, as a member and a politician, at present in supposition. There is a certain fitness in the succession of Sir J. Eardley-Wilmot to part of the representation of South Warwickshire, for he is by family and property connected with the county (his father represented it for a long time); and as to his other qualifications, he is an able lawyer, and a man unexceptionable in every relation of life. Westminster, in electing Sir Charles Russell, sends to Parliament a former member for Berkshire, and a distinguished officer of the Army. Wigan sends, with a certain naturalness, Lord Lindsay, a representative of the earldom of Balcarres, perhaps, rather than a representative exact of the town. Windsor had to choose between two gentlemen who based themselves on local claims, and so, having given Mr. Eykyn a turn, they thought fit to give Mr. Richardson-Gardiner one also; while, in putting out Mr. F. S. Powell, who recently won a seat for the northern division of the West Riding of Yorkshire for the Conservatives, Mr. M. Wilson has apparently won a baronetcy from the retiring Liberal Government.

The caprice, or whatever it is, that has characterised the present elections, crept into Scotland, and changes in representation there have been made, to the great detriment of Liberalism in Parliament. Ayrshire South, for instance, has preferred Colonel Alexander, who is territorially connected with the county, and is an officer who has seen service, to Sir David Wedderburn, who is of Mid-Lothian; whereas Dundee, so to speak, has gone into the world at large for a choice, which has fallen on Mr. E. Jenkins, who commenced the career of a social reformer by the publication of "Gin's Baby." Though probably honourably known in Glasgow, Dr. Cameron and Mr. Whitelaw, who have replaced Mr. Dalgliah and Mr. Graham in the representation of that city, are not as yet famous in the south, though perhaps they will be; while to the rest of the United Kingdom unknown, a Mr. Macgregor has arrested the grand Parliamentary career of Mr. Macfie by putting him out for Leith. The Mr. Holms who has been elected for Paisley is a brother of the member for Hackney of that name, and is member for his native place. Sir William Stirling Maxwell, whose varied accomplishments are so well known, has won back Perthshire, of which he had been deprived during the last Parliament; and Renfrewshire has done itself honour in choosing a man so eminent in the world of letters, and several other worlds, as Colonel Mure.

In returning Mr. J. Sharman Crawford the county of Down has put on the roll of Parliament a name which was formerly held in high estimation by all parties—that of William Sharman Crawford, a truly philanthropic legislator, and the most amiable and unassuming of men. Drogheda adds something to the medical section of the new Parliament in Dr. O'Leary; Galway rewards Captain Nolan, an officer of Artillery, for the strong fight he made at the last election for that county; Londonderry county tardily returns a law officer of the late Government, Mr. Law, who has just relinquished the post of Solicitor-General for Ireland, and contributes something of learning and science in the person of Professor Smyth. The late member, Mr. M'Mahon, not having essayed New Ross, that constituency has chosen Mr. Dunbar, who distinguished himself at the Indian Bar; Waterford, variable in its choice, has put into the place of one of its late members, Major O'Gorman, a son of a gentleman once very prominent in Irish Parliamentary, political, and social life as the The O'Gorman Mahon; and Wexford County sends back quaint—almost eccentric—Sir George Bowyer to a scene with which he was long familiar, and has given him for a companion a gentleman who is understood to call himself the Chevalier O'Cleary.

Those who have been mentioned are all more or less novelties in the new Parliament. It remains to be seen how many of them will become celebrities therein.

MUSIC.

The programme of last Saturday's Crystal Palace Concert was rich in interest and variety. It included the whole of the splendid music which Mendelssohn composed for incidental use in the German performance of the "Midsummer Night's Dream." The overture—one of the several remarkable works of the composer's boyhood—was produced at the age of seventeen, for concert use; and nothing is more extraordinary in the history of his career than his felicitous recurrence to the subject of the work in 1843, when he composed the other pieces which are now identified with the Shakespearean drama. There is nothing finer in music than the whole series which follows the overture, the fanciful scherzo, the exquisite fairy vocal music, for solo voices and female chorus; the nocturno, with its tranquil loveliness; the exultant "wedding march;" the rustic music associated with the clowns, especially the mock solemnity of the funeral march played during their mummery; and the beautiful concluding chorus of fairies, based on a motive from the overture; another happy instance of such quotation being found in the dance of clowns. The orchestral playing throughout was superb, and the scherzo and funeral march had to be repeated. The choral music was very effectively rendered by about 200 ladies of the Crystal Palace choir, and the solo passages were well sung by Misses E. Spiller and Dones. Previously to the Shakespearean music, Mendelssohn's fine motet, "Surrexit Pastor Bonus" (one of three composed in 1830 for the nuns of Trinita de Monti, at Rome), was finely performed—the solos by Madame Otto-Alvleben, Misses E. Spiller and Dones, and Madame Patey; the choruses by the ladies of the choir, and the organ accompaniment by Dr. Stainer. In Schubert's melodious choral setting of the 23rd Psalm, "The Lord is my Shepherd" (given for the first time here), the lady choristers again proved their efficiency, another instance of which had been afforded, earlier in the concert, by their singing of the chorus of maidens, "See with flowers blooming," from Beethoven's music to the drama of "King Stephen," the overture to which commenced the programme, which included the contralto solo, "O Thou afflicted," from Sir J. Benedict's "St. Peter," sung by Madame Patey; and the air, "On mighty pens," from Haydn's "Creation," by Madame Otto-Alvleben—the concert having terminated with an overture, entitled "Le Cid," by Mr. Alfred Holmes, performed for the first time. The composer's intention is to realise the impressions derived from Corneille's tragedy; and he has produced a very effective piece of orchestral writing, in which passion and impulse largely prevail. There are many strong climaxes, and the work evidently produced a favourable impression, although coming at the end of a long selection.

This week's Monday Popular Concert was to have brought back Madame Schumann; but, as mentioned last week, not only has the expectation of this event been frustrated, but the intended visit to London of the great pianist is this season altogether abandoned, in consequence of a severe rheumatic attack. The return of Madame Schumann—like that of Herr Joachim—has long been among the most anxiously desired events of our musical year, and the regret at its nonfulfilment by the lady pianist—especially at the cause thereof—is great and widely felt. The pianist at Monday's concert was Mr. Franklin Taylor, who played the same pieces that were set down for Madame Schumann—Beethoven's solo sonata in E flat, from op. 27, and the pianoforte part of the same composer's trio, in the same key, from op. 70. In these performances Mr. Taylor fully sustained the high reputation which he had previously acquired. Herr Joachim, who was the leading violinist, played Tartini's well-known solo, "Il Trillo del Diavolo," and was enthusiastically encored. Schubert's fine quartet in D minor commenced the concert, the executants including, as usual, Messrs. L. Ries and Zerbini and Signor Piatti; and Mr. H. Guy contributed some vocal pieces, accompanied by Sir J. Benedict.

Mr. Henry Leslie's choir made a good commencement of its nineteenth season, on Thursday week, with a selection from Mendelssohn, followed by miscellaneous pieces by English composers. The former part of the programme comprised several part-songs, some given for the first time; the songs, "The Charmer," by Miss E. Wynne, and "The Garland," by Mr. E. Lloyd; and the fine hymn "Hear my Prayer," by Miss Wynne and chorus; besides three of the "Lieder ohne Worte" for the pianoforte, well played by Miss Josephine Laurence. This clever young pianist was again heard, in the second part of the concert, in Sir J. Benedict's effective fantasia on "Where the bee sucks." In this portion of the programme, among various attractive pieces, Mr. Henry Leslie's new part-song, "Lullaby of Life," was one of the most prominent, and had to be repeated. Mr. Leslie conducted, as usual; and Mr. J. G. Calcott and Mr. J. C. Ward filled their accustomed posts respectively as accompanist and organist.

The annual concert of the veteran vocalist, Mr. Ransford, took place, at St. James's Hall, last Tuesday evening, when the programme included a copious selection of English songs and ballads, sung by some of our most eminent artists.

The third concert of the British Orchestral Society took place on Thursday, when the programme included Spohr's symphony, "Die weihe der Töne," the overtures to "Der Freyschutz" and "Fidelio," and a new overture, entitled "Inez de Castro," by Mr. Alfred Holmes; Beethoven's fourth pianoforte concerto (in G), played by Mr. Franklin Taylor, and vocal pieces sung by Miss Rose Hersee.

The "Creation" was given at the Royal Albert Hall on Wednesday evening, conducted by Mr. William Carter; and the same oratorio was announced by the Sacred Harmonic Society for Friday evening, in replacement of Mr. G. A. Macfarren's "St. John the Baptist," the performance of which is postponed to March 20.

M. Gounod's music to "Jeanne d'Aro" (recently noticed by us) was repeated at his second concert, on Saturday last, when it included the highly characteristic "Funeral March of a Marionette," which had been given (detached) at one of M. Gounod's concerts of last season. [This clever piece of musical humour was, as before, encored and repeated. The other portions of the "Jeanne d'Aro" music were again received with great applause. The concert also included the performance of M. Gounod's short mass for the dead (S. S. Angeli Custodes), with the addition of an effective orchestral march.]

Yesterday (Friday) week Mr. Willem Coenen gave the first of his new series of chamber concerts at the Hanover-square Rooms, and his clever pianoforte-playing was heard in Rheinberger's quartet in E flat; another skilful pianist, Herr Adolph Schloesser, having been associated with him in Rubinstein's duet for two pianofortes, op. 73. Brahms's string quartet—played by Messrs. Wiener, Amor, Zerbini, and Daubert—and vocal solos by Misses S. Ferrari and Sterling, completed a programme of much interest.

Mendelssohn's "St. Paul" is to be performed for the first time by the Royal Albert Hall Choral Society on Thursday next, March 5, the principal vocalists announced being Madame Otto-Alvleben, Miss Antoinette Sterling, Mr. Sims Reeves, and Mr. Lewis Thomas, with Dr. Stainer at the organ. The performance will be conducted, as usual, by Mr. Barnby.

A benefit performance has been announced by Signor Monari-Rocca, to take place, at the St. James's Theatre, on Monday, March 2, when Mozart's comic opera, "Così fan tutte," is to be given. This charming work was revived, in January, 1873, by the opera-buffa company (at St. George's Hall), of which Signor Monari-Rocca was a member.

THEATRES.

PRINCESS'S.

The principal theatrical event of the week is the production of a five-act historical drama by Mr. W. G. Wills, entitled "Mary Queen of Scots." The subject has been often dramatised, and recently we had a dramatic poem by Mr. Swinburne on the subject of Chastelard's devotion to his mistress and his unfortunate death, which had high merits. This unhappy amour is also the theme of Mr. Wills's tragedy, but he has treated it in a different manner. There is much poetic dialogue in Mr. Wills's drama, which would undoubtedly have gone well with the audience had the performers permitted it to be heard, or the unquiet state of the house (it being a benefit night) not rendered it impossible; as the case stood, we were compelled to take nearly the whole of the first act for granted. It treated of the happy days of Marie Stuart, when at Fontainebleau she was free to enjoy all the pleasures of the palace and the garden—pleasures among which Chastelard's passion was likely to be of rapid growth. The poor fellow, however, is sentenced and banished; and shortly afterwards Marie takes an affectionate farewell to France, when she is followed by her faithful retainer into Scotland. In the second act we have Marie's disputes with her Protestant subjects, and honest John Knox comes into prominence; but the Queen (Mrs. Rousby) proves equal to the occasion, and the recalcitrant pastor is compelled to surrender. The part is assumed by Mr. Rousby, and is supported by him with all or more than his usual force, but does not yet set easily upon him. As the play proceeds the character becomes more important. The author has not chosen for it a rigid outline—which might have better suited it for stage-playing—but has ascribed to it a passionate disposition which carries Knox through several mental moods, and at length causes him to be tempted by Marie's beauty and snavity. At the end of the fourth act we find him struggling with his feelings, which he delineates in rather too long a soliloquy, but which to the dramatic poet is nevertheless highly creditable. The fifth act shows the fatal culmination of Chastelard's love, and the execution of the infatuated youth. The piece is placed on the boards in the most costly style; and the scenery, which is magnificent, does honour to Mr. F. Fenton and Mr. Emden. We have omitted to state that the part of Chastelard was committed to Mr. Charles Harcourt, and furnished him with opportunities of which he was ambitious to take advantage, but not always with success. Mr. Harcourt yet stands in need of much discipline and more practice, before he can claim to be a complete actor. The residue of the parts was respectably cast, so that the entire action was smoothly performed; and, on the whole, the play is a spectacle that merits popularity.

STRAND.

Mr. Farnie, having succeeded in "Nemesis"—an extravaganza into which he adroitly enough converted a French farce—has now taken in hand "La Cagnotte," and again succeeded in making capital of a foreign product, which, under the name of "El Dorado," emerges in the shape of a very funny piece. In this thoroughly extravagant drama we are first introduced to a party of villagers, headed by the mayor, who are in the habit of depositing their winnings in a money-box (la cagnotte), and once a year devoting the sum to the expenses of a feast or a holiday. They resolve on a visit to Paris, induced thereto by the circular of a matrimonial agent. The adventures of the party at Les Trois Frères, in the Palais Royale, and at the agent's office, form, with a visit to a police station, a sufficient basis for some very droll incidents. The performance is distinguished by some vigorous acting, but there ought to be some limit to the extravagance of the costumes.

HOLBORN.

The company of French players has during the week represented with considerable effect the farce of "Le Voyage de Monsieur Perrichon," which at the St. James's was produced for M. Ravel. It is a pleasing and laughable production, and one of the few French plays in itself suited to a London audience. Mr. Didier is excellent as the conceited Rentier, who assumes the part of a hero; the other parts, also, are adequately filled.

POLYTECHNIC.

The attractions of this hall continue, and "Raleigh's Queer Dream," written by Dr. Croft, still succeeds in interesting the spectators. The lecture on Light and Colour and the Silber Light is excellent, and is done full justice to by Professor Gardner. The views of Railway Travelling are eminently instructive and satisfactory, and of themselves will repay more than one visit.

The Mayor of Leeds (Alderman Marsden) has signified his intention of entertaining 1000 old men and women to a "knife and fork tea," to be followed by a promenade concert, on the return of the Duke of Edinburgh from his wedding tour.

A lecture on the subject of food adulterations and their detection by means of the microscope was recently delivered by Mr. J. Bell before the Chemical Society. Many gentlemen holding analytical appointments under the Adulteration Act were present.

Trials are being made as to the nature of the channel-bed between Hampshire and the Isle of Wight, at the narrowest part of the Solent. If, as is supposed, the stiff clay which is found on both coasts extends the entire distance, a tunnel will probably be made from the mainland to Cowes, or a point somewhat removed to the westward from that favourite resort.

The offer made to the Norfolk Agricultural Association, last year, by the Earl of Leicester, of £200 for the best essay on the improvements in agriculture which have been made in the eastern district of England during the last twenty years, has been accepted. The essays are to be sent in to the secretary by March 1, 1875, subject to the conditions of the society.

The Board of Trade inquiry into the loss of the Palladium concluded yesterday week, when a decision was given to this effect:—The Palladium on leaving Sunderland was not only too heavily laden, but was unseaworthy, arising from the unsound condition of the hull. The Court exonerated the owner, who had no knowledge of the vessel's unseaworthiness either as regards the condition of the hull or overloading. Knowing comparatively nothing of vessels himself, he had instructed his captain from time to time to see that the ship was kept in proper repair. This he failed to do, hence the inquiry. The captain was convicted of drunkenness, and his certificate is suspended for twelve months.

THE LATE REV. THOMAS BINNEY.

THE LATE REV. DR. BINNEY.

This eminent Dissenting minister, after an illness of several weeks, died on Tuesday, in the seventy-sixth year of his age. He had been a preacher and pastor of the Independent or Congregationalist religious denomination about fifty years. During the greater part of this time he officiated at the Weigh House Chapel, or meeting-house, in Monument-yard. He was a native of Newcastle-on-Tyne, and was first apprenticed to a bookseller, but was afterwards educated for the ministry at a theological college at Wymondley, in Hertfordshire. His first ministerial employment was at Newport, in the Isle of Wight, which he left in 1829. The chapel in London was built for him in 1834, upon the site of a hall in which he had preached during five years before. It was a hall over the ancient "Weigh House" or "Staple," which was the place used in former times for the official weighing of foreign merchandise brought to London. Dr. Binney was one of the most earnest and impressive English pulpit speakers of his day, resembling in some degree the late Dr. Guthrie, of Edinburgh. His liberality of feeling and frankness of demeanour gained him the esteem of members of the Established Church, and of the Protestant Dissenting communities. Indeed, he latterly declared that he had "no great objection either to moderate episcopacy or to liturgical forms;" and a variation of the latter was introduced into his own Sunday services. He visited the United States and Canada in 1845, and in 1847 went to Australia, where he remained two years. On his return to England he again took charge of the Weigh House "church and congregation." But, when the demolition of the building was proposed for the East London Railway, Dr. Binney retired, in January, 1871, from the post he had so long occupied. Two years ago he was appointed one of the professors of the Independent Theological College on the north side of Regent's Park; he also presided over the council of that college. The degree of LL.D. was conferred upon him by the University of Aberdeen, and that of D.D. by an American University.

ASCENSION ISLAND.

This small island, which lies about eight degrees south of the Equator, in the South Atlantic, nearly 1500 miles from the African coast, and as far from that of Brazil, may be used for the reception and cure of invalids from Sir Garnet Wolseley's force in the Ashantee campaign. It is a British military station, founded in 1815, when Napoleon was confined at St. Helena, which island is about 700 miles to the south-east of Ascension. The island is but seven miles long and six wide; it is of volcanic formation, with conical hills of tufaceous gritty limestone, the highest rising to 2800 feet, and with much pum'oe-stone and lava. The scenery is bare and rugged, except on the Green Mountain, at the eastern end, where the land, at a certain height above the sea, is fertile and well cultivated. The climate is temperate and healthy. There is a deficiency of fresh water, but the small garrison and the hospitals exist in tolerable comfort. Two views of the hospitals at Ascension are shown in our Illustrations.

THE RUINS OF THE PANTECHNICON.

The destruction of this large building, and of a vast amount of costly property, household furniture, pictures, and plate, deposited there for safe keeping, is still a topic of regretful interest a fortnight after the fire. The proprietors, Messrs. Smith and Radermacher, who were insured for £20,000 only, have during the last week kept fifty men of the Salvage Corps at work clearing the ruins. It is estimated that this will occupy at least two months, the ruins upon an average being 10 ft. deep over the whole space of two acres. A plan of the building, as it was, has been furnished to the Salvage Corps, marking out each of the various warehouses; and, for purposes of clearer identification, the ruins of each will be carted away separately. Every part of the ruins will be sifted thoroughly, so that nothing valuable will, in all probability, be overlooked. Up to this time the ruins at the chief entrance in Motcomb-street have been removed, and such valuables as were discovered have been deposited in a place of safety, with a view to subsequent identification by the owners. In a day or two, when the carriage inclines are sufficiently cleared, it will be possible to load vans in the very midst of the ruins. There is reason to believe, from the search now commenced, that the rough estimate made at first of the probable extent and value of the salvage will prove to be considerably in excess of the actual result; and it is doubtful whether the goods recovered will compensate for the cost of recovery. The proprietors, since the fire, have received many offers from speculative persons for the possession of the ruins as they stand, but every such proposal has been declined. When the Motcomb-street frontage has been sufficiently cleared, the names of 115 depositors who were known to have goods in that part will be advertised, so that they may attend and recognise such few articles belonging to them as have been recovered. The list will include the owners of property in the F warehouse and of those in parts of the A, B, and S warehouses. Among the losers is Major-General Sir Garnet Wolseley. When he left England for the Gold Coast, last autumn, he removed to the Pantechnicon, from his house at Richmond, much valuable property, including many interesting souvenirs of his campaigns in the Crimea, India, China, and North America. It is believed that none of this has been saved from the fire.

MANCHESTER EXHIBITION OF INDUSTRY.

The Exhibition of Scientific Industry, which was lately opened by the Earl of Derby, consisting of an instructive collection of models and specimens of various manufactures, is contained in a range of timber sheds, erected for this occasion, in Peel Park, Salford. We give an illustration of the outward aspect of this temporary structure. Most of our readers are probably aware that the borough of Salford is situated, with relation to the city of Manchester, precisely in the same way as Southwark to London, being on the opposite side of the river Irwell, while several bridges connect the streets of these towns with each other. Salford extends higher up the river, to the suburb of Pendleton, where its stream is less defiled by the refuse of a factory town; and the banks of the Irwell at Peel Park are not unpleasant. A large house near the entrance in Peel Park has been occupied, during the last twenty-three years, by the Salford Museum and Free Library, maintained by the municipal corporation of this borough. It is resorted to, on the average, by 1600 persons daily. Manchester also possesses a free library and three or four public parks.

ELY CHAPEL, HOLBORN.

This old place of worship, now doomed to removal, is what represented in our day the ancient mansion of the Bishops of Ely. We remember that almsgiver of Shakespeare's wicked Richard, Duke of Gloucester:—

My Lord of Ely, when I was last in Holborn,
I saw good strawberries in your garden there;
I do beseech you, send for some of them.

Another story, which more properly concerns Ely Chapel, is related by Cowper. It is said that in 1745, on a Sunday morning, when the news came to London of the defeat of the Young Pretender, by William, Duke of Cumberland, at Culloden, this ludicrous perversion of the ordinary Church service did actually take place:—

So, in the chapel of old Ely House,
When wandering Charles, who meant to be the Third,
Had fled from William, and the news was fresh,
The simple clerk, but loyal, did announce,
And eke did read right merrily, a psalm
Sung "to the praise and glory of King George!"

There are many graver and more dignified historic memories connected with Ely Chapel, which has in its time been an influential place of religious advocacy and exhortation for the inhabitants of London.

GEOGRAPHY AND TRAVEL.

The publishing season of this winter has been rich in new books of travel, some of which, relating to the less known parts of Asia and America, were noticed by us upon a former occasion. Arctic exploration is a subject that is sure to come up now and then for discussion, and for the advocacy of fresh researches, upon account of its scientific interest, though its practical importance to commercial navigation was long ago disproved. Mr. Clements Markham, secretary to the Royal Geographical Society, has reprinted from Ocean Highways a few instructive chapters on the history of North Polar discovery in the last three centuries. He calls it The Threshold of the Unknown Region (the publishers are Messrs. Sampson Low, Marston, and Searle). A certain portion of his volume is devoted to the accounts of exploring voyages north of Europe—that is, in the Spitzbergen seas, where Mr. Leigh Smith, in the steamer Diana, made a third voyage last year at his own private expense. The anxiety that was felt about the Swedish expedition, when it was compelled to remain at Spitzbergen through the winter of 1872, has also directed public attention that way. But the late Rev. Dr. Scoresby, of Exeter, when he was captain of a whaling-ship, did good service in opening the Spitzbergen seas nearly seventy years ago. It is to be remembered, indeed, that William Barents and Henry Hudson had explored many of the northern coasts and islands of this hemisphere two hundred years before. The map of the European Polar Sea, drawn by Mr. Ravenstein, which Mr. Clements Markham has inserted in this volume, is rightly made to include Greenland, as the east coast of that large island is situated in longitudes adjacent to those of Iceland, which we are accustomed to regard as an insular dependency of Europe. In the Arctic Sea, north of Iceland and Spitzbergen, between 20 deg. W. longitude and 20 deg. E., we find one wide gate to the Polar region. There are two narrow gates, which are these—the one by Davis Strait and Baffin's Bay, with Smith Sound, west of Greenland; and the other by way of Behring Strait. The merit of what has been done by the first-mentioned route, in the North American portion of the Arctic Circle, was mainly—almost entirely—due to English sailors, from the time of John Davis and William Baffin, who were contemporaries of Shakespeare and Bacon, to that of Ross and Parry, Franklin, Belcher, McClure, and McClintock, in our own age. But during the last twenty years our kinsmen of the United States have also done a great deal. Dr. Kane from 1853 to 1855, Dr. Hayes in 1860, and Captain Hall in 1871, have fully earned their share of this renown. The exploration of the north coasts of Asia, from Behring Strait to Novaya Zemlya, has been performed by the Russians, Admiral von Wrangel, and others, in a manner not less to their credit. Even Austria, with praiseworthy zeal for the advancement of knowledge, has recently sent an expedition—that of the Tegetthoff—to the same part of the globe. Mr. Clements Markham is desirous that we should not henceforth lag behind other nations in the race to serve the world this way. He urges the British Government to start another expedition up Smith Sound and Kennedy Channel, with sledge parties on the coasts both east and west of that narrow inlet, which are named Grinnell Land and Washington Land, between the longitudes 66 deg. W. and 70 deg. W. We think a few thousand pounds of the public money would be very well spent in such an undertaking. It would help to solve important practical questions concerning the ocean currents, magnetism and atmospheric electricity, and the causes affecting our own climate, besides adding much that is interesting to geology and various branches of natural history. Mr. Lowe, the late Chancellor of the Exchequer, and Mr. Goschen, the late First Lord of the Admiralty, refused last year to do anything of this kind. It will now be seen if their successors will entertain the proposal.

The next book upon this subject we have to notice is that of Captain J. C. Wells, R.N., entitled The Gateway to the Polynia (H. S. King and Co.). Our readers should be told that "Polynia" is a Russian word, derived from polyi, open, meaning a pool or lane of water opened in the ice. In Dr. Kane's expedition to Smith Sound in 1853 an expanse of open water was seen, between 80 deg. and 81 deg. N. latitude, with great flocks of sea-fowl and seals, which led some persons to believe that the climate of a more northerly region would be found comparatively mild, perhaps fit for human habitation. The author of this volume is disposed to think, for several reasons, that the North Pole is likely to be, for the most part, surrounded by water, forming the "Polynia," to which his title refers. He contends that the wide sea north of Spitzbergen, not the narrow channel entered from Smith Sound west of Greenland, is the true gateway to the unknown Polar region. With this object in view, he has collected a certain amount of geographical and historical facts, which are interwoven with his narrative of a summer voyage to Spitzbergen in a friend's private yacht. A book of still greater interest and value is that of Captain Albert Hastings Markham, R.N., A Whaling Cruise to Baffin's Bay and the Gulf of Boothia (Sampson Low and Co.). It will be remembered that Captain Markham arrived at Dundee, in a whaler called the Arctic, while the British Association of Science was holding its Congress last year; and he brought the account of what had become of part of the crew of the Polaris, the American exploring steamer which had entered Smith Sound in August, 1871, under Captain C. F. Hall. It appears that Captain Hall died in November, 1871. Nineteen men, women, and children, in October, 1872, having got upon an ice-field which drifted away from the side of their ship, were suddenly carried off, and floated down Baffin's Bay, but were afterwards saved by a sealing vessel on the coast of Labrador. The remaining fourteen persons on board the Polaris, in June, 1873, abandoned that vessel and took to their boats. They were picked up, after two or three weeks, by a vessel named the Ravenscraig, which transferred them, on July 7, to the Dundee whaling-steamers Arctic, commanded by Captain William Adams. It happened that Captain Markham, a naval officer already of some distinction, was on board the Arctic as a passenger—in fact, as an amateur, wishing to acquaint himself with the peculiar navigation of the icy seas, and with the pursuits of the whaler. He was obliged to be rated nominally as one of the crew, but he was allowed plenty of leisure to look about him and make his observations. The result of these opportunities is a very entertaining narrative of maritime adventure. It will serve also to illustrate, as Captain Sherard Osborn remarks in an introductory chapter, the facility and certainty with which a powerful steamer, properly constructed and equipped, can force its way through the obstacles and dangers of closely-packed ice, quickly passing beyond the farthest points that were reached with extreme difficulty some thirty or forty years ago. Captain Markham's cruise of three summer months was very enjoyable for so good a sailor, sportsman, and observer both of nature and of mankind; and his professional and geographical knowledge help to make this an instructive book. He did not, indeed, get into very high latitudes, but passed westward from Baffin's Bay into Lancaster Sound and Prince Regent's Inlet, to the entrance of the Gulf of Boothia. He there visited Port Leopold, and saw the relics of some of our notable explorers who were on that coast twenty-five years ago. It would not surprise us to see Captain Markham emulate or surpass their achievements in a future expedition to the North Pole.

An American writer, Mr. Samuel Hazard, whose book on San Domingo was noticed by us not long ago, has produced another volume of a similar description, Cuba, with Pen and Pencil (Sampson Low and Co.). "The Pearl of the Antilles," as this island is proverbially called, has lately been made the subject of clever and graphic reports by Mr. Antonio Gallenga and others; but Mr. Hazard's volume, with its abundance of picturesque details and personal anecdotes, is likely to find acceptance here, as well as in the United States. Its style, indeed, is rather disfigured by the affectation of familiar gaiety, which is the besetting literary vice of "special" newspaper correspondents in our day. But we find it, nevertheless, readable enough for the most part. It is helped by the profuse introduction of small woodcuts, scattered over the 544 pages of compact print. More than half the volume is occupied by a minute account of the pleasant city of Havana, which is very thoroughly "done." Matanzas, Cardenas, Santiago, and other provincial towns, are described in their turn. The cultivation and manufacture of tobacco and sugar, those rich staple commodities of the island, and the coffee plantations, with their system of management, have due place in Mr. Hazard's notebook. Something, of course, is also here said of the Spanish Government, the disaffection of the Creoles, and the rebellion which still continues to rage in Cuba. But the author does not seem to have visited the island for the purpose of getting up a case for its annexation to the great Federal Republic, though he might have been disposed so to deal with St. Domingo. In answer to the question, "What sort of a place would Cuba be if she did belong to the United States?" he has only to reply that "Cuba, with a free Government, plenty of ice, and a large immigration, would become a wonderful garden."

The serial publication of a magnificent illustrated work of American topography, edited by Mr. W. Cullen Bryant, is now approaching its conclusion. The sole agent for its sale in this country is Mr. D. Cogswell, Little Britain, for Messrs. D. Appleton and Co., of New York. We have inspected some half-monthly parts of Picturesque America, and we greatly admire the designs and execution of its engravings, both those on steel and those on wood. They represent some of the grandest scenery of the Western Continent—its mountains, forests, lakes, rivers, and cataracts, as well as the towns and cities, both of Canada and the United States. The editor's name is a guarantee of merit in the literary department.

An important discovery has been made in the county of Kilkenny. An English company purchased property from Mr. Bryan, M.P., and at once began sinking a shaft. A splendid bed of the best Jarro coal, upwards of five feet in thickness, has been reached, and, it is said, promises an almost exhaustless supply.

Mr. J. R. Hind, the astronomer, has received from Professor Winnecke, director of the observatory at Strasburg, the following position of a comet discovered by him in the constellation Vulpecula on the morning of Saturday last:—Feb. 20, at 17h. 16m. 40s. mean time—Right ascension, 20h. 35m. 34.2s.; north declination, 26 deg. 0 min. 46 sec. The diurnal motion in right ascension is 9 min. increasing, and in declination 1 deg. 30 min. towards the south.

The Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, accompanied by Countess Spencer, presided, yesterday week, at the distribution of prizes to the pupils of the schools of art in connection with the Royal Dublin Society. There was a large and fashionable attendance, and the Count and Countess were received with enthusiastic applause. The prizes having been distributed by the Lord Lieutenant, Sir G. Hodgson, Bart., presented the thanks of the society to the Viceroy for his unvaried interest in the welfare of the society during his five years of Viceroyalty, and in highly complimentary terms spoke of the warm feelings entertained towards Lord Spencer and his amiable Countess by the whole Irish people. His Excellency said, in reply, in making his farewell address to the people of Ireland through that society, he expressed the conviction that the measures adopted towards Ireland during his administration would tend to the welfare and prosperity of the country, and that, although taking a farewell in person, his thoughts and feelings would be always amongst them, and he should ever desire to do what he could for the prosperity and welfare of the people.—His Excellency and Lady Spencer held an undress farewell levée in Dublin on Tuesday afternoon. After the reception Lord Spencer received a deputation on the part of the members, subscribers, and landholders of the Ward Hunt and the district with which it is connected, who presented him with a handsome silver shield, together with an illuminated address. His Excellency accepted the gift, and stated his intention to present to the committee of the Hunt a cup to be raced for at the next race meeting. The Corporation of Dublin, at a special meeting on Tuesday, adopted a valedictory address, which was presented on Wednesday.

OBITUARY OF EMINENT PERSONS.

THE HON. AND REV. SIR F. J. STAPLETON, BART.

The Hon. and Rev. Sir Francis Jarvis Stapleton, M.A., seventh Baronet, died, on the 11th inst., at Mereworth, near Maidstone. He was born Aug. 6, 1807, the fourth son of Sir Thomas Stapleton, sixth Baronet, in whose favour the abeyance of the barony of Le Despencer (created by writ in 1264) was terminated in 1788; and he succeeded to the baronetcy at the death of his father, Oct. 3, 1831, his three elder brothers having left no male issue. Educated at Trinity College, Cambridge, he entered into holy orders, and was appointed Rector of Mereworth in 1827, and Vicar of Tudeley in 1832. He married, May 17, 1830, Margaret, daughter of Lieutenant-General Sir George Airey, K.C.H., and leaves four sons and three daughters. His eldest son and successor, now Sir Francis George Stapleton, eighth Baronet, formerly Captain in the Grenadier Guards, was born March 19, 1831. The title was originally conferred, in 1679, on Sir William Stapleton, Kt., Captain-General and Governor-in-Chief of the Leeward Island.

SIR T. W. HOLBURNE, BART.

Sir Thomas William Holburne, fifth Baronet, of Menstrie, in the county of Edinburgh, Commander R.N., died at his residence, Cavendish Crescent, Bath, on the 17th inst., aged eighty-one. He was the second son of Sir Francis Holburne, fourth Baronet, by Alicia, his wife, daughter of Thomas Brayne, Esq., and was grandson of Admiral Francis Holburne, M.P., Governor of Greenwich Hospital, second son of Sir James Holburne, the first Baronet. Entering the Royal Navy in 1805, the deceased Baronet took part in the victory of Trafalgar, the siege of Toulon, and the embarkation of the British army after the battle of Corunna. He resided for many years at Bath, and formed a very fine collection of antique plate and other articles of vertu. He succeeded to the title at the decease of his father, Sept. 13, 1820, and, as he has died unmarried, the baronetcy appears have to become extinct.

SIR GEORGE CAMPBELL, BART.

Sir George Campbell, fourth Baronet, of Succoth, in the county of Dumfries, J.P. and D.L., late Captain in the 1st Dragoons, died at Malta on the 17th inst. He was born April 27, 1829, the second son of the late John Campbell, Esq., M.P. for Dumfriesshire, by Anna Jane, his wife, daughter of Francis Sitwell, Esq., of Barmoor, Northumberland, and was grandson of Sir Archibald Campbell, Bart., a Scotch Judge, Lord Succoth, whose father, Sir Islay Campbell, Lord President of the Court of Session in Scotland, had a baronetcy conferred on him when he retired from his high office, Sept. 17, 1808. The Baronet the subject of this notice succeeded to the title at the death of his elder brother, Sir Archibald Islay Campbell, third Baronet, in 1866. He was educated at Eton, and at Glasgow College, and entered the Army at an early age. He married, June 8, 1858, Margaret, daughter of Sir E. Borough, Bart., but had no issue.

LADY BINGHAM.

Emma Septima, Lady Bingham, died at her residence, Heathfield Lodge, near Ringwood, on the 3rd inst., in her eighty-third year. She was the seventh and youngest daughter, and eventually coheiress, of Edmund Morton Pleydell, Esq., of Whatcombe House, and Milborne St. Andrews, Dorset, the representative of the three ancient families of Clavell, Morton, and Pleydell. In the year 1814 she married Sir George Ridout Bingham, K.C.B., who had commanded the second battalion of the 53rd Regiment at Talavera, Salamanca, Vittoria, the Pyrenees, and Nivelle, and who proceeded, as Brigadier-General in command of the troops, to St. Helena with Napoleon Bonaparte in 1815. Her Ladyship spent the earlier years of her married life there, and, as well as her husband, was always regarded with a certain amount of kindness by the ex-Emperor. She afterwards accompanied Sir George to Ireland, where he was in command of the southern district for seven troublous years, from 1825 to 1832. He died in 1833, so that her widowhood was a long one, and spent in comparative retirement, though in devotedness to good works.

LIEUTENANT-GENERAL SIR S. COTTON.

Lieutenant-General Sir Sydney John Cotton, G.C.B., Governor of Chelsea Hospital, late Colonel of the 10th Foot, died at the Royal Hospital on the 20th inst. He was born Dec. 2, 1792, the second son of Henry Calveley Cotton, Esq., by Matilda, his wife, daughter of John Lockwood, Esq., of Ashted, Surrey, and was consequently nephew of Sir Robert Salusbury Cotton, Bart., M.P., father of the first Viscount Combermere. He entered the Army in 1810, and attained the grade of Lieutenant-General in 1866. He served with the local rank of Major-General in India, and was given the command of the 10th Foot for his conduct during the mutiny. From 1857 to 1863 he was in command of a division of the Bengal army, and, in 1865, was nominated to the command of the northern district of England. His appointment as Governor of Chelsea Hospital dates from May, 1872. He married, in 1820, Marianne, daughter of Captain Hackett, 22nd Dragoons, and leaves issue. Lieutenant-General Sir Arthur Thomas Cotton, K.C.S.I., is a younger brother of Sir Sydney.

MR. SENHOUSE.

Joseph Pocklington Senhouse, Esq., of Netherhall, and Barrow House, Cumberland, J.P. and D.L., High Sheriff in 1846, died on the 17th inst. He was born Nov. 21, 1804, the second son of Roger Pocklington, Esq., of Carlton House, Notts, by Jane, his wife, daughter of Sir James Campbell, of Inverneil, in the county of Argyle, and he assumed, in 1842, the surname and arms of Senhouse, having married, Oct. 13, 1835, Elizabeth, eldest daughter and coheiress of the late Humphrey Senhouse, Esq., of Netherhall, the male representative of the very ancient Cumberland family of Senhouse of Ellenborough, otherwise Netherhall. Chief Justice Law was descended in the female line from the Senhouses, and adopted, by the permission of the head of the house, the title of "Ellenborough" from the ancient name of their Cumberland seat.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON, SATURDAY, MARCH 7, 1874.

The monster trial in the Court of Queen's Bench is at an end. By the verdict of the jury, after an inquiry ranging over a hundred and eighty-eight days, the Claimant has been declared to be guilty of perjury on all the counts of the indictment preferred against him. He is not Sir Roger Tichborne, but Arthur Orton, and his attempt to destroy the reputation of Lady Radcliffe, Sir Roger's cousin, is characterised as an unfounded and malicious calumny. The Claimant is now in Newgate Gaol, under a sentence of penal servitude for fourteen years. He has passed into the obscurity from which he ought never to have emerged.

The case, indeed, has been a most remarkable one; yet one that, when all circumstances have been taken into consideration, need hardly excite our "special wonder." Never, before, perhaps, did a baronetcy, with an estate of from thirty to fifty thousand a year, go a-begging. It might be confidently predicted that it could not do so, more especially in colonial society, without producing a claimant. Such a prize held dangling for some time before all classes of men, including the most depraved, could not fail of tempting some one or other, whose character and circumstances would urge him to snatch at it. He might be the most unlikely of men, and yet his very audacity might prove to be the fittest complement to the folly which had offered that prize to the world. Given the original conditions of the case, and its subsequent course can hardly be described as unnatural. Where one wishes to be duped in a matter involving large issues, it is pretty certain that some one will turn up ready to play into the hands of the expectant. Lady Tichborne's presentiments, advertisements, and correspondence with inquiry-offices and with attorneys eager for profitable business, laid the foundation for that stupendous imposture which for some years past has attracted so large a measure of public attention. They constituted a climate and an atmosphere specially adapted to the production of the most unprincipled roguery. Their effect was like "calling spirits from the vasty deep," and calling them with an authority they were not likely to gainsay. Arthur Orton heard the summons from afar. He had nothing to lose, not even character. He had everything to gain if he could only succeed in satisfying the yearnings of a fond and foolish lady. He staked his fortunes upon the issue, and, after eight years' effort, has lost the prize to which he impudently laid claim.

The man must have had something in him to have kept the ball rolling for so long a time. But it is by no means an uncommon subject of remark that crime very frequently engages talents which, in any other walk of life, might have achieved triumphant success. In the present instance one is able to trace nearly every step of the path which the Claimant took towards the object upon which he had set his heart. There is but little genius at its commencement, but imperturbable effrontery mingled with cunning. He learnt his lessons by slow degrees and with much assiduity. But, perhaps, one great secret of the perplexity which beset his claims in the minds of no inconsiderable number of disinterested onlookers was the utter insensibility of the man in the presence of his own mistakes. His early blundering was egregious, but he blundered on unabashed. Fortune favoured him in many respects. The prize at which he aimed was rich enough to tempt some with whom he came in contact to share his chances. A question of personal identity is seldom easy of decision. And so it came to pass that from year to year, by unfaltering persistence in his own assertions, by unshrinking audacity of word and demeanour, and by a skilful use of all the chances which lay in his way, it required the longest trial on record to produce conviction upon an intelligent jury that he was none other than a vulgar impostor.

Did the case absolutely require the terrible sacrifice of time and patience which has been given to it in order to its settlement? We would speak diffidently of the system of practice adopted in our law courts; but we must confess to our misgivings as to the reasonable perfection of that system. If it be true, as the preponderance of evidence appeared to establish, that young Roger Tichborne was tattooed before he left this country, one is at a loss to perceive why the inquiry with regard to the Claimant was not restricted to that single point. It is sufficiently decisive of personal identity. It might have been determined without any reference to collateral proof. It would probably have satisfied the demands of every intelligent Englishman. Possibly, if the social and pecuniary stake had not been so large it would have been urged and submitted to as an indisputable criterion. It certainly would hardly have required two trials of unprecedented duration to have satisfactorily disposed of the identity of Sir Roger Tichborne. King Solomon, we fancy, would have made comparatively short work of the investigation. But then the process would not have secured a distribution amongst lawyers and witnesses of half the Tichborne estate. It would not have required roving commissions to South America and the Antipodes in search of evidence. It would not have demanded the unravelling of the fabric of two lives. It would not have exposed the case to those chances of an abortive conclusion which might have arisen from the death of any one of the jurors. No doubt, we have had a most exhaustive and a deeply interesting picture gallery of incidents, scenes, and circumstances connected with the history of two men each of whom happens to have passed through a somewhat remarkable career. But the country will have to pay a large sum for its amusement, and it is questionable whether the instruction it will derive from the proceedings of the courts of law will be rightly regarded as a fair equivalent for the expenditure incurred.

In some of its aspects the Tichborne trial will have excited proud emotions in the minds of most Englishmen. The skill, the learning, the common-sense, the eloquence, the patience, the impartiality, exhibited and illustrated during its protracted continuance, give one the highest idea of the personnel of administration in our law courts. Some passages at arms occurred which most of us will regret. Some freedom of advocacy was resorted to which the sober-minded may characterise as license. But, all things considered—the curious nature of the case itself, the immense number of witnesses examined, the prolixity of the trial, and the satisfactory issue to which it was conducted—this legal investigation has brought out in the strongest light the intellectual power which is engaged in the administration of law in this country. Slow it may be, but it is also sure. The machinery is somewhat cumbrous, but it does its work efficiently at last. It is not very direct in its processes, but it comes round finally to a point that satisfies the judgment of the public. We congratulate the Judges, the jury, the officers of the court, and the people of the United Kingdom upon the termination of this monster trial. We may add an expression of our hope that the like of it will never be witnessed again.

THE COURT.

The Queen received at luncheon at Buckingham Palace, on Thursday week, Prince and Princess Christian of Schleswig-Holstein, with their children, Prince Christian Victor, Prince Albert and Princess Victoria, and Prince Arthur. Princess Christian, with her children, returned in the afternoon to Cumberland Lodge, Windsor Park. Her Majesty's dinner party included Princess Louise (Marchioness of Lorne) and the Marquis of Lorne, Princess Beatrice, Prince Arthur, Lady Churchill, and the Dean of Westminster and Lady Augusta Stanley. On the following day the Queen, accompanied by Princess Beatrice, visited the Royal Academy of Arts, Burlington House, and inspected the Landseer collection of paintings. Princess Beatrice afterwards visited the Doré Gallery and the South Kensington Museum. Princess Louise (Marchioness of Lorne) partook of luncheon with her Majesty. Prince Arthur left the Palace for Aldershot. The Duchess of Sutherland visited the Queen and took leave of her Majesty on her resignation of her office as Mistress of the Robes. The Queen, accompanied by Princess Beatrice, left the palace at half-past four o'clock, escorted by a detachment of the 1st Life Guards, to Paddington, whence her Majesty travelled by a special train upon the Great Western Railway to Windsor, arriving at the castle at half-past five. On Saturday last Prince and Princess Christian, Lady Susan Melville, and Lieutenant-General Sir T. M. and the Hon. Lady Biddulph dined with her Majesty. On Sunday the Queen and Princess Beatrice attended Divine service in the private chapel of the castle. The Rev. Dr. Monsell officiated. On Monday Prince Arthur arrived at the castle. The Queen held a Council, at which were present Prince Arthur, the Duke of Abercorn, the Right Hon. Benjamin Disraeli, and the Right Hon. R. A. Cross. The Duke of Abercorn kissed hands on his appointment as Lord Lieutenant of Ireland. The Premier and the Right Hon. R. A. Cross had audiences of her Majesty. Previously to the Council the retiring officers of State and other officers of her Majesty's household were introduced to the Queen's presence, and took leave and delivered up to her Majesty their wands and insignia of office, and the newly-appointed officers of State and of her Majesty's household received from the Queen their wands and insignia of office, and kissed hands on appointment. At the Council the Marquis of Hertford, Earl Percy, Earl Beauchamp, Lord Henry Somerset, Viscount Barrington, Viscount Sandon, Lord Skelmersdale, Sir Michael Hicks Beach, Sir John Hay, and Mr. Selator-Booth were introduced and sworn in members of the Privy Council. After the Council the Right Hon. Colonel T. E. Taylor, M.P., received from her Majesty the Seals of Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, and kissed hands on his appointment. The Queen conferred the honour of knighthood upon Mr. James Watson, Provost of Glasgow. Prince Arthur afterwards left the castle. Prince Albert Victor, Prince George, Princess Louise, Princess Victoria, and Princess Maud of Wales arrived at the castle on a visit to her Majesty. The Queen, accompanied by the members of the Royal family, has walked and driven out daily. The Hon. Mortimer Sackville West has succeeded Lord Frederick Kerr as Groom in Waiting; and Lord Charles Fitzroy and Colonel H. Lynedoch-Gardiner have succeeded Colonel Du Plat and Major-General H. Ponsonby as Equerries in Waiting to her Majesty.

The following are the new members appointed by the Queen to the Royal household:—The Duchess of Wellington, Mistress of the Robes; Earl Beauchamp, Lord Steward; the Marquis of Hertford, Lord Chamberlain; the Earl of Bradford, Master of the Horse; Earl Percy, Treasurer; Lord Henry Somerset, Comptroller of the Household; Viscount Barrington, Vice-Chamberlain; the Marquis of Exeter, Captain of the Corps of Gentlemen-at-Arms; Lord Skelmersdale, Captain of the Corps of the Yeomen of the Guard; the Earl of Hardwicke, Master of the Buckhounds; the Earl of Dunmore, the Earl of Roden, Viscount Hawarden, Lord Bagot, Lord De Ros, Lord Elphinstone, and Lord Walsingham Lords in Waiting in Ordinary to her Majesty; and Lieutenant-Colonel Horatio Page Vance, late 38th Regiment, to be one of her Majesty's Honourable Corps of Gentlemen-at-Arms.

The Queen will hold a Court at Buckingham Palace on Friday next.

Her Majesty will hold a Drawingroom on Wednesday, the 25th inst., which is a Collar Day.

The Prince of Wales will hold a Levée at St. James's Palace on Wednesday next, on behalf of her Majesty.

The Czar of Russia will shortly arrive on a visit to the Queen. The Emperor will embark for England from Fleischingen, to which port the Imperial yacht Livadia has been ordered round from the Crimea, as his Majesty's Baltic yacht will still be ice-bound at the time fixed for the departure.

THE PRINCE AND PRINCESS OF WALES.

The Prince and Princess of Wales arrived at Berlin early on Sunday morning. Their Royal Highnesses were received at the railway station by the Imperial Crown Prince and Crown Princess of Germany and by the British Ambassador, by whom they were conducted to the palace of the Crown Prince. A Court dinner was given in the White Hall of the Royal palace in honour of the Prince and Princess. Covers were laid for 180. The Emperor, in consequence of delicate health, was not present. Empress Augusta had the Prince of Wales on her right and the Princess of Wales on her left, and next in order sat all the members of the Royal family, the Prince of Wurtemberg, the Grand Duke Nicholas of Russia, and the Princes of Oldenburg, Hohenzollern, and Saxe-Meiningen. Prince Bismarck and the foreign Ambassadors sat opposite to the Prince and Princess. Towards the close of the dinner the Empress rose and said, "I drink to the welfare of the Prince and Princess of Wales." The band thereupon played the English National Anthem, the company remaining standing and cheering. On Monday the Prince and Princess were present at the reception of the Duke and Duchess of Edinburgh at Berlin. In the evening their Royal Highnesses were present at a ballet at the Opera House. The Emperor and Empress, the Crown Prince and Crown Princess, and Prince and Princess Charles, and Princess Frederick Charles, with her daughter, were also present. Later the Prince and Princess left Berlin for Darmstadt, where their Royal Highnesses passed a short time with Princess Louis of Hesse, and afterwards continued their journey to England, arriving on Thursday morning at Dover, whence the Prince and Princess travelled by the South-Eastern Railway to London.

THE DUKE AND DUCHESS OF EDINBURGH.

The Duke and Duchess of Edinburgh took leave of the Empress of Russia on Saturday last, and left St. Petersburg at 8 p.m., by special train, en route for England. All the Grand Dukes were present at the railway station, and the Czar accompanied their Imperial and Royal Highnesses as far as Gatchina. Adjutant-General Count von der Goltz and Count von Lehn-dorf, who have been ordered for special service in the suite of the Duke and Duchess of Edinburgh, were received in audience by the Emperor, and left to meet their Imperial and Royal Highnesses on the Russian frontier, at Wirballen, where the Duke and Duchess arrived at half-past nine on Sunday evening, and thence continued their journey to Berlin, arriving at the Eastern Railway station at eleven o'clock on Monday morning.

The Imperial bride and Royal bridegroom were received by the Imperial Crown Prince and Crown Princess of Germany, the Prince and Princess of Wales, all the Princes of the Royal House, the two Princes of Wurtemberg, the Hereditary Prince of Saxe-Meiningen, and the members of the British and Russian Embassies. A company of the Alexander Regiment of the Guards was drawn up on the platform, with its band playing and colours flying. The Duke and Duchess were received with the utmost enthusiasm by a large assemblage of the élite of the city, and the children of the Crown Prince presented a bouquet of flowers to the Duchess. Their Imperial and Royal Highnesses were conducted by the Imperial and Royal personages to the Royal palace, where they were received by the Empress of Germany and all the Royal Princesses, with the chief officers of state. The Duke and Duchess, immediately after their arrival, paid a visit to the Emperor at the Imperial palace. They were accompanied by the Empress on their return to the Royal palace. The Duke and Duchess passed the evening in their private apartments, on account of it being the anniversary of the death of the Emperor Nicholas.

On Tuesday the Duke and Duchess visited various places of interest in the city, and inspected the atelier of Professor Richter, who took the Duchess's portrait last year at Livadia, and afterwards attended a commemorative celebration at the Russian Embassy of the Czar Alexander's accession to the throne. Their Imperial and Royal Highnesses partook of luncheon with the Count and Countess of Flanders at the palace of the Imperial Crown Prince, and upon their return to the palace gave several audiences. The Duke and Duchess visited the Emperor, and were afterwards present at the Court dinner given in the White Hall of the Royal Palace, for which 200 covers were laid. The Emperor was not present. The Empress was conducted in to dinner by the Duke of Edinburgh, who wore his Prussian Colonel's uniform, with the insignia of the Order of the Black Eagle. The Crown Prince escorted the Duchess, who was attired in a yellow satin dress with flounces, trimmed with black, and a black lace shawl; over her dress the crimson ribbon of the Russian Order of St. Andrew, a necklace of emeralds, and a diamond coronet. All the Imperial and Royal personages were present. The Empress drank to the Duke of Edinburgh, wishing him joy of his marriage. Subsequently the Duke and Duchess, with the Empress and the members of the Imperial Court, attended a gala performance at the opera; after which their Imperial and Royal Highnesses took leave of the Emperor and Empress and the members of the Imperial family, and accompanied by the Crown Prince and Crown Princess and the Count and Countess of Flanders to the Lehrte station, they left Berlin at midnight for Verviers, where they were met, the following day, by the British and Russian Ministers, and escorted in a special train to Brussels, arriving at a quarter past nine o'clock on Wednesday evening. The Duke and Duchess were met at the railway station by the King of the Belgians and a numerous suite. A guard of honour was in attendance, and an enthusiastic crowd greeted the Imperial and Royal visitors. The Duke and Duchess were received at the palace by the Queen. On Thursday their Imperial and Royal Highnesses, with the Belgian Court, attended a performance at the Théâtre de la Monnaie, and were present at a Court dinner given in their honour.

Yesterday (Friday) the Duke and Duchess were to inspect the chief objects of interest in the town and afterwards leave for Ostend, whence they would embark on board the Royal yacht Victoria and Albert (Captain the Prince of Leiningen) for Gravesend, where the Imperial and Royal bride and bridegroom will land at the Terrace Pier this (Saturday) morning.

The official programme states that the public will be informed of the arrival of the Royal yacht in Gravesend Reach by a Royal salute, to be fired by her Majesty's ships of war moored off the Terrace Pier. A second salute will be fired as soon as their Royal Highnesses land. Ticket-holders for seats on the pier and pier-road will not be admitted until nine o'clock, and all seats should be occupied by ten o'clock. All the street barriers will be closed at half-past ten, and no person can be admitted into the line of route after that hour. None but officials connected with the arrangements will be permitted on the pier, pier steps, or pier barge. All seat-holders are required to remain in their places until after the whole of the carriages of the Royal party have left the pier and the young ladies selected as flower-strewers have been withdrawn. Two guards of honour will be formed of detachments of the 7th Fusiliers and the Royal Marines, one being stationed at the Terrace Pier, with the band, and the other at the North Kent railway station, also with band. Two troops of the 7th Hussars will keep the line of route through the town. The Duke and Duchess will travel by a special train, via Waterloo station, to Windsor, where they will be received by the Queen, the Prince and Princess of Wales and other members of the Royal family, with the Mayor and Corporation, and by whom they will be escorted through the town to the Long Walk, and thence to the castle, the streets being lined by the first battalion Grenadier Guards and 2nd Life Guards. A guard of honour of the first battalion Grenadier Guards, with its band and colours, will be in attendance, and an escort of the 2nd Life Guards will be drawn up.

On Monday a state banquet will be given by the Queen at the castle, in St. George's Hall. Covers will be laid for upwards of 200 guests.

On Thursday the Queen will enter London with the Duke and Duchess of Edinburgh, and escort their Imperial and Royal Highnesses in semi-state to Buckingham Palace.

Prince Arthur arrived yesterday week at Oxford on a visit to Prince Leopold. On Saturday the Prince inspected the various objects of interest in the University and witnessed the torpid races on the Isis, and attended evening service at New College. On Sunday Prince Arthur and Prince Leopold were present at the preaching of the University sermon at St. Mary's, and afterwards visited the Dean and Mrs. Liddell, and attended the evening service at the cathedral.

The Prince Imperial received at Camden House, Chiselmhurst, on Tuesday, through M. Joliffe, from a number of adherents to the Napoleonic cause, a bouquet composed of dark and light coloured violets, surrounded with leaves of the same flower, and around the centre is a circle of blooming heather, emblematic of the Scottish descent of the Empress. Accompanying the bouquet was a tricoloured scarf of corded silk, embroidered with the Imperial eagles and crown.

The Duke de Chartres and the Count and Countess de Paris have left Claridge's Hotel for Paris.

OPENING OF THE NEW PARLIAMENT.

The combination of circumstances involved in a new Government and a new House of Commons naturally created a sort of bewilderment when the nascent Legislature met on Thursday. The old liberal members who came in early appeared not to be ready to give up their former seats on the right of the Chamber, and some of them strayed towards their quondam seats until reminded by the laughter and the "chaff" of the experienced Tory members who have returned once more to the House; and that party exhibited a curious felicity in appropriating their new places. First amongst them to settle himself in a seat corresponding with that he used to occupy on the other side was Mr. Charley, and generally the former members of his party settled themselves in what may be called the seats of power with a certain modest assurance. As to the new members, of whatever political creed, they might be distinguished by their adhering to their overcoats and umbrellas, and by their helplessly wandering about, uncertain where to swoop down. Many of them were taken in hand by the initiated without regard to party feeling, and there were interchanges of greetings and introductions, and a general geniality. There soon began a babble of conversation and a ripple of laughter, both of which increased as the numbers multiplied. Presently, it is to be noted, came in Mr. Roebuck, and assumed the place he used to occupy when he was before in the House, no matter who was in power—namely, that immediately below the gangway on the Opposition side. Notable was another Parliamentary resurrection, that of Sir George Bowyer, who has grown quite venerable. Nonconformity was early represented by Mr. Henry Richard; the Fiji Islands by Mr. M'Arthur; and the batch of new Baronets by Sir Charles Forster.

Other typical members were tolerably plenty: Conservatism in the City of London showed in Alderman Cotton and Mr. Hubbard; Mr. Ashbury and General Shute were prominent only because they sat in the places of Mr. Fawcett and Mr. J. White. As to the Home Rulers, they were not distinguishable (the Irish element of membership being very scant), and they were represented, inappropriately as may be thought, by Lord Robert Montagu. It was interesting to observe the retirement to back benches of gentlemen who were components in former Conservative Ministries, of whom Mr. Mowbray was a special example. For long the scene was almost one of hurly-burly, out of which it was difficult to pick individualism; and nobody settled down before the summons to the House of Peers. This, it might have been supposed, would have emptied the Lower House, but it did not; new membership apparently not being curious about the ceremony in the Upper House, with its quaint formalities, which verge so much on the grotesque. Indeed, the scene there was more ungainly and uninteresting than ever, the area of the Chamber being bare of peers, so that the uncomfortable sense of being nearly ludicrous in their costume and position which must be alive in the Lords Commissioners was, perhaps, less intense from the fact that they were not playing the antics enforced upon them before an audience which was either large or critical.

When the Commons began to avail themselves of the gracious license so courteously given by the Lords Commissioners, there was a very large assemblage. The Ministerialists ranged themselves in compact and sorted order. Of course there were only sub-lieutenants on the Treasury bench—as Mr. W. H. Smith, wearing his blushing honours with a sort of pleased modesty; Sir H. Selwin-Ibbetson, evidently trying to look very dignified, and to a certain extent succeeding; and Mr. Algernon Egerton, seeming very grave if not pensive. These were nearly all the representatives of the Government, and in their midst was to be seen Sir Percy Herbert, who holds no office at all, but who, it was seen afterwards, was there with a purpose—namely, that of giving the Ministerial fiat and congratulation to the newly-elected Speaker. It was naturally mentally inquired why he should be so chosen. On the front Opposition bench many of the ex-Ministers placed themselves. Notably, Mr. Gladstone, having glided in from behind the Speaker's chair, slipped in a remote corner seat at the upper end of the bench, by no means occupying the place traditionally held by the leader of the Opposition. There, too, in his immediate vicinity, apparently avoiding notice, was Mr. Lowe, and Lord Hartington might have been found out by any who sought him earnestly; while Mr. Childers, with a free and unembarrassed air and in an easy attitude, was in the most central place. It may be observed that, during the preliminary grouping, before everyone was fixed in his special place, the Liberals, who mingled in the crowd on the floor, seemed no way crest-fallen, but interchanged courtesies with their triumphant foes, and bore with equanimity many a jest (there were obviously no gibes) which was broken upon them by facetious Conservatives. Without doubt Mr. Chaplin, who proposed the nomination of Mr. Brand for the Speakership, did his work well. Eminently gentlemanly, as might have been expected, he exhibited a good feeling and a taste which caused him to be almost, if not altogether, eloquent, while Lord George Cavendish, who seconded the motion, infused a dry humour into his remarks, which was very effective. It was to be observed that all the encomiums that were lavished on Mr. Brand by both members were more heartily and universally cheered by the Conservatives than by the Liberals.

All this time Mr. Brand had been, so to speak, crouching in a more or less obscure seat below the gangway on the Opposition side, evidently endeavouring to seem unconscious of what was going on. When called from his retreat by the loud invitation of the House, he rose with that air of coyness and unwillingness to be honoured and that humility which are considered proper in a gentleman who is about to be inducted into the chair. But his speech was still in tone and spirit assured; and, even while he was professing humble gratitude, it might have been detected that he was conscious that all that had been said about him was not beyond the truth. When he had been conveyed (in custody as it were) to the chair by his proposer and seconder, and made his grateful obeisance and acknowledgments, as has been said, Sir Percy Herbert spoke gratulation for the Government, in a slightly lumbering way. Then there was a pause; and then slowly and, as it seemed, reluctantly, Mr. Gladstone came forward, standing very high up at the table, and by no means in a pious pride, on the front Opposition bench, spoke for himself and those who, judging by the loud and universal cheering from the Liberal members, are still his adherents, and, with great impressiveness and in choice language, paid his testimony to the merits of the re-elected arbiter of the House. There was nothing more to be done; and Mr. W. H. Smith executed his first official Parliamentary function by moving the immediate adjournment of the House.

THE ASHANTEE WAR.

The news of Sir Garnet Wolseley's severe battle with the Ashantees at Amoafu, on Jan. 31, followed by several days' more fighting on the road to Coomassie, to the capture of that town and the submission of King Kofi Kalkali, on Feb. 5, was published in our last week's paper. The first portion of this intelligence had been conveyed from Madeira to Lisbon, in forty-one hours, by one of the Admiralty despatch-boats employed in that service. Our Illustration, showing the arrival of such a vessel at Lisbon, has therefore some interest upon this occasion. The paddle-wheel steam-yacht Enchantress, of 835 tons and 250-horse power, carrying a single gun, and the tender Vigilant, also a paddle-wheel steamer of the same dimensions, with two guns, are the vessels at present so engaged. They have to intercept the West African mail-steamer calling at Madeira from Cape Coast Castle. They prepare for sea immediately the mail is signalled off Madeira, and as soon as they get the despatches they leave at full speed for Lisbon, a voyage of forty-four hours in ordinary weather. The daily press of London is now fully represented at Lisbon, there being special agents for the Times, Daily News, Daily Telegraph, and Standard and Reuter's telegraph news. When the despatch-boat is seen from the Lisbon bar the fact is at once telegraphed to the city, and all the London newspaper agents are soon aloft, usually in boats with four rowers. The stout boatmen of the Caes Sodré are considered first-rate watermen. Instantly as the steamer moors in front of the Rock of the Conde d'Obidos, formerly called the Old Packet Stairs, the British Government despatches are sent ashore in charge of an officer; then the press telegrams are delivered, and a boat-race for the shore is commenced, the boatmen entering into the spirit of rivalry as keenly as their employers. Having got to land, cabs are taken to the offices, and the telegrams are put upon the wire without loss of time. The Portuguese wonder at the expenses paid by the leading London journals for this service, as journalism in Lisbon is upon a much smaller scale. It is true that our Gold Coast war excites little interest in Lisbon, and nothing is heard of it there beyond a few lines occasionally in the Portuguese journals.

We present this week no fewer than nine Illustrations of the campaign, all from sketches by our Special Artist. The one which appears foremost, on our front page, shows the incident of a native chief entertained by some British officers in camp, and drinking her Majesty's health, either in the palm wine of his own country, or in that of a European vintage possibly brought by them among private stores.

The military gentlemen of this expedition have had to put up with such lodgings as they could get on the road through the forest between Cape Coast Castle and Coomassie. But after they crossed the Prah and traversed the Assin territory to enter that of the Ashantees, a decided improvement was found in the native buildings available for their temporary use. The palace of the Adansi Hills Chief, or King, at Fomanna, which was occupied by Sir Garnet Wolseley and his staff, gives a favourable notion of the merits of Ashantee architecture. The floor is painted with a coating of clay, in colour a deep rich Etruscan red, with a beautiful polish. The walls are washed with white clay, which the natives of the Gold Coast often take as a medicine in water or chew as a sweetmeat. The walls are also decorated with strange and rather tasteful designs. We cannot say much about the furniture, as the people of Fomanna took away their valuables with them. But they left many stools, curved in the seat, and with the legs handsomely carved; some rudely-made tables, clay pots, and calabashes. These, with some old pipe-heads, stone tools, and musical instruments, were all the booty obtained in Fomanna.

Moinaie, which Sir Garnet Wolseley reached on Jan. 20, is at the base of the Adansi Hills on the south side; and on the other side of the hills, going on towards Coomassie, are the villages of Quisah and Fomanna, only a mile or two apart. The Adansi Hills were first passed on the 16th and 17th, by Lord Gifford's advanced reconnoitring party, who met with no opposition, though an Ashantee priest tried to frighten them back, in the absurd manner we showed last week. Our Artist sends a view of Moinaie, drawn on the 24th, with the huts and tents occupied by some of the troops and with parties of soldiers and baggage-carriers on the ground. His sketch of men of the Naval Brigade enjoying their breakfast in the court of an Ashantee house was taken at Quisah. He describes the house as consisting of four rooms, or huts, built on the four sides of the court, which is entered by a very narrow doorway and passage at one corner. The timber beams and hard earthen walls, which are plastered, display much ornamental sculpture of an ingenious pattern. The floors are of burnt clay, hard and smooth, and painted red; they are raised 2 ft. above the ground. The several rooms are usually the bedrooms of a native family; the one farthest from the open doorway is allotted to the girls or unmarried women. A tree is often planted in the court of a house, and various articles of "fetish," by way of a charm or a sacrifice, are hung upon its branches. It is customary to bury gold-dust and jewels, or other valuables, at the foot of this tree, where the native robber will fear to dig them up.

The different corps of Sir Garnet Wolseley's mixed force in the camp at Prah-su showed an odd diversity of attire and equipment, as may be observed in our Artist's representation of half a dozen sentries, belonging to their respective lines. The English sailor will at once be recognised, but he has quite a soldierly air, being one of the smart men of the Naval Brigade detached for this inland service. On his right hand, but to the reader's left, of course, is a negro soldier of one of the West India regiments. On the sailor's left hand are two of our West African auxiliaries, a Kossah man, from the neighbourhood of Sierra Leone, and a Bonny man, from the delta of the Niger, who are little better than savages. The Kossah wears a canvas shirt, like a night-gown; he has a fetish necklace on him. The two men at the left-hand side of the engraving are Houssas of Captain Rait's Artillery dressed in an easy-fitting uniform of dark blue, which consists of loose wide breeches, folded waist-cloth, open-sleeved vest, cross-belts, and light cap with a numbered plate in front. They are fine fellows, and their officers have found them well worth the trouble of drilling them to carry and work the battery of light guns, which no Europeans could have done in that climate. We give two other Illustrations of the discipline and treatment of negro troops. One is the paying of a West India regiment: the officer sits, with the pay-list and the little rolls of money, while the sergeant calls out the men's names. He sometimes has to mention the reason why a deduction from the pay is to be made for some fault. In such case it is amusing to see the dejected looks of the delinquents, compared with the others' cheerful faces. These men are regular soldiers, and not bad soldiers either; they are usually stationed at Sierra Leone and Cape Coast Castle. The other Illustration shows Lieutenants Irwin and Douglas inspecting the ammunition of the Bonny men, and counting the rounds of cartridges in the possession of each man. These irregular troops are armed with the old smoothbore musket, converted into a breech-loader, which they have learned to use pretty quickly, but are still very indifferent marksmen. Each man has to carry seventy rounds of ammunition, in two small pouches, ready for immediate use, besides a larger pouch containing a reserve; also a blanket, a leather havresac for his rations, and commonly an old preserved-meat tin, which serves for cooking rice or other food. They are much addicted, however, to robbing each other, and will quarrel noisily about it when the officer's back is turned. Colonel Macleod, 42nd Highlanders, has been appointed brigadier to command the irregular regiments—that is, Colonel Wood's mixed regiment of Fantees, Elminas, Bonny men, and Kossahs, and Captain Rait's Houssa gunners, with Major Baker Russell's regiment.

The labour of cutting a road or path through the dense forest is much increased by the swampy ground in some places, and near Sutha the engineers found it needful to construct three miles and a half of "corduroy road." This work, performed by 150 natives, is the subject of one of our Artist's sketches. After cutting side channels or gutters for the water to run off, a number of trees were felled and divided into logs; these were laid side by side upon the marshy ground, and were covered with twigs and earth or sand, to make a road for the troops. The natives, however, found such a road very painful to their feet, and would prefer wading through mud or water up to their knees. It required constant vigilance and incessant commands or threats on the part of the engineer to keep the labourers at their task; if he turned aside for a moment they would all sit down and do nothing. But the work was finished in very good time.

The diplomatic interview of Lieutenant Irwin with the King or Chief named Amoowah, one of our native allies, took place at Dunquah some weeks ago, but it is a characteristic example of native state and dignity. His Majesty sits beneath the shade of an English black umbrella, wrapped in a loose robe and smoking a cigar which has been given him by his English visitor, who stands at his left hand. The armour-bearer, sword-bearer and mace-bearer are posted beside him, with two or three soldiers of his body-guard, having the short Snider rifles presented by our Government. This King had done good service in the fighting that took place near Cape Coast Castle.

The Admiralty, on Wednesday last, received from Commodore Hewitt, V.C., a despatch bearing date Feb. 2, at Agimamm, fifteen miles from Coomassie, which gives further particulars of the great battle of the 31st at Amoafu, so far as the Naval Brigade were concerned in it. He reports that, since his former letter of Jan. 29, the Naval Brigade, in conjunction with the rest of the troops, has been hotly engaged with the enemy on three separate occasions:—

On our arrival at Detchiam, on the morning of the 29th, Wood's and Russell's regiments, with the Naval Brigade and 23rd Fusiliers, under the command of Colonel Macleod, 42nd Highlanders, were ordered to advance four miles into the bush to the village of Bommassie and attack it, with the object of driving out the King of Adansi, who, with a large force, was occupying a strong position on our flank. After a sharp engagement the enemy were eventually dislodged, although not without some loss on our side.

On the evening of Jan. 30 our troops and carriers were massed at Inasru, and early on the following morning they advanced in four columns to attack a strong force of the enemy, who had established themselves a short distance south of Amoafu. Without attempting to give the details of the General's plan of operations, I will endeavour to afford such particulars as will enable their Lordships to gain some idea of the position occupied by the Naval Brigade during the engagement.

The first encounter took place at 8 a.m., when the village of Eginassie, about a mile from Amoafu, was carried by a rush of the scouts under Lord Gifford. The Naval Brigade was divided into two wings, one, under Captain Walter James Grubbe, of her Majesty's ship Tamar, being attached to the left column, and the other, under Acting Captain Percy Luxmoore, of her Majesty's ship Druid, to the right. On the advance being made, the right and left columns were ordered to cut paths at right angles to the main road, for a distance of 300 yards, into the bush, and then to form upon the flanks of the 42nd Regiment, who, in the front column, were making their way through the thick bush on each side of the road. The enemy's centre was at Amoafu, and, throwing out two columns towards us in a diagonal direction, they formed, as it were, a broad arrow with the main path, in which order they received our attack. After suffering very heavy losses, the 42nd Highlanders eventually captured the town at 1.45 p.m.

I have great pleasure in acquainting their Lordships with the steady behaviour of the Naval Brigade. During a very trying time they showed the greatest coolness, and, advancing slowly under a continuous and heavy fire, steadily drove back the enemy until three o'clock, when they forced them to make a precipitate retreat, and the day was ours. Although it is quite impossible to give even an approximate estimate of the strength of the enemy opposed to us, I should say, from the number of Ashantee corpses we have taken from the roadside and buried, there must have been several thousands of them. On the baggage being moved up from Inasru towards the evening, the guard protecting it was attacked, and some of the carriers, dropping their loads, ran away. Nearly all of it was, however, afterwards recovered, and Sir Garnet has since successfully established a line of communication with his rear.

On Sunday the Naval Brigade were sent on to a place called Becquah (Baquah), three miles from Amoafu, where they attacked a large number of Ashantees, and drove them back, with considerable loss. On Monday, Feb. 2, we came in here; and to-morrow, at daylight, we are to advance ten miles further, without baggage. This will take us within about five miles of Coomassie. There has been some desultory fighting during the day, in which the Naval Brigade were not engaged.

Inclosed is a return of casualties, which does not include the losses suffered by the regiments, which, I regret to say, in the case of the 42nd, were very heavy. Their Lordships will observe that a very stubborn resistance was offered to us.

It appears to have been a mistake, in the telegram of last week, to report Major Baird among the killed. The names of the officers actually killed or wounded, and the numbers of other casualties in each portion of the forces, were published in our last. Further particulars are still awaited.

The Earl of Carnarvon sent to the papers the following extract from a private letter received on Thursday at the Colonial Office from Mr. Goldsworthy, second in command under Captain Glover, dated her Majesty's ship Victor Emmanuel, Cape Coast, Feb. 8:—"News has reached us within the last half hour that Coomassie is taken and Koffie Kalkali a prisoner. This is authentic. This will only be a line, as the special steamer is getting up steam to take the news to Madeira." The Admiralty has not received any confirmation of this report. On the contrary, Sir Garnet Wolseley states in his telegram from Coomassie that the King had left the town, but was coming back to sign a treaty. The latest intelligence received at the War Office from the Gold Coast is that conveyed in the telegrams of the 5th ult., which arrived on Feb. 26.

Regretting his inability to be present at a Liberal gathering in Bolton, Mr. John Bright has written a letter in which he says the Liberal party has failed mainly through want of organisation, arising from the security caused by its great victory five years ago. It still lives, and may recover its supremacy.

General Sir Percy Herbert, on the part of those officers who feel aggrieved by the Abolition of Purchase in the Army Act, presented their collective case at the sitting of the Commission, yesterday week, and contended that the table and arguments embodied in Mr. Cardwell's answer to the note addressed to him by the Commission were misleading.

Conscientious scruples have been urged by the casual paupers at Eastbourne Workhouse against Sunday labour, the guardians having latterly imposed a certain moderate task of stone-breaking as a check on the over-numerous applications of tramps every Saturday night. The question has been brought before the magistrates, who have decided it in favour of the tramps.

FOREIGN AND COLONIAL NEWS.

FRANCE.

Thursday, March 5.

Last Sunday's elections in the departments of the Vienne and Vaucluse may be looked upon as inaugurating a new era in the tactics of at least one fraction of the Republican party. Ever since the Parliamentary coup-d'état which overthrew M. Thiers, and more especially since the voting of the Septennat on Nov. 19 last, the policy of the Opposition party has not been to harass the Cabinet by continual interpellations, amendments, manifestoes, and "incidents," but rather to allow it every possible latitude to carry its pet projects into effect. The general opinion was that, left to themselves, the Duc de Broglie and his colleagues would so thoroughly compromise themselves in the eyes of the country that their fall would be inevitable. This policy was the result of an alliance between MM. Thiers and Gambetta, both of whom, besides putting, as it were, a bridle upon their own tongues, recommended calm patience and moderation to their followers. But the fiery spirits of the Radical deputies, tired of this Fabian policy, have long chafed under the restraint imposed upon them by their leader, and in a mutinous moment M. Naquet and other malcontents paid a visit to M. Ledru Rollin at Fontenay aux Roses, the result of which has been his candidature and election in the Vaucluse.

The presumption now is that henceforth M. Gambetta is supplanted in the leadership of the Republican party. The importance of this fact cannot be over-estimated, as M. Ledru Rollin's election will lead to a more harassing and resolute opposition on the part of the Radical deputies, and more than one exciting Parliamentary battle is doubtless in store for us. It seems strange that M. Ledru Rollin, to whom the Radical organs predicted such an overwhelming majority, should only have beaten his adversary by less than 3000 votes out of 60,000, especially in Vaucluse, which is essentially a Republican department. We are told, however, that the Royalist Mayors recently appointed by the Government have been resorting to the method of manipulating votes which obtained under the Empire; and in one commune alone 800 electors have formally protested before a notary against the conduct of the Mayor, who had destroyed their voting-papers. On the other hand, the Radical candidate's insignificant majority is regarded with satisfaction by the moderate Left. The ballot shows that the number of Monarchical votes recorded is not greater than at the last election; while the moderate Republicans, we are told, almost unanimously abstained from voting. The Monarchists cannot, therefore, draw arguments unfavourable to the Republic from the result.

M. Lepetit's scarcely hoped-for election in the Vienne is hailed, on the other hand, as a great Republican triumph. His return under the patronage of M. Thiers is stronger evidence than any yet afforded of the desire of the country for a moderate Republic. The Vienne has hitherto been considered as a Royalist stronghold; and when M. de Soubeyran came forward as a Monarchical candidate in 1871, he was elected almost unanimously. The Royalist candidate, the Count de Beauchamp, was supported, on Sunday, by the prefects and the Government Mayors, and his defeat is a great blow for the Conservative party.

M. Buffet, the President of the National Assembly, is growing more and more unpopular every day. At a recent sitting M. Pouyer Quartier brought forward a project for taxing sugar-refiners, which was vehemently opposed by the Government. The discussion, which was purely financial at first, at length degenerated into a political debate, and a ministerial crisis was even feared when, yielding to the entreaties of some of the members of the majority, M. Pouyer Quartier suddenly withdrew his bill. The Left was loud in expressing its indignation at this proceeding; and M. Duvergier de Hauranne, having protested against the private consultation which the Government had held in one corner of the Salle with M. Pouyer Quartier, was called to order by President Buffet. This so exasperated the Republican party that an ordinarily silent member sprang to his feet, and, apostrophising the President, exclaimed, "Your partiality is something revolting." Naturally enough, he was called to order, and the sitting broke up amid considerable confusion. The XIX.ème Siècle, M. About's paper, appeared on the morrow with a long personal attack directed against M. Buffet, for which its sale was immediately prohibited on the public way. Police agents have since seized parcels of the paper from porters, and have even forbidden people reading it in the streets.

The Assembly has authorised the Government, by 552 votes against 64, to prosecute M. Melvil Bloncourt, deputy for Guadalupe, for participation in the acts of the Commune. A series of proposed taxes, many of which—such as an adhesive stamp upon all photographs, suggested by M. de Lorgeril, and a 10f. tax on pianos, advised by M. de Belcastel—were more ingenious than sagacious, have been rejected during the week. An attempt to tax gas consumed in private houses has also failed, and it is greatly feared that the Assembly will be obliged to increase the obnoxious salt duty as the only expedient to meet the deficit in this year's revenue.

M. Emile Ollivier, who has returned to Paris, will be received to-day at the French Academy. His address is reported to contain several eulogistic paragraphs concerning Napoleon III., which he has declined to modify in compliance with the request of several Academicians. When this address was read to the Academy at a recent private sitting M. Guizot abruptly rose and, violently apostrophising M. Ollivier, whom he called "the man who went to war with a light heart," left the room, vowing that he would never return.

M. Thiers has received an address and an album from a number of French residents in the United States. In reply to the congratulatory remarks of the deputation by which it was formally presented, the ex-President made a short speech, in which he stated that he would devote all the strength that remained to him to watching over the interests of France.

The Paris Court of Appeal has rejected the claim of Naundorff's descendants to the title of Princes of the house of Bourbon, the judgment, justly enough, stigmatising them as impudent and crafty adventurers, and condemning them to pay the costs of the trial.

SPAIN.

Marshal Serrano has resigned the post of President of the Ministry, retaining that of Chief of the Executive Power; General Zabala succeeds him in the former office.

From his position near Sommorostro, General Moriones, last week, made three attacks upon the Carlist position, but was each time repulsed. The Carlists are entrenched on an elevated plateau bristling with batteries. In his despatches to Madrid General Moriones seems to have acknowledged a loss of 800 killed and wounded. But, according to Carlist accounts, he lost 1800 men. This includes the killed, those drowned in the river, the wounded, and the prisoners. It is announced from Bilbao that the bombardment of the town by the Carlists continues, and that 200 shells are thrown into it daily. The Church of St. Nicholas, the theatre, and the railway station have been burnt. According to Carlist reports 5000 soldiers have been surprised by the Carlists on the San Pedro bridge at Sommorostro. One thousand of the men are said to have been killed, and the rest made prisoners, or drowned in the river. Consequent on General Moriones' failure to break through the Carlist lines at Bilbao the situation of the army has become so critical that both Marshal Serrano and Admiral Topete have gone to his assistance.

Meetings in support of the Government, and to assist it in the war, are being held in Madrid and the provinces, and subscriptions for the wounded continue to be collected. Senor Gandara, a banker in Madrid, has proposed the organisation of 10,000 volunteers, towards the expense of whose equipment he offers to contribute 4,000,000 reals.

ITALY.

Sano, the Japanese Minister, was received by King Victor Emmanuel on Sunday, and presented his letters of recall. Kavasse, his successor, subsequently obtained an audience to hand his credentials to his Majesty.

The Chamber of Deputies was occupied on Tuesday in discussing a Ministerial bill sanctioning an expenditure of 79,000,000 lire for defensive works, the amount to be spread over several Budgets. The Committee to which the bill was referred approved it, and added another, sanctioning a further expenditure of 88,500,000 lire in order to complete the works.

The Pope received, on Sunday, the members of the popular clubs representing the associations devoted to Catholic interests. The grand receptions, which were interrupted in 1873 in consequence of the Pope's illness, will now be resumed. His Holiness gave audiences on Sunday and Monday to several English families. The Pope has received the members of the Society of Catholic Roman Women. Replying to their address, he praised those who visited the Vatican and blamed those who took part in the Carnival. This, he said, was not a time for rejoicing, but for prayer and good works.

HOLLAND.

A bill for the introduction of a gold standard into Holland was unfavourably received, on Monday, by the Second Chamber of the Legislature. The principal clause having been rejected by 40 votes against 29, the Ministry withdrew the bill.

GERMANY.

Indisposition has again withdrawn the Emperor William from participation in public and Court festivities; but he has been able to receive daily visits and to confer with his Ministers.

Opposing the motion brought forward by Alsatian Deputies in the German Parliament to annul that clause in the Alsace-Lorraine administrative law which gives the Governor power to declare a state of siege, Prince Bismarck said in France there are twenty-eight departments in a state of siege at the present time. He asked, as a vote of confidence, that the motion should be rejected, which it was, by 196 to 138; the voters in the minority being the Poles, Alsatians, Social Democrats, members of the Centre, and the Fortschritt party.

In the Federal Council the constitution of a superior Imperial Court has been decided upon, and will be forthwith submitted to the Reichstag. Reservations are made allowing Prussia and Bavaria to maintain local courts of appeal for causes within their State jurisdiction. A new law submitted to the Council prescribes certain penalties of internment and loss of citizenship in the case of ecclesiastics removed from office for illegal acts.

Yesterday week a decision of the Gnesen District Court was promulgated requiring Archbishop Ledochowski to undergo the year's imprisonment—which sentence was substituted by the Court, on Dec. 19 last, for the fine of 8000 thalers, imposed on him for offences against the May laws.

AUSTRO-HUNGARY.

The Emperor of Austria returned to Vienna, in good health, yesterday week. He was received at the Northern Railway station by the Crown Prince Rudolf, the Minister President, and all the members of the Cabinet.

Count de Chambord arrived at Vienna on Monday. He is in perfect health.

The Austrian Ministry has come to an understanding with the leaders of the Lower House of the Austrian Reichsrath. The measures for immediate consideration have been agreed upon, and it is expected that they will be disposed of by the end of April. The Reichsrath will then adjourn till the middle of October, when it will meet for an autumn Session. In the Lower House the Czech deputies have handed in a written declaration of their reasons for not taking their seats.

On Sunday M. de Szlavy, President of the Hungarian Ministry, had an audience of the Emperor lasting two hours, in which he explained the present Ministerial crisis and announced that the Cabinet desired to resign. His Majesty, however, deferred taking a decision on the subject until after his arrival at Pesth.

The Lower House of the Hungarian Diet has adopted the bills sanctioning the treaties of commerce with Sweden, Portugal, and Russia.

SWEDEN AND NORWAY.

Major-General Baron B. G. Bildt, Governor-General of Stockholm, has been appointed Swedish Minister at Berlin. M. Kleen, First Secretary of the Ministry for Foreign Affairs, has been nominated Secretary of Legation at Vienna.

RUSSIA.

Information has been received at Berlin to the effect that the Yomeds, in Central Asia, have attacked Russian fortifications, crossing the ice for that purpose. They were repelled, and in their retreat the ice broke up, causing great numbers to be drowned.

A Russian trading caravan is about to be sent from Astrabad to Afghanistan, by way of Candahar and Cabul. It is being organised by Russian capitalists in St. Petersburg.

AMERICA.

President Grant has sent a message to the United States Congress recommending that the forthcoming Centennial Exhibition in Philadelphia should be made both national and international, and advising other legislation to secure the success of the undertaking.

On the Great Western Railway a passenger car in a running train caught fire, and twenty-two persons were terribly burnt before the train was stopped. Eight of them were dead.

CANADA.

A resolution to favour the re-establishment of a reciprocity treaty between Canada and the United States has been agreed to by the Dominion Board of Trade at Toronto.

CHINA.

Inflammatory placards are being circulated at Tien-Tsin denouncing foreigners, and the Chinese Government has notified to foreign Ministers that it cannot guarantee their safety.

JAPAN.

By telegram from Nagasaki, of Tuesday's date, we learn that the Japanese Imperialist forces have been victorious over the Fizen rebels, who have disappeared. The Government troops have occupied Saga, and, no further risings being heard of, it is believed that the insurrection is at an end.

THE FAMINE IN BENGAL.

Reassuring accounts were telegraphed from the Viceroy at the close of last week, to the effect that reports had been received of the completion of transport arrangements in North Behar and Bhagulpore; that throughout the North-West Provinces improvement was generally felt; and that the late rains had been beneficial, that crops were ripening, and that the relief works sufficed to keep down distress. But Mr. Archibald Forbes, the special reporter sent by the Daily News, visited the Durbungah road relief works on Friday. Here, according to his account, 15,000 persons are employed "on the semi-starvation wages of three-halfpence daily." He adds that they are neglected, defrauded, and irregularly paid:—"There is no supervision, except one native official for one hour in the morning. The Government is to blame for the delay in sending European supervisors, as requested by the local officials. Most of the public works are in the same state from the same cause. I found many persons in an extremely emaciated state; and I saw one famine-corpsed lying unburied in a ruined temple. There is much mortality among the children. The famine-wave is threatening to swamp preventive efforts. Shortness of money in the local treasury threatens to cause a collapse in the transport service and the public works."

The Marquis of Salisbury has taken prompt action in reference to these statements, as is shown by the following telegrams, which have been published:—

From the Secretary of State for India to the Viceroy, Calcutta. Sent Feb. 28, 1874:—"Daily News telegram received about Durbungah road relief works states that relief works are not supervised by Europeans, that labourers are paid semi-starvation wages of three-halfpence daily, payment being irregular. Inform me immediately amount of labourers' daily pay and price of rice at Durbungah. Message adds that shortness of money in local treasury threatens collapse of transport and public works. Telegraph whether this is true."

From the Viceroy, Calcutta, to the Secretary of State for India. Sent March 2, received March 2, 1874:—"Your telegram 28th. Sir R. Temple, who is here, informs me that rice at Durbungah sold at eleven to twelve seers, of two pounds, the rupee, Murwa, kind of pulse much consumed by relief labourers, twelve to thirteen seers the rupee. Wages of relief labourers one and a half annas per diem (equal to two and a quarter pounds of rice). Something less for women or children. Usually whole family works. One bad case of irregular payment occurred from mistake of officers concerned; remedied immediately on discovery. Labourers paid daily. European supervision for all relief works impossible. Cash in Durbungah Treasury, from large disbursements, run low; will be fully supplied. No danger whatever to transport from this."

Meanwhile the Daily News' Special Commissioner telegraphs again as follows:—

DUHEYRA, EASTERN TIRHOOT, Sunday.—I find general, severe, and increasing privation among the lower classes. The better classes are not suffering. About one third of the inhabitants in each village are undergoing slow starvation. Several famine deaths have already occurred. Systematised relief organisation is only just being commenced. The delay is owing to the deficient staff. There has been no rice in the bazars for a fortnight past. The future is terribly ominous.

DURBUNGAH, Wednesday, 7 a.m.—The suffering and mortality in Eastern Tirohot are rapidly increasing. Eighteen famine deaths have taken place in four days in a village near Mozuffpore. The cart transport is less than half the contractor's estimate. The grain supply is therefore deficient in the same ratio. Nearly 30,000 persons are employed on the road relief works here. There were only 15,000 last week. An effort to relieve a thousand of the weaker by cooked food has been frustrated by the refusal to take it, from caste prejudice. The people preferred to starve on their wages, swayed by the speculations of the native overseers. There has been no rain. Sir Richard Temple begins his Purneah tour to-morrow.

A telegram, dated Calcutta, Wednesday, received from the Viceroy, states the measures being taken to supply the people with food. He says:—

Orders of Government rice amount to 420,000 tons, of which 350,000 from beyond sea. Of this quantity 100,000 arrived. We have been keeping up for some while a constant stream of from 2000 to 2500 tons a day into distressed districts. Private trade is bringing in grain from North-West and Punjab at the rate of about 1600 tons a day. Local transport, which has been main difficulty, now fairly well organised. Over 50,000 carts now employed in districts north of Ganges, under contracts, in bringing in Government grain, will shortly be increased to 70,000. In worst districts distribution of relief is being given by circles of moderate area, each village being visited and dealt with. Two deaths from starvation reported in Monghyr. None elsewhere yet, but in parts the lowest classes are gradually becoming pinched, and without Government measures severe and extensive famine would have already begun.

The minute has been published in which Lord Northbrook states his reasons for not interfering with the export of grain.

A meeting of the executive committee of the Bengal Famine Relief Fund was held at the Mansion House on Monday afternoon—the Lord Mayor presiding. A telegram from the Daily News' special commissioner in India was read descriptive of the existing distress in the famine-stricken districts. In the discussion which followed, Lord Lawrence was amongst the speakers. Before the meeting separated, it was resolved to remit a third sum of £10,000 to the Calcutta Relief Committee. Up to Wednesday evening the public subscription (now being raised in the City) amounted to upwards of £33,000.

At a meeting on behalf of the Bengal Famine Fund, held in Manchester, it was unanimously resolved that a national grant would be the most effective mode of expressing national sympathy, and that the cost of such aid should be thrown fairly and equitably on Imperial resources. Popular feeling in Manchester does not appear to coincide in the spirit which was manifested at this meeting, and the Mayor has been urged to call another meeting without delay.

At Preston, a motion which was submitted to a public meeting, called to discuss the question of the Bengal famine, was met by an amendment proposed by the Vicar of Preston, to the effect that at present it is not desirable to subscribe for the relief of the sufferers in India. After some discussion, this amendment was carried.

On Thursday £5000 was forwarded to Calcutta from Glasgow, being its first instalment for the relief of the sufferers in Bengal. Subscriptions are being liberally sent in.

A telegram from Gibraltar announces the arrival there of two transports with invalids from Cape Coast Castle.

The Swiss Federal Council has rejected the appeal of the Abbé Collet against his banishment from Switzerland.

Cholera is ravaging Buenos Ayres, the deaths being at twice or thrice the average rate.

A great fire has taken place at Panama, the damage done by which is estimated at one million dollars.

The Earl of Carnarvon has nominated Mr. G. H. Barne, of the Western Circuit, to the Attorney-Generalship of Jamaica, vacant by the death of Mr. E. A. C. Schalech.

An advance of £160,000 has been made by the banks of Constantinople to the Turkish Government. The rate of interest is not specified, but it is said to be high.

The appointments are gazetted of Mr. George de Jong Beyts to be her Majesty's Consul at Jeddah, and of Mr. William John Anderson to be Judge for the Turk's Islands.

The Globe correspondent at Brussels says that a million of francs has been granted towards the construction of the international building to be erected in the Rue de la Régence, opposite the residence of the Count de Flandre. It is intended for the exhibition of works of art, flower shows, fêtes, and other public purposes, and is estimated to cost 2,500,000 francs.

NATIONAL SPORTS.

The Grand National Hunt Meeting, which this year took place at Aylesbury, for the first time, was scarcely so successful as usual. This must be attributed partly to the recent heavy rains, which had made the ground so heavy and rotten that many owners sent their horses home again directly they had seen the course, and partly to the big, old-fashioned fences, which did not at all suit the ideas of some of the modern steeplechase horses, which, in too many cases, are merely ex-flat-racers, converted by a few weeks' drilling over bushy hurdles. The attendance was enormous; though the Prince of Wales, not having returned from the Continent, could not be present; nor did Mr. Diasraeli, who, being one of the stewards, was confidently expected, put in an appearance. The Grand National Hunt Steeplechase was, of course, the chief event of Tuesday. It had attracted one hundred subscribers; still, several of these merely took a nomination and paid the minor forfeit, and a field of a dozen was all that could be mustered. The race was scarcely in doubt after the first mile, for Lucellum, who recently won a small event at Doncaster, always held a good lead, and, steered by Captain Smith, one of our most accomplished gentlemen riders, finally won in a canter by ten lengths. In the course of the race Captain Riddell, who rode Minister, had a nasty fall and broke his collar-bone. The wretched display of Ryshworth (12st. 7lb.) in the Aylesbury Open Handicap was the chief feature of Wednesday's sport. The second in last year's Grand National fell at the brook, and, after refusing two or three times, was pulled up before he had gone a mile, so the prospects of his Bristol and Liverpool backers look particularly gloomy.

We much regret to have to record the death of the Hon. George Wentworth Fitzwilliam, which melancholy event occurred on Wednesday afternoon. The deceased gentleman recently had a severe fall when hunting with the Fitzwilliam hounds, of which he was master, and erysipelas set in. He was in his fifty-eighth year, and was brother of the present Earl Fitzwilliam.

The well-known steeplechase rider and trainer "Chris" Green died on Thursday week.

One or two unpleasantly foggy days militated somewhat against the success of the Ashdown Coursing Meeting; still hares were strong and plentiful, and, on the whole, the fixture was a great success. Only five of the Waterloo dogs—Royal Mary, Claimant, Ruby, Lighthouse, and Cresus—appeared in the Craven Cup, and of these the last named was put out by Deodora's Daughter in the first ties, after a trial of great length and severity. His victress was herself beaten by Claimant in the next round, and we understand that this was her last appearance in public; indeed, as she came out at Sandorne in 1870, and has been very hard worked ever since, her retirement is well earned. In the third ties Ruby and Claimant were the only "survivors of Waterloo," and at last the former won the stake by beating Belle of Havering in the final spin. The partiality of some greyhounds for a particular country is remarkable; for Ruby could not win a single course at Altcar in the previous week, and, by a very singular coincidence, she and Belle of Havering were slipped for the final course of the Craven Cup last year, when the result was the same as on the present occasion. Ruby ran through the stake in brilliant style, scarcely being challenged till she met Belle of Havering, when she just won, but with nothing to spare. Thirty-two puppies contested the Uffington Cup, but we doubt if there was anything very grand among them. It was won by Temerity, by Tony—Beaufort; and Cacique II., by Regulus—Restitution, was the runner-up. Luff stripped very well indeed; but some of Mr. Warwick's decisions caused a great deal of grumbling.

The Cambridge University handicaps were brought off on Saturday and Monday last. The quarter-mile was won by A. K. Lewis (Corpus), who had twelve yards start, and showed very good form; but the running in the one-mile and three-mile races was decidedly poor. The first meeting of the London Athletic Club will take place to-day (Saturday) at Lillie Bridge, commencing at about three o'clock.

The Duke of Abercorn, the newly-appointed Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, was sworn in before a Privy Council, on Tuesday, at Dublin Castle.

It is stated at Portsmouth that the Admiralty have determined to hold a naval review at Spithead on the occasion of the visit of the Czar in May next.

An engine-driver on the Great Northern Railway has received £5 as an acknowledgment of his promptitude in reversing his engine as the line was being crossed by a stag and a pack of hounds.

At a meeting of the Imperial Russian Society of Geography, presided over by the Grand Duke Constantine-Nicolaevitch, the secretary, Mr. Veniukof, pronounced a speech in honour of Livingstone. At the conclusion the meeting rose to render homage to his memory.

A conference of representative working men of the west of England and South Wales was held, on Monday, at the Tailors' Hall, Bristol, in connection with the Workmen's Peace Association. Speeches were made and resolutions passed in support of the principle of international arbitration. A public meeting was held in the evening.

By a series of explosions in Mr. Alderman Thompson's mill, at Blackburn, many persons have been killed and injured, among the former being the son of the proprietor, a fine young man, who was to have been married next week. While firing a salute at Wardour Castle, the seat of Lord Arundell, to celebrate the termination of the Tichborne trial, a man and a boy were killed by the bursting of a cannon. In a coal-pit at Blantyre, near Hamilton, two men were killed by an explosion of firedamp.

The Board of Admiralty consists of Mr. Ward Hunt, First Lord; Admiral Sir A. Milne, Admiral Sir J. Tarleton, Lord Gilford, and Sir Massey Lopes. He was born about 1788.—Dr. Forbes Winslow, an eminent authority on the subject of mental pathology, died on Tuesday, at the age of sixty-four. He was the author of many works on insanity, uncontrollable drunkenness, and obscure diseases of the brain.

The survivors of a past generation will be surprised to hear that Madame Taglioni, whose grace and elegance they used to rave about, is still among us, and teaches the coming race as much as they can learn of the arts which used to delight their grandfathers. Madame Taglioni resides at 14, Connaught-square.

An assault of arms by the German Gymnastic Society took place yesterday week, at their premises in Pancras-road, King's-cross, when a large number of ladies and gentlemen assembled to witness the various sports. The arrangements were admirably carried out under the direction of Mr. R. Schweizer and Mr. A. A. Stempel.

The balconies of houses in Cleveland-square have been pronounced dangerous by a coroner's jury, on the evidence of Mr. Ruddle, the architect, who was called as a witness at the inquest on Edward Brewer, a servant, killed by the falling of one of these defective structures. His death is the second that has happened from the same cause in this square recently.

A festival of hairdressers was held, on Monday night, in the small concert-room at Hanover-square Rooms, to afford sixteen members of the profession an opportunity to exhibit their skill. Sixteen ladies submitted to the operation of having erected upon their heads wonderful superstructures; and at the conclusion there was a promenade round the room.

At the annual meeting of the Newspaper Press Fund, last Saturday, it was reported that the ordinary income for the year was estimated at £687. The cash balance at the end of 1873 was £399. There are now 302 members on the roll, of whom 210 are resident in the metropolis. The Duke of Somerset has consented to preside at the annual dinner in May next.

At Wednesday's weekly meeting of the London School Board Canon Gregory's motion respecting the policy of the old board underwent another long discussion. After the delivery of many more speeches, the previous question, a motion proposed by Mr. H. Gover early in the debate, was carried by a majority of twenty-four to twenty-one, and Canon Gregory's proposition for a committee of inquiry fell to the ground.

At a meeting of the Charing-cross Hospital Council the following resolution has been unanimously agreed to:—"That steps be taken for forming and establishing a scholarship in connection with the medical school of this hospital, in memory of the celebrated African explorer, David Livingstone, formerly a student of the hospital, to be called 'The Livingstone Scholarship,' and that subscriptions be invited."

The weekly return of metropolitan pauperism shows that the total number of paupers last week was 108,838, of whom 37,224 were in workhouses and 71,614 received outdoor relief. Compared with the returns for the corresponding weeks in 1873, 1872, and 1871 respectively, these figures show a decrease of 10,671, 13,136, and 44,791. The number of vagrants relieved on the last day of the week was 626, of whom 457 were men, 135 women, and 34 children under sixteen.

With fitting honours, the earthly remains of the great Non-conformist divine, Thomas Binney, were, on Monday, interred in Abney Park Cemetery, nearly all the religious denominations in the metropolis being represented. We gave a Portrait of Mr. Binney last week.

The number of in-patients during the year was 1197; whilst the total number of attendances was 89,805. The board made an urgent appeal for further aid.

A meeting of the Victoria (Philosophical) Institute took place on Monday evening, when a paper on the Rules of Evidence as Applicable to the Credibility of History was read by Mr. Forsyth, Q.C., M.P. Starting with the axiom that it was as irrational to believe without any evidence as to disbelieve against sufficient evidence, Mr. Forsyth proceeded to analyse the amount of evidence which has, in the record of various events, been deemed sufficient to entitle those events to credit, and concluded by giving that referring to religion. An interesting discussion ensued.

At the annual court of the governors of King's College Hospital, yesterday week—the Duke of Cambridge in the chair—the subject of the dissension between that hospital and St. John's House came up for discussion. It was agreed, in a series of resolutions, that the matter should be referred to arbitration, that the meeting should stand adjourned, and that the re-election of the committee be confirmed.—Lord Hatherley has consented to act as friend, mediator, or arbitrator on behalf of the committee, on the understanding that Lord Selborne should stand in a similar relation to the sisters. Mr. Gladstone made both a speech and a motion in the interests of conciliation.

The hundred and fifty-ninth anniversary festival of the Society of Ancient Britons was celebrated, last Saturday evening, at Willis's Rooms, under the presidency of Sir Alexander Wood. The object which the society has in view is the education and maintenance of poor Welsh children; and at the present time there are 112 boys in the school, and forty-five girls are enjoying the benefits of the charity. The secretary announced subscriptions amounting to about £900. Music of a national character was played throughout the evening, and the band of the Royal Artillery, under the direction of Mr. Smyth, also enlivened the proceedings.

New schools, situated in the midst of a large new town between Westbourne Park and Notting-hill were formally opened on Thursday week by Mr. E. H. Currie, Vice-Chairman of the London School Board. The schools provide accommodation for 300 boys, 300 girls, and 500 infants, and have been erected at a cost of £6 14s. 4d. per head. The site and playground cover nearly an acre of ground. A similar school in Westmorland-road, Walworth, was opened on the previous evening. It provides accommodation for nearly 1100 children, and cost in all £13,561. By the end of the present year there will be eighty-eight board schools in London, with accommodation for 81,000 children; and at the present time there are 41,000 children actually in the schools of the London Board.

The Lord Mayor and Lady Mayoress, on Tuesday, entertained the members of the Common Council for the wards of Farringdon, Langbourn, Lime-street, Portsoken, Queenhithe, Tower, Vintry, and Walbrook at dinner, in the Egyptian Hall. Reed, Mr. Serjeant Simon, Mr. Samuda, Mr. Waring, and Mr. Watney. A few toasts germane to the question were given at intervals, the pauses in the entertainment being agreeably filled up by the singing of Madame Clara Suter, Miss Lydia Osborne, Miss Marion Severn, Mr. Montem Smith, and Mr. De Lacy.

Last week 2330 births and 1754 deaths were registered in London. After making due allowance for increase of population, the births were 199 below, whereas the deaths exceeded by 34, the average numbers in the corresponding week of the last ten years. The deaths included 1 from smallpox, 75 from measles, 13 from scarlet fever, 5 from diphtheria, 69 from whooping-cough, 34 from different forms of fever, and 16 from diarrhoea. The deaths referred to diseases of the respiratory organs and phthisis, which in the two previous weeks had been 607 and 595, rose last week to 667, and exceeded the corrected average by 86: 304 resulted from bronchitis, 164 from phthisis, and 125 from pneumonia. Different forms of violence caused 55 deaths: 50 were the result of negligence or accident, including 19 from fractures and contusions, 9 from burns and scalds, 4 from drowning, 2 from poison, and 10 of infants under one year of age from suffocation. The death of an organ metal-pipe maker resulted from lead colic. Three cases of suicide and one of infanticide were registered.

A council meeting of the Central Chamber of Agriculture was held, on Tuesday, at the Salisbury Hotel. Reports from the local taxation committee and the committee on unexhausted improvements having been read, the council, by a considerable majority, agreed to a resolution, moved by Mr. Albert Pell, M.P., approving the principle of compensation to tenants for the unexhausted value of their improvements, and to landlords for the dilapidations or deteriorations caused by default of the tenant, and desiring that security for this purpose, where not given by lease or agreement, should be provided for by legislation, subject only to the written consent of the landlord in the case of permanent improvements.—A deputation from the chamber had an interview with the Chancellor of the Exchequer, on Wednesday, in Downing-street, and urged upon him the desirableness of repealing the malt tax. Mr. Joshua Fielden, M.P., Mr. Storer, M.P., Mr. G. F. Muntz, and other speakers having addressed the right hon. Baronet, Sir Stafford Northcote promised to give the matter his most serious consideration.

Jean Luie, charged with perjury and bigamy, was on Thursday committed for trial.

The Board of Trade inquiry into the running down of the Rainbow in Dublin Bay by the screw-steamer Meteor was concluded on Wednesday. The Court suspended the certificate of George Anderson, master of the Meteor, for three months. One man was drowned by the accident, two were saved by the steamer, and one had a narrow escape.

It is announced in Tuesday's Gazette that Mr. Edward Strathean Gordon, Q.C., Dean of the Faculty of Advocates, has been appointed Lord Advocate for Scotland. Mr. Young, late Lord Advocate, took his seat, on Tuesday, as one of the Judges in the Court of Session. He takes the title of Lord Young.

The following is a list of the ships and number of emigrants sent out to New Zealand by the agent-general for that colony during February:—The Vernon, for Canterbury, with 320 souls; Atrato, s.s., Otago and Canterbury, 765; Schiehallion, Hawke's Bay, 165; La Hogue, Wellington, 443; James N. Fleming, Otago, 367; Rooparell, Auckland, 361; Janet Court, Otago, 350; Ballochmyle, Canterbury, 480: total, 3251 souls.

According to the returns supplied by the emigration officials at Liverpool, it appears 5590 persons emigrated from that port for various places during the last month, being a decrease of 322 upon the number in February, 1873. There sailed to the United States twenty-five ships under the provisions of the Government Emigration Act, with 4838 passengers; and thirty-two ships not "under the Act" to various places, carrying 752 passengers.

A convict named Moor, undergoing a sentence of twenty years' penal servitude at Portland, contrived, under cover of a dense fog, to make his escape on Monday night. After having been at liberty for thirty-five hours, during which time he could not have tasted food, he was recaptured on the break-water. He had fashioned a raft from the timbers of a wrecked ship, and was endeavouring to put out to sea; but, being nearly famished, he made no resistance when he was discovered.

The will of the late Lord Westbury was again in dispute before the Master of the Rolls on Tuesday, owing to a difficulty about a sum of £10,000 which the late Lord had agreed to provide for his son's wife and her children. His will differed in many important respects from his covenant in the marriage settlement; but Sir G. Jessel, after commenting on the "extraordinary obscurity" of both documents, made an order giving to the parties interested the sum they expected to receive.

The foundation-stone of new schools, to accommodate 400 children, was laid, yesterday week, at St. James's, Waltham-stow, by Mr. Richard Foster. Messrs. Knowles and Foster are building a splendid memorial church, at a cost of £20,000, and the parishoners have undertaken to provide schools. The ceremony was performed in the presence of a numerous company, the customary service being conducted by the Vicar, the Rev. T. H. Grantham Robinson. After the ceremony a sermon was preached in St. James's Church by the Rev. Canon Gregory, when the offertory, in behalf of the new schools, amounted to £200.

The parishoners and members of the church choir of Atcham, Salop, have presented their late pastor, the Rev. G. H. A. Bentley, with testimonials, to mark the esteem in which he was held during the period of eight months which has elapsed since he succeeded to the charge of the parish on the death of the Rev. Henry Burton. One testimonial consisted of a handsome travelling-clock, and was presented by Mrs. Linell, the wife of the oldest resident of the parish; the other, which was a quarto Bible, was presented by Miss Jane Mullins on behalf of the choir. Mr. Bentley has accepted a living in Warwickshire. A clock and candlesticks, together with a purse of £725, have been presented to the Rev. B. F. Smith, M.A., Vicar of Rusthall, Kent, Hon. Canon of Canterbury Cathedral, Diocesan Inspector of Schools in the diocese of Canterbury, on his removal to the rectory of Crayford, from the parishoners of St. Paul's, Rusthall, and other friends.

They will commence in each place on Monday, June 1.

FINE ARTS.

The Council of the Royal Academy who will select the works for the forthcoming exhibition consists of the following members:—Messrs. Armitage, Cooke, Cousins, Dobson, Faed, Herbert, Horsley, Lewis, Millais, Stocks, Street, and Ward. The hanging committee will be Messrs. Armitage, Herbert, Horsley, and Ward. Mr. Marshall will arrange the sculpture, Mr. Smirke the architectural designs, and Mr. Cousins the engravings. Works of painting, architecture, or engraving intended for the ensuing exhibition must be sent in on Monday, 30th, or Tuesday, the 31st inst.; and works of sculpture on Wednesday, April 1.

The exhibition at the Royal Academy of the works of Sir Edwin Landseer (which closes on Saturday next) has proved more attractive, and consequently more successful financially, than any previous winter exhibition at Burlington House of works by old masters.

The exhibition of Mr. Holman Hunt's "Shadow of Death," at the neighbouring gallery of the New British Institution, in Old Bond-street, maintains its extraordinary popularity with little diminution. A remarkable evidence of the wide-spread interest this picture has excited is afforded by the fact of the production of a French pamphlet containing a "descriptive, historical, and critical notice" of the picture by Dr. Le Roy de Sainte-Croix, a well-known French writer on art. If we cannot agree with the Doctor on all points, he has unquestionably given a very able and eloquent account of the picture, uniting critical acumen to a generously-appreciative spirit. Since M. Berger was smitten with the novel charms of the pre-Raphaelite and other British pictures in the Paris International Exhibition of '55, no such tribute has been paid by a foreigner to British art. As far as we remember, no British picture has ever before attained the honour of such elaborate consideration and warm applause from a French critic.

Mr. Fahey has resigned his office of secretary to the Institute of Painters in Water Colours—a post he had held for nearly forty years.

Since the death of Mrs. Bowes (Countess of Montalbo), the wife of Mr. John Bowes, of Barnard Castle and Streatham Castle, which took place about three weeks back, at the family residence in Paris, it has been announced that the palatial building now in course of erection at Barnard Castle has, together with the important collections and the park belonging thereto, been munificently bequeathed to the inhabitants of the town of Barnard Castle. The collections, which are large and very valuable, consist of pictures, statues, ceramic and other works of art, and curiosities, including the almost unrivalled collection of Japanese and other Oriental enamels, &c., lately exhibited at the Liverpool Arts Club. The collections were formed by Mr. and Mrs. Bowes during a long series of years, and the handsome edifice in the style of the French Renaissance at Barnard Castle designed to contain them was commenced towards the close of 1869. It will probably be some years before the museum can be thrown open to the public, so great is the amount of carving and ornamentation both externally and internally. In accordance with the wish of Mrs. Bowes, a chapel will be erected near the museum, in which her remains will eventually repose. The magnificent gift is, it appears, to be named "The Josephine and John Bowes Museum and Park."

The extensive restoration of Worcester Cathedral is nearly completed, and the cathedral will be reopened for Divine service on the 8th of next month. By that time it is expected that all which will remain to be done will be the lighting up of the choir and the filling the west window with painted glass.

The series of statues representing some of the more famous characters in the Waverley novels which have been on exhibition for some time past in the north octagon of the Royal Scottish Academy have been placed in the lower niches of the Scott Monument at Edinburgh. The statues, twenty-three in number, have been executed by various artists, and include the following personages:—Jeanie Deans, Dumbiedykes, Leicester, Amy Robsart, Edith of Lorne, The Baron of Bradwardine, Flora M'Ivor, the Glee Maiden, Hal o' the Wynd, Friar Tuck, Rebecca, Saladin, Minna and Magnus Troil, Richard Cœur de Lion, Queen Mary, Halbert Glendinning, King James VI., Diana Vernon, Baillie Nicol Jarvie, The Bruce, Edie Ochiltree, and Old Mortality.

Among other pictures destroyed in the fire at the Pantechnicon that we have not yet mentioned, we regret to hear of the loss of the collection belonging to Sir Frederic Henry Sykes, which included four valuable works by Gainsborough. One of these was an unusually large and important example of the master, containing a portrait of Sir Francis Sykes, of Basildon, Sir Frederic's grandfather, two horses, groom, and dog. The picture measured about 12 ft. in width by 9 ft. or 10 ft. in height.

Our art-contemporary the Portfolio has lately attained in the average quality of its etched illustrations a degree of excellence which deserves hearty recognition and encouragement. The accomplished art-critic and charming writer Mr. Hamerton, who is the editor of and the largest contributor to the Portfolio, has, by his admirable work on etching and the examples, both foreign and British, which he has caused to be published, done more than any other to popularise this fascinating but hitherto, in this country, neglected art. A new feature in our contemporary is a series of etchings by eminent hands from pictures in the National Gallery. The number for the current month (March) contains an etching by M. C. Waltner from one of Rembrandt's portraits of himself—that painted when he was in the thirty-third year of his age. When we say that the etching is not unworthy of the portrait, and would not disgrace the prince of etchers himself, we could hardly offer higher praise; and if the Portfolio maintains the present standard of its illustrations and letterpress it will become an art-work of permanent value and interest.

The first number of a new series of the Illustration Horticole has been published in an English version, and deserves a line of commendation in this column in virtue of its excellent coloured lithographic illustrations of new flowers.

A new cahier of etchings by that rising etcher, M. C. Storm de Gravesande, lies before us. Though unequal in merit, some of the examples evince a marked advance upon those we noticed last year, and may well be coveted by the most fastidious collector. A very striking and manly etching is "The Port of Honfleur": the bristling masts of the shipping are in effective contrast with the soft landscape distance, the horizontal lines of the quays, and the water—the play and twinkle of the water as it chafes within its narrowed limits in the port being expressed with a felicity we have seldom seen equalled. Excellent, also, are some studies on the coast of Normandy, with rocks and fishermen telling dark against the shining shallows and calm luminous sea. M. de Gravesande is likewise successful in characteristic landscape foreground, as in a study of an old water-mill and other subjects.

The Marquis of Salisbury has been unanimously elected to the chairmanship of the Middlesex Sessions.

The Extra Supplement.

"FIRST SIGHT OF ENGLAND."

Speed to us on our sea, ye Royal Pair,
Our English Alfred and his Princess fair,
Whom Russia gives to English wedded life,
So newly made a Husband and a Wife!

The gladness of our love shall burst aflame
For thee, dear Lady, sweet in Woman's youth,
As when, eleven years ago, in truth,
Thy husband's brother's wife from Denmark came.

Marie and Alexandra, Northern brides!
The honours of both husbands at your sides
Are worthy of your birthrank; Europe hails
The British names of Edinburgh and Wales!

Thy sire, belov'd Grand Duchess, reigns as one
From Baltic sands to far Kamtschatka's shore;
He curbs the Scythian, he reclaims the Hun,
He lifts the serf to freedom. Who does more?

Great is the Czar, and we believe him good;
We dare to trust him, though we once withstood,
And would again, did Russia look that way,
The foul attempt to filch an Eastern prey.

There, in the silent steppes of Asia vast,
Wasted by lawless rapine, seared and chill,
Haunt of barbarian hordes for ages past,
Let his benevolence repair the ill.

There let him rule; may God his sceptre bless!
England has other tasks, we think not less.
"Ships, colonies, and commerce," are the means,
Comfort the end, for all who are our Queen's.

Is this our only mission upon earth?
Is this our noble errand on the wave?
Nay, God forbid! Else would I trace my birth,
As willingly to savage or to slave.

For Justice and Humanity; for Him
Who came, our Brother, when our life was dim,
And walked and talked with us, and showed the road;
For erring Man to find his home in God;

For sacred Truth and Right, that all may see,
That all may serve, His principles of peace,
For these is Britain great. O may it be,
Russia for ends like these may still increase!

So, Princess, have I met thee on the sea,
With greeting verse that speaks our love of thee,
But, treating firmly of a graver theme,
Spares one true thought from a romantic dream.

Come, Lady, with thy Husband! We will pray
For him and thee, and for the Mother-Queen,
Both yours and ours, that many a happy day
Shed on your palaces its light serene.

As for thy Sister, Alexandra, when
The elder Prince, our chief of British men,
Our King that shall be, took her by the hand,
A joyful cry of blessing filled our land!

SKETCHES OF ST. PETERSBURG.

When our Special Artist, five or six weeks ago, was in the capital of the Russian Empire awaiting the marriage of his Royal Highness the Duke of Edinburgh to the Grand Duchess Marie, his busy pencil found a variety of incidental subjects amongst the population of that city. A page or two of these sketches of different class types may be entertaining to the large number of English readers who have not yet visited St. Petersburg, and their truthfulness will certainly be acknowledged by those who may chance to have done so. In the popular cheap markets, not the Gostinnoi Dvor, which is for customers with fuller purses, but the Apraxin Rinok and the Tshukin Dvor, and the crowded area of the Sennaia Ploschad, one may study the aspect and habits of plebeian life, so well described by the German writer, J. G. Kohl, often quoted in Murray's Handbook. These picturesque though sordid details of a foreign metropolis are quite worthy of attention, when one has seen enough of vast and stately palaces, or solemn, superb, and gorgeously decorated churches. (The moujik—that is to say, the servile and labouring Russian (as the social respectability of free labour is there unrecognised)—is a very good sort of fellow, and so is his brother or cousin, the rural peasant. These "black people," uncouth and rough in their outside garb and figures, have yet much good-humour, patient endurance, and fidelity, with other virtues not too common anywhere in the world. Costermongers, as we should call them in London, fill several compartments of our page of Engravings this week. The streets of St. Petersburg, as of other European cities, resound with the cries of walking fish-vendors, orange-vendors, women selling woollen stockings and other hosiery, boys who want you to buy a box of matches, and other itinerant pedlars of diverse petty trades. There is a great difference, indeed, according to the season and time of year, in the nature of their commodities and their way of soliciting custom. The winter cold at St. Petersburg is not to be trifled with by standing about to haggle over a purchase of two kopecks. Of this we need little more testimony if we but glance at the huge and thick wrappings, the capes and hoods lined with fur, in the dress of those worthy citizens grouped in the centre of the page. Beneath them is the portrait of a gentleman whose whole soul is intent on preserving the warmth of his body, with an atmospheric temperature of 30 degrees below the freezing point.

THE LATE MR. SHIRLEY BROOKS.

The lamented death, on Monday week, of this accomplished and amiable man of letters, who had been many years connected with the Illustrated London News, was briefly recorded in our last. He was interred on Saturday in the Kensal-green Cemetery, in the presence of a few of his many attached personal friends. One of these, an old colleague of Shirley Brooks in that familiar journal of harmless wit and wholesome fun, over which our late contributor had recently presided, has furnished us with the following notice to accompany our engraving of his portrait:—

"The Silver Cord" is broken! and near the graves of Leech and Thackeray, with whom he was so long and so pleasantly associated in life, lies the second editor of Punch, Shirley Brooks. It seems now to the writer of this memoir a strange and rather formal way of mentioning his friend to put those two names in conjunction. He who is gone from us was to us so recently only "Shirley!" Indeed, we, his intimates, only spoke of him, only addressed him, as "Shirley." But henceforth, till Time the Consoler shall have done his work, we shall be speaking of him, no doubt, as we speak with fond reverence of the dead. How hard it will yet be for us to realise, even in accustoming our ears to the words "Poor Shirley!" that he is no longer bodily in our midst!

When the present writer first knew him, the names of Douglas Jerrold and Gilbert & Beckett had been added some time before to the death-roll of our English humourists. But at the Punch dinner, at Messrs. Bradbury and Evans', still gathered round Mark Lemon's presidential chair, were Thackeray, John Leech, Tom Taylor, Shirley Brooks, John Tenniel, Percival Leigh, Charles Keene, and Horace Mayhew. Out of these Shirley was Mark's right-hand man and trusty counsellor. It would happen, nine times out of ten, that the original suggestion for the cartoon of the following week emanated from Shirley. Then the idea was taken up, and was tossed from one to the other, until it arrived at the shape in which it was to be presented to the public; and in this process Shirley was invaluable. Among his fellow-workers Shirley's habit of throwing down his desert-knife when the work was done and the cartoon settled became proverbial. Not until that desert-knife of Shirley's had rattled on the board did Mark Lemon lean back and proclaim that now the "sweetest morsel of the night" had arrived, when the contributors were to proceed "from labour to refreshment."

Shirley Brooks was one of the few literary men in our time who have cultivated letter-writing as an art. His correspondence must have been enormous. He used to say that anyone could find time to write a letter. He modelled his epistolary style on that of Horace Walpole. Throughout two sheets of letter-paper, closely and legibly written, he would chat on the news of the day, on social topics, and on personal matters most amusingly. His letters were eminently readable; not the shortest of them but had some epigram well worth preservation.

He wrote rapidly and without effort. His memory was prodigious, and his power of happily applying quotations to the incident of the moment was a matter of constant admiration, even to those who were necessarily brought into almost daily intercourse with him. He seemed to read everything, and, what is more, could make use of anything.

Shirley Brooks was undoubtedly a brilliant epigrammatist, but in spite of an affectation of cynicism—which, after all, hurt no one—he was at all times and in any company a genial and excellent companion. If ever there was a man who in his heart of hearts was not a cynic, it was Shirley Brooks. Witness his genuine affection for his friends, and their grief for him whom death has taken from among them. Witness, too, his fondness for children. How, on a summer afternoon, he would gather them around him, and read the awful poem of "The Jabberwock" and interest them thoroughly in "Alice's Adventures in Wonderland!" "Read to children first," he used to say, "and they will enjoy for themselves afterwards." His little audience were always delighted with his reading. He kept, too, a safe nook in his memory for everybody's birthday, and he used to delight in sending to ladies and little girls some little picture, with an epigram or a couplet written beneath it, and signed "S. B.," with the usual "Many happy returns!"

Few who met him would have believed Shirley Brooks to have been just on sixty. The last thing one would have accused him of was an approach to old age. He was really young; and, in spite of the grey hairs, he looked young. Yet he was, in length of years, on the border of sixty. Let us now pass to a very slight notice of his works.

At the commencement of his literary career he wrote burlesques, generally in collaboration with others. The dialogue in Shirley's plays has ever been more or less brilliant, never commonplace. His "Creole," especially, is a good piece, in plot and situation as well as in dialogue. He was fond of alluding to these early burlesques, which he used playfully to represent as masterpieces by an author whose name he had forgotten. "They were written," he said, "when people could write burlesques, and other people could act them." His last effort in this direction was "Timour the Tartar," which he wrote in conjunction with Mr. Oxenford, during Mr. Robson's management at the Olympic.

Before 1854 he wrote, with Angus B. Reach, Albert Smith, and Robert Brough, in the Man in the Moon; but that year began his connection with Punch. Of his writings in Punch, the best known to the public is, perhaps, his "Essence of Parliament." As a pointed, satirical summary of the debates of the week, it is simply inimitable. For this he was specially qualified by his long apprenticeship in the reporters' gallery, and by his work on the Morning Chronicle.

There is not space here to dwell upon his performances as a clever novelist. A short time before his death he had undertaken to write a history of Leicester-square—that is, of the historic notabilities who have lived there. It would have been to Shirley a most congenial work, for he loved the Georgian era, its men and its literature. This work will be undertaken by other hands.

To the public Shirley Brooks leaves the legacy of his literary labours—his plays, his novels, and abundance of his wit, both in verse and prose, in the pages of twenty-two volumes of Punch. But to us, his friends, "Dear old Shirley" leaves a legacy of pleasant memories, of kind words, and of loving deeds. To us, indeed, who really knew him so well, remain the many sweet souvenirs of a long, sincere, and unbroken friendship—unbroken, let us humbly hope, even by the grave. With these in our minds will ever be associated the recollection of the handsome face, the youthful manner, the playful, brilliant wit, and the genial humour of him whom we loved, but whose tongue and pen are now at rest for ever, our friend and fellow-labourer, Shirley Brooks.

We cordially adopt and repeat the above expressions of personal regard, to which, if it were needful, we could add that of a high appreciation of Shirley Brooks' literary tact and skill, his unfailing good taste, and pleasant manner of writing. But the readers of this Journal have long been accustomed to enjoy these graces of our late contributor, in "By the Way," and the preceding series of "Nothing in the Papers." He also, before assuming the editorial chair at the Punch office, wrote for the Illustrated London News a weekly article on the political topics of the day.

It may here be stated that Charles Shirley Brooks—his full name—was born in 1815, being son of the eminent architect, William Brooks. He was educated at a City public school, and was articled to a solicitor, but left that profession for the work of a newspaper reporter, from which, like Charles Dickens, he passed by an easy transition to light literature and to the composition of plays and novels. He was sent by the Morning Chronicle to examine and describe the condition of the peasantry in the South of Russia, after the repeal of our corn laws, and his letters were reprinted in a separate volume. His best novels are "Aspen Court," "The Gordian Knot," and "The Silver Cord," which have gone through several editions. Mr. Shirley Brooks has left a widow and two sons. The Portrait we give is from a photograph by Messrs. Elliott and Fry.

THE END OF THE TICHBORNE TRIAL.

WAITING FOR THE VERDICT.

"HOW HAS IT GONE, SIR?"

THE CLAIMANT'S FAREWELL.

THE END OF THE TICHBORNE TRIAL.

The enormously lengthy trial of Thomas Castro, alias Arthur Orton, the claimant of the Tichborne estates and title, for perjury committed by him in the action of ejectment he brought to obtain that property, was concluded in the Court of Queen's Bench on Saturday last. This trial had been continued during 188 days' sittings of the Court; it began on April 23 of last year. The former trial, in the Court of Common Pleas, occupied 103 court days—having been commenced on May 10, 1871, before Chief Justice Bovill, and finished on March 6, 1872, when the plaintiff was nonsuited.

The result of the whole case is the conviction of the defendant on all the charges in the indictment for perjury, and his sentence to fourteen years' penal servitude—that is, to seven years' penal servitude for each of two different acts of perjury. There were two distinct counts in the indictment, each constituting in effect a different indictment—the first founded upon the statements of the defendant in his examination at the trial, the second on his affidavit in Chancery in 1868. The first count contains about twenty-four distinct charges of perjury, twelve of them on the Tichborne part of the case and twelve on the Orton part of the case.

The charges on the Tichborne part of the case are these:—(1) His statements that he was Roger Tichborne, (2) that he lived in Paris until 1845, (3) that Chatillon was his tutor, (4) that in 1845 he came to England to attend his uncle's funeral, (5) that he had been a student at Stonyhurst, (6) that he had been an officer in the Army, (7) that in July or August, 1852, he saw Miss Doughty, (8) that in those months he had seduced her, (9) that he had after June 22 of that year last seen her, (10) that he saw Miss Hales in the company of her mother at Canterbury, (11) that he had been at Bilton Grange, the seat of Mr. and Mrs. Washington Hibbert, (12) that he had not been to Lloyd's Rooms.

There were ten charges of perjury on the defendant's statements in the affidavit as to his being Roger Tichborne, similar to those in his oral evidence, adding these:—That (8) in March, 1853, he took his passage to Valparaiso and in due course arrived there; (9) that from that time to April, 1854, he travelled in South America; (10) that in April, 1854, he took his passage at Rio in the Bella for New York.

The charges as to the Orton case are that he falsely swore:—(1) That he is not Arthur Orton, (2) that he never was at Wapping before 1866, (3) that he never went by the name of Arthur Orton, (4) that he did not leave England in the Ocean in April, 1848, (5) and did not arrive at Valparaiso in November, 1848, (6) that he was not at Melipilla, in Chili, between 1848 and 1851, (7) that he did not in 1851 come back from Chili to England in the Jessie Miller, (8) that he had not seen Mary Anne Loder before 1867 and did not keep company with her in 1851, (9) and that he had never written letters to her, (10) that he did not in 1852 go to Hobart-town in the Middleton, (11) that he had not seen Orton's sisters more than once before the trial, (12) that he had been charged at Castlemaine with horse-stealing in company with Arthur Orton.

These charges of perjury, upwards of thirty in number, though committed upon two distinct occasions, all those committed upon each occasion constituting in law a distinct count, resolved themselves really into these three—the statement that he was Roger Tichborne, the denial that he was Arthur Orton, and the story of the seduction of Miss Doughty (now Lady Radcliffe).

The Lord Chief Justice, Sir Alexander Cockburn, in his exhaustive charge, which has taken eighteen entire days, has fully treated every part of the case. Having commented upon all the details of the evidence, his Lordship on Saturday morning said, in conclusion, that the jury must consider whether all these facts, converging to the same conclusion, did or did not bring home to their minds the conviction of the defendant's guilt. He was entitled certainly to the benefit of a doubt; but then it must be a reasonable doubt, and not one which was vain and fantastic. And if their minds had no real, substantial doubt, they must not shrink from acting according to their conscientious convictions; undeterred by those improper appeals which had been made by the defendant's counsel to popular prejudices or passion. The Judges, said the Lord Chief Justice, had been denounced in such terms as had never yet been used by an advocate in addressing an English Court. But he could afford to disregard those attacks; he had done his duty conscientiously, and he now left it to the jury to do theirs.

The other Judges, Mr. Justice Mellor and Mr. Justice Lush, briefly expressed their entire concurrence in what had fallen from the Lord Chief Justice, and the jury then—about noon—retired to consider their verdict.

The jury were absent less than half an hour, and on their return into court the foreman, in a firm tone, declared that they found the defendant guilty, and he then read from a paper their written findings—(1) that the defendant is not Roger Tichborne, (2) that he is Arthur Orton, and (3) that he did not seduce Miss Doughty.

The jury added that there was no foundation for the suggestion that there had ever been any improper familiarities between Roger Tichborne and his cousin, and they further appended to their verdict the expression of their regret that the prisoner's counsel should have indulged in groundless accusations against those concerned for the prosecution, and against certain witnesses for the prosecution.

Mr. Justice Mellor then proceeded to pass sentence upon the prisoner, declaring the entire concurrence of the Judges with the verdict of the jury, dwelling upon the heinous nature of his crime, not only in the gross imposture he had attempted in order to rob an infant of his inheritance, but in the infamous perjuries by which he had supported his imposture, and especially the foul and abominable perjury by which he had sought to blast the character of Lady Radcliffe. After declaring that the sentence to be passed was quite inadequate to meet the enormity of the crime, the learned Judge sentenced him on each of the two counts to seven years' penal servitude, making together fourteen years' penal servitude.

The defendant, who had stood at the bar to receive the sentence, now asked whether he might be allowed to say a few words. The Lord Chief Justice replied "No; certainly not." The defendant then shook hands with his principal counsel, Dr. Kenealy, and was immediately removed from the court, in the custody of Mr. Frayling, jun., the tipstaff. He had, as soon as the jury came in with their verdict, handed his gold watch and chain to young Bogle, one of his partisans and witnesses, to save them from being taken from him as a convict prisoner.

On leaving the court he was taken into a room which had been used as a waiting-room for witnesses. Here he was searched, and then taken out of the court by the doors in Westminster Hall, nearly opposite the members' entrance to the House of Commons. He was in custody of Mr. Superintendent Mott, accompanied by Colonel Henderson, Colonel Pearson, and Inspector Denning. There were loungers about the hall and a crowd watching that entrance to the court where the public have hitherto sought for admission. When they caught sight of the prisoner's well-known form in custody they made a rush to the door of the House of Commons, but a strong body of police was stationed there and kept the crowd from following. The prisoner was taken through the corridors and lobbies of the House of Lords across the courtyard to the foot of the Victoria Tower, where he was placed in the police omnibus—a long, dark-painted vehicle, with whitewashed windows, in which prisoners are taken round to be identified when questions arise as to former convictions. The crowd lingered about the precincts of the hall and courts for more than an hour, apparently in the belief that the prisoner was still in the building, but as the police were withdrawn the crowd gradually melted away. From the Victoria Tower entrance the prisoner was driven over Lambeth Bridge, along Stamford-street, and finally lodged in Newgate about half-past one in the afternoon. He was placed in the same cell that he occupied in March and April, 1872, when Chief Justice Bovill committed him for trial. He now wears the prison dress, has the prison diet, and is employed in picking oakum.

ROYAL INSTITUTION LECTURES.

ELEMENTS OF VEGETABLE LIFE.

Professor W. C. Williamson, F.R.S., of Owens College, Manchester, gave the first of a course of five lectures on Cryptogamic Vegetation on Thursday week. In his introductory remarks upon the distinction between phanerogamous plants, such as have conspicuous flowers, and cryptogamous plants (including ferns, mosses, lichens, and fungi), which are flowerless, he characterised the former as being mainly formed upon one archetype, while the latter consists of a number of groups of wonderful diversity; nevertheless, he said, a close and harmonious relationship has been discovered between the phanerogamia and cryptogamia. He next commented on the elements of all vegetable structure, beginning with the cell, composed of protoplasm—a compound of oxygen, hydrogen, nitrogen, and carbon—and an outer covering, termed the "primordial utricle" by Arthur Hentroy. After explaining the "cell theory" of Schwann and Schleiden, which supposed the cell to be indivisible, he referred to the researches of Huxley, who proved it to be, on the contrary, infinitely subdivisible; and also described the modes of cell-reproduction by fissure and by budding. The structure of vessels and fibres was then described. The question of the spontaneous generation of bacteria, the subject of the researches of Pasteur, Bastian, and others, the Professor considered to be still involved in doubt. After commenting on the important microscopic researches of Ehrenberg, and highly commending that philosopher's nomenclature, the Professor pointed out his physiological error in considering certain infusorial plants to be animals, and, as an example, referred to the protocoecus pluvialis, which at an early stage in its life possesses locomotive organs, yet is undoubtedly a plant. In conclusion, he described palmellæ or red snow, found in Arctic and Alpine regions, and its allies, which consist of vegetable cells containing coloured protoplasm, analogous to the hæmaglobin in blood.

MEN OF SCIENCE, THEIR NATURE AND NURTURE.

Mr. Francis Galton, F.R.S., gave a discourse, at the Friday evening meeting, Feb. 27, on the qualities which characterise the English men of science of the present day. He eschewed the possibility of defining and measuring the amount of any of those qualities, and concluded by summarising the opinions of these men on the merits and demerits of their own education, and giving his own interpretation of what, according to their own showing, they would have preferred. His data were obtained from a large collection of autobiographical notes, most obligingly communicated to him in response to his requests, from the larger part of the leading members of the scientific world. He had addressed 180, who, being Fellows of the Royal Society, had, in addition, gained medals or filled posts of recognised scientific position; and had received 115 replies, of which eighty or ninety were full and minute answers to his long and varied series of questions. He dealt with only a small part of this valuable material, referring to a forthcoming work for the rest. As regards the chief qualities, in the order of their prevalence among the scientific men, they were—1, Energy both of mind and body; 2, Good health; 3, Great independence of character; 4, Tenacity of purpose; 5, Practical business habits; and, 6, what was usually the salt of the whole, strong innate tastes for science generally or for some branch of it. He illustrated his remarks by reading many anonymous extracts from the returns, and explained in what way a notable deficiency in any of the above-mentioned qualities would tend to disqualify a man from succeeding in science. As to the measurement of qualities, it was argued that the law of constancy in vital statistics might be taken for granted, being evidenced by the experience of insurance offices, always with the proviso that the facts are gathered with discretion on well-known general principles. After elucidating this by experiments and diagrams, Mr. Galton said that the habit should be encouraged in biographies of giving copious illustrations, which would tend to rank a man among his contemporaries in respect of every quality that is discussed, in order to give data for appraising those qualities in terms of the statistical scale. By a general system of measurement, social and political, science would be greatly raised in precision. As regards education, he disavowed speaking of that which is suitable to boys generally, but summarised the replies of the scientific men with reference to their own special experience, and, notwithstanding the diversity of branches of science, he found unanimity in their replies. They commonly expressed a hatred of grammar and classics, the old-fashioned system being utterly distasteful to them. The following seems the programme which they most liked:—1, Mathematics rigorously taught up to their capacity and copiously illustrated and applied, so as to throw as much interest into the pursuit as possible. 2, Logic. 3, Some branch of science (observation, theory, and experiment); some boys taking one branch and some another to ensure variety of interests under the same roof. 4, Accurate drawing of objects connected with that branch of science. 5, Mechanical handiwork. These to be rigorously taught. The following not to be taught rigorously:—Reading good books (not trashy ones) in literature, history, and art; and a moderate knowledge of the more useful languages taught in the easiest way, probably by going abroad in vacations. It is abundantly evident that the leading men of science have not been made by much or regular teaching. They craved for variety. Those who had it, praised it; and those who had it not, concurred in regretting it. There were none who had the old-fashioned high and dry education who were satisfied with it. Those who came from the greater schools usually did nothing there, and have abused the system heartily. George Busk, Esq., F.R.S., the treasurer and vice-president, was in the chair.

MOHAMMEDANISM, OR ISLAM.

Mr. Bosworth Smith began his third lecture, on Saturday last, by remarking that the essence of the religion of Mohammed was not merely the sublime belief in the unity of God, though it would be difficult to over-estimate the effect of that upon the Arabs, but it was also the actual rule of a merciful and compassionate God over every detail of life. This doctrine was, of course, to be found in other faiths, but was not a mere plagiarism from them. Mohammedanism is a misnomer; the rightful name of the religion is Islam, for Mohammed taught his followers to worship his God, not himself. The other articles of faith, and the practical duties of Islam, the germs of which are to be found in other creeds, were then reviewed; and, in reference to pilgrimage, it was asserted to be really alien to both Mohammedanism and Christianity, and, in any case, merely a concession to human weakness. After glancing at the history of the Kaaba, it was remarked that in Islam, on the whole, the good outweighs the evil. While noticing in detail what Islam owed to the Talmud and to Judaism generally, Mr. Bosworth Smith adverted to the great loss sustained by all who were interested in the East by the death of Dr. Deutsch. The exclusive religious genius of the Jews rendered all Mohammed's efforts to coalesce with them abortive. The more prominent features of the Koran, which underlies the life of Islam, were then considered, together with the history of its composition and its text, its poetry, its rapid transitions and the chaos of its contents, and the phenomena of the prophet's fits of inspiration. To complete the general outlines of the system, the relation of Islam to Miracles, to Fatalism, and to Religious Wars had to be considered. Very different views have been held; but the Koran gives no uncertain sound; the only two exceptions to the course adopted by Mohammed being apparent, not real. In a new religion the wonder was not that it claimed to be founded on miracles, but that it should be able to profess to do without them. The lecturer said that different proofs are fitted for different ages; and that there is one line of thought apparent throughout the Gospels which harmonised with Mohammed's view of them. In regard to Fatalism, it is impossible in any religion to reconcile the conflicting dogmas of predestination and free-will, most creeds asserting the one in words, the other in acts. Mohammed, on the whole, even in the Koran, inclined to free-will, and his views of prayer were quite inconsistent with absolute predestination. The same doctrine has opposite effects on different natures, or in even the same natures in different circumstances. On the question of the wars of Islam and their being essential to the system, Mr. Bosworth Smith dwelt, first, upon the difference between the Mohammedan and the Christian idea of God, and traced minutely the process by which the Prophet came to the belief that the sword was a legitimate instrument of spiritual warfare. The mixture of earthly needs and spiritual aspirations made Mohammed at once a smaller and a greater man than he would otherwise have been. In reference to the attitude of the spiritual to the temporal power in Eastern and Western Christendom, allusion was made to the temporary advantage enjoyed by the Caliphs in the combination of the two in their hands. Never in the history of the world had there been such an exhibition of religious enthusiasm; and though the Arabs were semibarbarians in their conquests, they were not barbarous: they sowed the seeds of literature, of science, and of civilisation wherever they went. Holy war waged by Christians is in direct contravention of the spirit of their Founder; but, historically speaking, the contrast between the practice of the rival creeds is not sharp. Of the religious wars which the world has seen, the Mohammedan were not the worst in their object, in their methods, or in their results. The subject of the fourth and concluding lecture will be an estimate of the good and evil which the world owes to Mohammed, a survey of the condition and prospects of Mohammedanism now, the historic connection between it and Christianity, its points of difference as well as of resemblance, and, finally, how that connection ought to be regarded by Christians, and under what modifications the two creeds may work together for the good of humanity.

THE ARCHIMEDEAN PRINCIPLE.

Professor Tyndall, D.C.L., F.R.S., began his third lecture on the Physical Properties of Liquids and Gases, on Tuesday last, with a train of reasoning and experiments intended to demonstrate the truth of the principle of Archimedes, that "a body floating on a liquid or freely immersed in it loses a part of its weight equal to the weight of the liquid which it displaces." This principle, the Professor said, might be also thus expressed:—A body wholly immersed in a liquid is attracted towards the earth by a force equal to the difference of the attractions exerted upon the body and the liquid. Supposing, for example, that a body weighs 10 lb., and that an equal bulk of water weighs 8 lb. In the liquid it will be attracted downwards with a force of 2 lb. If, on the contrary, the body be 8 lb., and an equal bulk of liquid 10 lb., then the difference of 2 lb. would be a negative attraction, or, in other words, a repulsion; and the body, instead of sinking, would rise in the liquid, as if it had been repelled from the earth. The Professor then illustrated the operation of this principle in magnetism. By means of the electric lamp and a screen, a suspended globule of a magnetic liquid (protosulphate of iron), surrounded by water, was shown to be attracted by the electromagnet, but repelled when surrounded by a stronger solution of the protosulphate. After remarking that a solid placed in an upright cylinder is supported wholly by the base of the cylinder, and that it presses upon that base with a force equal to its weight, the Professor showed that the case is changed when a liquid is placed within the cylinder, since here the sides, as well as the base, bear the pressure. He then quoted Pascal, who says (in 1653), "If a vessel full of water closed on all sides have two openings, the one a hundred times as large as the other, and if each be supplied with a piston which fits exactly, a man pushing the small piston will exert a force which will equilibrate that of a hundred men pushing the piston which is a hundred times as large, and will overcome that of ninety-nine; and whatever may be the proportion of these openings, if the forces applied to the pistons be to each other as the openings, they will be in equilibrium. . . . And thus it appears that a vessel full of water is a new principle in mechanics, and a new machine, which will multiply force to any degree we choose." This principle having been fully illustrated by a series of experiments, and its effects exhibited in the construction and action of the hydrostatic press and hydrostatic bellows, Professor Tyndall concluded by describing the way in which Sir Joseph Whitworth has applied the hydrostatic press for the exclusion of the injurious bubbles of air from the molten steel when casting double rifle-barrels, the metal being thereby rendered perfectly compact.—In the notice of the last lecture it should have been stated that the tenacity, not the density, of mercury is increased by boiling.

At the next Friday evening meeting Dr. C. A. Wright, F.C.S., will give a discourse on the Chemical Changes accompanying the Smelting of Iron in Blast Furnaces; on Saturday next Mr. C. T. Newton, keeper of Greek and Roman Antiquities, British Museum, will begin a course of three lectures on Mr. Wood's Discoveries at Ephesus.

PROPAGATION OF DISEASE THROUGH THE AIR.

Professor Rutherford has written to us to state that his lectures at the Royal Institution have been usually reported in our pages with perfect accuracy, but that the notice of his last lecture on Respiration (inserted in our Number for Feb. 14, page 162) contains some errors. He did not say that the "air contains living amoebiform particles of protoplasm resembling the spores of fungi and the minute animalcules named bacteria;" nor did he say "that by the passage of these through the air disease may be propagated;" nor "that the propagation of fevers and other diseases is now attributed to poison in the form of particles of bacterial protoplasm carried through the atmosphere." He said that, if the air of an ordinary room be drawn through an aeroscope, so that its suspended particles may be collected, or if its moisture be condensed upon the perfectly-cleaned exterior of a glass vessel containing ice, an examination with the microscope reveals the presence of a great quantity of bodies—e.g., particles of sand, carbon, cotton, wool, fir-wood, starch, and such like, together with spores of fungi and particles of protoplasm which present amoebiform movements. Nothing is known regarding the nature of these amoeboid particles; but it is probable that some of them are the germs of infusoria—e.g., bacteria. In considering the propagation of disease through the air he stated that it is definitely known that certain skin diseases are due to the growth of fungi, and the spores of these fungi may be carried through the air and give rise to the disease in other individuals. He then passed from this tangible case to that of the putrefaction of meat, which is accompanied by an active growth of bacteria. Possibly the decomposition is produced by the growth of the bacterial protoplasm. If a piece of fresh meat be hung in a confined atmosphere near a piece of decomposing meat, it rapidly putrefies. This is most probably due to the contamination of the air with bacterial germs, the nature of which is unknown. Probably, however, they are fragments of the bacterial protoplasm. Vaccine lymph was then considered. The peculiar properties of this fluid appear to be due to its containing amoeboid particles of protoplasm. Under suitable conditions these vaccine germs can grow and multiply. It was then shown that the smallpox poison can pass through the air: and reference was made to the well-known experiment in which an animal was seized by smallpox after having breathed the air transmitted through a garment which had been worn by a person suffering from this disease. The nature of the poison is unknown; but it is probably a solid substance, for it clings tenaciously to clothes, paper, and similar substances. Perhaps it consists of protoplasts allied to those contained in vaccine lymph. The poison of various fevers, influenza, whooping-cough, cattle plague, and some other diseases can pass through the air, but the nature of the poison is entirely unknown.

MUSIC.

From Mr. Mapleson's prospectus of the season of Her Majesty's Opera, to commence at Drury-Lane Theatre on the 17th inst., we learn that Mesdames Christine Nilsson and Trebelli-Bettini, Mdles. Titiens, Alwina Valleria, Marie Roze, Baumermeister, and Justine Macvitz will reappear—two new prima-donnas having been gained by the engagement of Mdles. Lodi and Singelli, of whom report speaks highly. Other first appearances will be made by Signori Padalini and Ramin, tenors; Signori De Reschi and Galassi, baritones; Signori Perkins and Costa and Herr Dehrens, basses. In the three last-named divisions we find again the more or less well-known names of Signori Campanini, Naudin, Fancelli, Marchetti, Rinaldini, Fabrini, Agnesi, Rota, Borrelli, Campobello, Catalani, Zeboli, and Casaboni. Balfe's posthumous opera, "Il Talismano," is to be positively produced this season, with Madame Christine Nilsson in the principal female character, as promised last year, but unavoidably postponed. The same great singer will be again heard as Desdemona in Rossini's "Otello," as revived at this establishment in 1870. Mdle. Titiens is to appear as Elvira in a revival of Verdi's "Ernani" and as Queen Elizabeth in Donizetti's "Roberto Devereux," which opera has not been given in England for nearly thirty years. Italian versions of Auber's "Fra Diavolo" and "The Crown Diamonds" are to be produced—the former with Mdle. Lodi as Zerlina, the latter with Mdle. Singelli as Caterina. Besides these works, selections will be made from the already large repertoire of the establishment. Sir M. Costa continues as musical director and conductor, and M. Sainton as first violin and soloist. The pitch is this year to be lowered to the French standard—"le diapason normal."

The eighteenth series of Saturday afternoon concerts at the Crystal Palace has now reached the same number of performances. The programme of Saturday last included a new symphony by Mr. Ebenezer Prout, which was given for the first time. An organ concerto (with orchestral accompaniments) by the same composer was produced with much success at one of these concerts in 1872, as recorded at the time. Mr. Prout's new work is divided into four movements—an allegro, preceded by a short introduction, a large expressive, minuet and trio, and finale—in each of which there is much masterly writing, in the treatment of some effective themes; the instrumentation being rich, sonorous, and varied. The symphony was very favourably received, and Mr. Prout appeared on the platform in acknowledgment. In Beethoven's fourth pianoforte concerto (in G) Miss Emma Barnett achieved a great success. This young lady is a sister of Mr. J. F. Barnett, composer of the cantata, "The Ancient Mariner;" the oratorio, "The Raising of Lazarus," and other elaborate works; and the cadenzas introduced into the concerto on Saturday were written by him. Miss Barnett's performance was alike admirable in mechanism and style, the excellence of her rhythmic phrasing being remarkable in so young a player. She was greatly applauded and recalled. The overtures to "Anacreon" and "Masaniello," and vocal solos by Madame Lemmens-Sherrington and Mr. Bentham, completed the selection. At this week's concert Beethoven's music to "Egmont" is to be given, and the programme also includes the performance (for the first time in England) of Brahms's variations, for orchestra, on a theme by Haydn.

At the British Orchestral Society's third concert—on Thursday week—the symphony was Spohr's No. 4, the most elaborate of his nine works of the kind. Written in illustration of Carl Pfeiffer's "Die Weihe der Töne" ("The Consecration of Sound"), it can scarcely be held to have fulfilled the ambitious design of realising in music the subtle metaphysical emotions suggested by the poem; while, at the same time, it is largely characterised by grace and beauty, and in some instances by majesty and grandeur. In the former respects may be cited the first allegro, the "cradle-song," and the dance; the march, and the movement introducing the Ambrosian chorale being full of masterly power. It was given with much effect by the fine band of the society, although the tempo was generally taken too slow by Mr. Mount, the conductor, the same characteristic being his usual tendency. A new overture, by Mr. Alfred Holmes, was introduced at this concert. It belongs to a grand opera, "Inez de Castro," and displays merits and qualities somewhat similar to those of his overture to "Le Cid," performed at the Crystal Palace, and noticed by us last week. Like that, it was well received, the composer in this instance having appeared in acknowledgment.

A prominent feature at the concert now referred to was Mr. Franklin Taylor's refined performance of Beethoven's pianoforte concerto in G (No. 4), with the composer's cadenzas. Weber's overture to "Der Freischütz" (encored) and Beethoven's to "Fidelio," and several vocal pieces, charmingly sung by Miss Rose Hersee, completed the programme.

At the Popular Concert of Monday last Herr Joachim was again the leading violinist, and his grand style and tone and high executive skill were heard to special advantage in one of the greatest of the quartets of Beethoven—that in C sharp minor, which stands as No. 14 in the list of these works. The other executants in this and in Haydn's quartet in G, from op. 64, were Mr. L. Ries, Herr Straus, and Signor Piatti. Mr. Edward Dannreuther played with much effect the third of Schumann's sonatas for piano solo (in G minor), and he and Herr Joachim were associated in the first of Bach's sonatas for piano and violin. Mr. Bentham was the vocalist, and Mr. Zerbini the accompanist.

Mozart's "Così fan tutte" was performed at St. James's Theatre, on Monday night, for the benefit of Signor Monari-Rocca. This charming work—almost worthy of comparison with the more familiar "Le Nozze di Figaro"—was revived (after a long interval) during the winter season of Italian opera at St. George's Hall, Langham-place, in January last year, when, as again on Monday, Signor Monari-Rocca appeared in the character of Don Alfonso, and Signor Mottino as Guglielmo; other features of the cast having been changed as follows:—Fiordiligi, Madame Elena Corani; Dorabella, Mdle. Ribera; Despina, Madame Marini; and Ferrando, Signor Ramaccini. Some portions of the opera (especially in the concerted pieces) were given with much effect, others might be improved by repetition. A prominent feature in the performance was the excellence of the orchestra, which consisted of some of the best members of our opera bands, with Herr Pollitzer as leading violinist, and Signor Fiori as conductor, as at the revival of the opera already referred to.

The second of Mr. Coenen's chamber concerts took place at the Hanover-square Rooms on Wednesday evening, when his programme comprised Miss Agnes Zimmermann's "Suite" for piano, violin, and violoncello; and a similar piece, by M. Saint-Saens for violoncello and piano; the selection having concluded with an octet for stringed instruments by Herr J. Svendsen, a Norwegian composer.

The third of M. Gounod's new series of concerts is to take place this (Saturday) evening, when several of his compositions are to be performed, including some pieces from the successful "Jeanne d'Arc" music already noticed.

The third season of the Royal Albert Hall Choral Society is now nearly completed, all but one of the series of subscription concerts having taken place. On Thursday "St. Paul" was given—the principal singers announced having been Madame Otto-Alvsleben, Miss Sterling, Mr. Lewis Thomas, Mr. Smith, and Mr. Pyatt. At the last concert, on March 19, Mr. Arthur Sullivan's oratorio, "The Light of the World," is to be performed for the first time in London.

THEATRES.

It is gratifying to be able to record that great improvement has taken place in the performance, at the Princess's, of Mr. Will's "Mary Queen of Scots." The performers, having become familiar with the text, partake nightly more and more of its poetic spirit, and deliver it with an increasing degree of vital force. There are, indeed, peculiarities in Mr. Will's blank verse, and sometimes liberties which verge on licence, arising, we believe, from the author's anxiety to throw variety into its music.

Miss Marriott has again made her appearance on the London boards, and has acted at Sadler's Wells the parts of Romeo, Julia, and Margaret Elmore. For the present week she has assumed her favourite part of Jeannie Deans, in which she has been assisted by Miss Marston Leigh as Effie.

The Shakspearean revival at the Olympic has prospered well, and Miss Fowler has gained new laurels as Beatrice in "Much Ado about Nothing." Mr. Righton's Dogberry also merits much commendation. The actor himself gave his name to a piece produced on Saturday under the title of "Mr. Righton's Adventures with a Russian Princess." The reader will recollect a similar piece some time ago with Mr. Buckstone's name prefixed; and the present is a revival of Mr. Slingsby Laurence's topical farce, with the modifications made requisite or expedient by the lapse of time. The extravaganza is in the shape of a dream, and the adventures are appropriately fantastic. Miss Annie Taylor supported the part of the Princess in a very graceful manner.

Mrs. John Wood has been compelled by other engagements to withdraw from the representation of Mr. Reade's new play at the Queen's. The part of Philippa is now sustained most effectively by Miss Ellen Terry; and the added novelty is likely to give a fresh lease to the life of a wonderfully attractive drama. Since its first production many alterations for the better have been made in its dialogue and situations. The one-act drama of "Kate Peyton's Lovers" continues to precede the performance of "The Wandering Heir."

The Surrey Theatre has adopted Mr. Paul Merritt's three-act drama of "Rough and Ready," and engaged Mr. and Mrs. Billington to support the leading characters, assisted by Miss Ellen Meyrick. The piece, on the whole, is well mounted and well acted, and is likely to please a transpontine audience.

The late Mr. T. W. Robertson's adaptation of "Les Amours de Cléopâtre," entitled "A Breach of Promise," has been revived at the Royalty, with the advantage of Miss Maggie Brennan in the character of the heroine, Honor Molloy. The tact, dash, and clever assumption of the actress carry through the action with great éclat. The new play, "Ought We to Visit Her?" continues to attract.

Another version of the immortal Marplot, under the name of Trumble, has been performed at the Gaiety. "Une cornelle qui abat des noix" has been very well and judiciously adapted by Messrs. Oxenford and Hatton, under the title of "Too Clever by Half;" and nearly the whole strength of the company is enlisted to support Mr. Tools in the principal character. The omission of one of the episodes in the original play evinces the good taste of the adapters.

Mr. Webster's complimentary benefit at Drury Lane took place, as announced, on Monday, when "The School for Scandal" was performed, with a strong cast—indeed, by the very best members of the profession, including Mr. Phelps, as Sir Peter Teazle; Miss Helen Faucit, as Lady Teazle; Mrs. Stirling, as Mrs. Candour; Mr. Creswick, as Joseph Surface; Mr. S. Emery, as Uncle Oliver; Mr. Charles Mathews, as Charles Surface; Mr. Buckstone, as Backbite; Mr. Compton, as Crabtree; Mr. J. L. Toole, as Moses; Miss Isabel Bateman, as Maria; and Messrs. J. Clarke, H. Wigan, D. James, L. Brough, and J. Thorne in the more miscellaneous characters. Such a combination of talent is of rare occurrence. The performance lasted from half-past one o'clock to a quarter past five. Mr.

Irving then recited Hood's poem, "The Dream of Eugene Aram," and was followed by Mr. Halliday, the honorary secretary of the benefit fund, announcing that the receipts had amounted to £2000. Mr. Charles Mathews thereupon contributed a witticism. He had calculated the ages of the performers engaged on the occasion and found that they amounted to 2000 years. A remarkable coincidence, eh? The curtain then drew up, and Mrs. Keeley recited an address to Mr. Webster, written by Mr. John Oxenford, which told in rhyme the story of the life of the great actor and manager. This story Mr. Webster repeated in his reply, which, not in verse, was yet a comprehensive repetition of the tale. Not before six o'clock was the important ceremony ended, and then the curtain fell on one of the most interesting scenes in our experience.

THE FLAGSHIP AT SHEERNESS.

The dwellers along the lower Thames and Kentish shore are looking out for the expected arrival, to-day, of the newly-married Duke and Duchess of Edinburgh, who will land at Gravesend, as did the fair Princess Alexandra of Denmark when she came to be our Princess of Wales, eleven years ago. The disembarkation of their Royal Highnesses will be greeted by the firing of two Royal salutes from three of her Majesty's ships stationed in Gravesend Reach. Admiral Hastings has considerably desired the Mayor of Gravesend to give warning of this fact to the householders in that town, and they are recommended to open all their windows, lest the concussion of such heavy reports should break some of the panes of glass. One of the ships by which this double Royal salute is to be fired will be H.M.S. Duncan, the Admiral's flagship; and our illustration of that vessel is a token of the intended naval compliment. The Duncan is an unarmoured third-rate screw steamship of 5724 tons (old measurement, 3727 tons) and of 800-horse power, carrying an armament of thirty guns. She is stationed at Sheerness, and bears the Admiral's flag.

WILLS AND BEQUESTS.

The probate granted at Dublin, on the 16th ult., of the will and three codicils of the Right Hon. Henry Villiers, Lord Stuart de Decies, late of Dromana, Waterford, who died Jan. 22 last, was sealed at the principal registry, London, on the 26th ult., the aggregate personal estate in England and Ireland being sworn under £14,000. The acting executor is Mr. Lawrence Dennehey. The testator settles all his real estate, subject to certain charges, upon his son, the Rev. Henry Windsor Villiers Stuart, and the residue of the personalty is settled in a similar manner after payment thereof of some legacies and annuities. There is a gift of £1000 upon trust, to apply the income for the benefit of the curate or chaplain of the chapel of Villierstown. The will and codicils are respectively dated March 25 and 31, 1870, and April 26 and Aug. 28, 1872.

The Irish probate, granted on the 9th ult., of the will of Daniel Joseph Jaffé, late of Belfast, who died at Nice on Jan. 21 last, was sealed at the principal registry, London, on the 28th ult., the aggregate of the personal estate in England, Scotland, and Ireland being sworn under £140,000. The acting executors are Martin Jaffé, Joseph John Jaffé, Otto Moses Jaffé, and Siegmund Armin Oppe. The testator bequeaths to his wife, Mrs. Friedrike Jaffé, his private residence and the furniture, a legacy of £500, and an annuity of £600 for life; to each of his grandchildren living at his death who were born before Jan. 1, 1876, £500; and one tenth of the residue of his property to or upon trust for each of his nine children. As to the remaining tenth of his property, various legacies are given thereout, including £500 to aid in building a second hospital, similar to that in Frederick-street, for the town of Belfast; £100 to the Royal Alfred Aged Merchant Seamen's Institution, Belvedere, Kent; and £100 to the Pauline Stift, Hamburg; and the rest to such of his children, or grandchildren, or relatives whom he has assisted in his lifetime, or for such charitable object as his executors in their discretion shall think fit. The will is dated Dec. 26 last.

The will, dated Aug. 27, 1873, of Algernon d'Espinassy, Marquis de Fontanelle, late of No. 14, Motcomb-street, Belgrave-square, who died on Jan. 31 last, was proved on the 26th ult. by Emile Cherubin de Kerdel, the sole executor. The testator bequeaths to the Royal Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals £50; and to the Home for Lost and Starving Dogs, at Wandsworth-road, Battersea, £30, both free of legacy duty.

The will, dated June 26, 1869, of William Edward Nightingale, J.P., late of Embley Park, near Romsey, Hants, and of Lea Hurst, Derbyshire, who died on Jan. 5 last, was proved on the 21st ult. by Sir Harry Verney, Alfred Bonham Carter, and William Bachelor Coltman, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £40,000. The testator leaves to his widow a pecuniary legacy of £1000; the house No. 35, South-street, Park-lane, is bequeathed in succession to his daughter, Miss Florence Nightingale, and his wife, Mrs. Frances Nightingale, for life, and, on the death of the survivor, to his daughter, Dame Frances Parthenope Verney, absolutely. The residue of his property he gives to Lady Verney, subject to her securing to Miss Nightingale such annual sum as, with the amount she is entitled to under his marriage settlement, will make up £1500 per annum.

The will and codicil, dated Aug. 16 and 27, 1872, of George Calton, late of Blomfield-road, Maida-vale, who died on Jan. 22 last, were proved on the 20th ult. by John Dean Hewett, George Hewett, and Edward Hewett the younger, the personalty being sworn under £35,000. With the exception of a legacy to Mr. J. D. Hewett, the provisions of the will and codicil are wholly in favour of members of deceased's family.

The new central railway station, Liverpool, constructed by the Cheshire lines committee as the terminus of their tunnel from Brunswick station, was opened for traffic on Monday.

The Duke of Cambridge and the leading officers of the Staff visited officially the 1st Life Guards' quarters at Knightsbridge on Monday, and made a thorough inspection of the entire military quarters. The Duke paid a similar visit of scrutiny to the Royal Horse Guards at Regent's Park Barracks on Saturday last. General Sir James Hope Grant, G.C.B., reviewed the troops composing the Infantry Brigade at Aldershot on Monday. The three brigades, composed of eleven regiments, formed up in line on the Long Valley at eleven a.m. The first brigade, under Major-General Parke, C.B., was on the right; the second, under General Smith, was in the centre; and the third, under General Herbert, was on the left. Sir Hope Grant, accompanied by Colonel Gamble, C.B., Assistant Quartermaster-General, and attended by several officers of the divisional staff, rode on the parade-ground at eleven o'clock. After the troops had been minutely inspected, they marched past in open column of double companies in quick time, also in mass of columns, and in line of contiguous quarter-distance columns. A few movements were afterwards executed.

GEOGRAPHY AND TRAVEL.

The war on the Gold Coast, which has now reached a satisfactory conclusion, gives to every new book descriptive of Africa a more than ordinary chance of being read. Mr. Winwood Reade, the Times' special correspondent in Sir Garnet Wolseley's camp, is known as the author of a romantic narrative of his personal adventures, some ten or twelve years ago, in what he called "Savage Africa," more particularly in Lower Guinea, where he lived awhile with the natives, and might have become the husband of a negro Princess. He has both travelled and studied the books of other travellers, and of the geographers and historians, ancient or recent, who tell us of that wonderful continent, still so imperfectly known. A mixed collection of his sketches and commentaries, filling two very readable volumes, is now published, under the title of The African Sketch-Book (Smith, Elder, and Co.) Some of the tales are avowed fictions; but these may be assumed to have an illustrative bearing on the facts observed and reported by those who have, like Mr. Reade, visited the coasts of Guinea. As mere stories, they have the merit of imaginative and dramatic power. "Lagos Bar," the tragedy of the young wife of a faithless husband meeting her death in a fit of despair at that dangerous port of English trading vessels, is told with touching effect. "The French Commandant" has the same kind of interest. We have also the stories of Solima and Ananga, the one belonging to the Mussulman Foulahs of Soudan and the Gambia, the other a maiden of Cazembe, near the region of Dr. Livingstone's latest wanderings; but her story is connected with that of a Portuguese colonial adventurer. "The History of a Chameleon" is a satirical piece of supposed autobiography, meant to show the unworthy character of some negro converts under the patronage of English or American philanthropic institutions. But in "The Missionary" we have an example of genuine religious enthusiasm setting itself to the difficult task of an uncompromising Christian teacher and reformer among savage tribes. "The Bleeding Heart" is the tale of a modern Dutch hero of West African colonisation, and of his domestic sorrows at home. These are the chief articles of a fictitious or imaginative sort in Mr. Reade's book. Of his own African experiences he has also much that is new to relate. Up the Gaboon river, into the land of gorillas and the land of cannibals; at St. Paul de Loanda, and in the adjacent province of Angola; at the French settlement of Assinie, and in the exploration of a new inland route from Sierra Leone, by way of Palaba, to the Niger and to the Bouré gold-mines, the author has travelled, gathering many details of useful and curious knowledge. In the last-mentioned journey he seems to have achieved a feat of real importance, which has scarcely yet obtained its due share of notice. The remaining portions of this "African Sketchbook" are principally made up of historical essays and summary reviews, taken from an extensive reading of older books of travel. To give us a general view of the local distribution of these sources of knowledge, a "Map of African Literature" is here presented, in which the names of all the travellers and authentic writers upon Africa are grouped in print over those parts of the continent described by them. The two volumes are furnished with several other maps and with a number of pictorial wood engravings. "The African Sketchbook" is a miscellany which seems to contain something for every taste not averse to the subject.

An original work of great importance, to which Mr. Winwood Reade supplies a very short preface, is Dr. Schweinfurth's Heart of Africa, translated by Miss Eilen Frewer (two volumes, Sampson Low, Marston, and Searle). The author is a learned German botanist, who passed three years, from July, 1868, to the summer or autumn of 1870, in exploring the interior parts of Africa, west of the White Nile and north-west of Lake Albert Nyanza. Most of us have learnt, from Sir Samuel Baker, Mr. Petherick, and other travellers, that the White Nile, or Bahr el Abiad, which flows northward out of that equatorial lake to join the Blue Nile of Abyssinia at Khartoum, has many tributaries on its left bank or western side. Of these the principal is the Bahr el Ghazel, which joins the White Nile about nine degrees north of the Equator, and near the 30th degree of east longitude. Dr. Schweinfurth's wanderings upon this occasion—he had been in Nubia once before—were at first directed across the plains traversed by numerous streams that flow to the Bahr el Ghazel from the west and south-west, between the 26th and 30th degrees of longitude. These rivers, which are not yet shown in ordinary maps, run through the Dyoor, the Bongo or Dohr, the Golo and Sehre countries, in the 7th and 8th degrees of latitude. Dr. Schweinfurth afterwards, in 1870, made his way further south, towards the unknown region behind Lake Albert Nyanza, where high mountains have been seen from afar. He there came upon the upper waters of a great river taking a westward course, which is supposed to be the Kubanda of Dr. Barth, and which may perhaps find its way to Lake Tchad, under the name of Shary, if not to the Benue or Tchadda branch of the Niger. This is at present a mere subject of conjecture; but it appears certain that the Welle, a stream 800 ft. wide and never less than 12 ft. or 15 ft. deep, thus much exceeding in size the Bahr el Ghazel, does not belong to the Nile system at all. Its real destination must be recognised as a geographical problem of high interest, as may be seen by one glance at the vast blank space that extends from Sir Samuel Baker's lake to the coast of Guinea. Readers acquainted with the history of African discovery up to this date will appreciate the value of Dr. Schweinfurth's book, from the position only of the localities he has explored. Those who rather like views of wild scenery and the costumes and manners of wild nations, or personal adventures and dealings with barbarian hosts, and sometimes with foes, or novelties in the species of plants and animals observed by a natural philosopher, will find an immense variety of curious anecdote in these volumes. Could we have fancied a people in the habit of mutually spitting upon each other by way of a friendly salutation and pledge of kindness? This was the practice of the Dyoor people, but it is now going out of fashion. The Dinkas, an exclusively pastoral nation, also have their characteristic ways. The Bongo, with whom Dr. Schweinfurth lived two years, are made the subject of a complete description. We are introduced latterly to the Mittoo, and to the Niam-niam and the Monbutto nations, who have some remarkable habits. The Niam-niam are cannibals, and seem akin to the Fans of Western Africa. Dr. Schweinfurth's artistic skill with the pencil has furnished a great number of illustrations. There is an abundance of these—views of places, figures of men and women, of weapons, tools, and articles of dress or furniture, and specimens of zoology and botany, all which are exceedingly well drawn. Some of the human full-length portraits, such as those of the fat Bongo woman and the meagre Dinka woman standing together, show the extreme contrasts of physical structure among the different African races. In this respect one of Dr. Schweinfurth's discoveries is particularly worthy of notice—that of an unquestionable pigmy nation, called the Akka or Tikkitiki, dwelling south of the Monbutto, between the first and second degrees of latitude north of the line. Their average height is 4 ft. 10 in.; but they are skilful shooters with the bow and arrows, like those of classic antiquity who used to make war on the cranes. One of the little fellows, standing 4 ft. 7 in., but full grown, accompanied Dr. Schweinfurth on his return to Khartoum and Berber. The author considers them, with the Bushmen of South Africa and all those dwarf races of mankind, to be the scattered remnants of a puny aboriginal race, now becoming almost extinct throughout the continent. A subject of much interest at the present time is that of the Central African slave trade, which Sir Samuel Baker and Colonel Gordon have been commissioned by the Viceroy of Egypt to put down; and we have just heard of a great battle, towards Darfoor, fought and won in this cause. Dr. Schweinfurth, having been at Kordofan in the winter of 1870, when the atrocious traffic was at its height, is enabled to give us ample information concerning its practices. They are certainly worse than any fancy could have imagined. He offers a few practical suggestions for the purpose of stopping the slave trade, which he does not think will be done by the ruler of Egypt or by any Mussulman power. We commend his book, for entertainment and instructive information to the attention of everyone who has followed with interest the still recent journeys of Dr. Livingstone and Sir Samuel Baker. Dr. Schweinfurth merits the third place, next to our two countrymen among the great modern explorers of Central Africa.

TWO NEW MEMBERS.

The portraits of two newly-elected members of the House of Commons, who have never before had a seat in that Assembly, now figure among our Illustrations. They belong to opposite classes, but we do not say, to opposite interests, in the great industrial community of the North of England. One is a representative of Capital; the other of Labour.

MR. C. M. PALMER, M.P.

Mr. Charles Mark Palmer, of Saltburn, Yorkshire, who is returned for the northern division of the county of Durham, in the Liberal interest, in the room of Mr. G. Elliot, is a son of the late Mr. George Palmer, merchant and shipowner, of Newcastle-on-Tyne, by Maria Taylor, his wife. He was born in the year 1822, and was educated at Newcastle and in France. He is Lieutenant-Colonel of the 1st Durham Engineer Volunteers, a magistrate for the North Riding of Yorkshire and for the county of Durham, and extensively engaged in business as a coalowner, shipbuilder, and iron-master. We have now and then had occasion to speak of the great iron-making and ship and engine building establishment of Messrs. Palmer and Co. It is situated on the south bank of the Tyne, at Jarrow, and occupies a frontage to the river of no less than three quarters of a mile. The various furnaces, forges, engine-factories, slips, shipways, and graving-docks cover a space of nearly a hundred acres of land. The business of this company was commenced by Messrs. Palmer in 1852; but it extended itself so rapidly that, in 1865, it was found necessary to transfer it to a company. The works altogether consist of five principal departments; first, the extensive mines from which the different minerals are raised; secondly, the blast-furnaces, where the ore is smelted; thirdly, the puddle-furnaces, rolling-mills, and forges, where the iron is converted into "uses" of every size and form. Fourthly, a complete ship-building establishment, where vessels of every kind, from the largest ironclad man-of-war to the smallest screw-boat, are built, with the necessary workshops for preparing the plates, ribs, and beams for the hulls, and for constructing the joinery and fittings of the cabins, and making the spars, rigging, and apparel of the ship, with graving docks to fit them out or repair them in. Fifthly, an extensive range of workshops in which the steam machinery intended to act as the propelling power of the ships they build is designed, constructed, and fitted together, and every description of casting and forging executed, whether for marine or general engineering purposes. As much as nine millions of tons of ore has been raised from the mines in Yorkshire to supply the smelting furnaces of these works, and the rolling-mills are capable of producing 3500 tons of manufactured iron annually. The total amount of tonnage of iron ships built by the company in one year was 40,000 tons, being more than was produced by all the shipbuilding yards on the Thames in the same year. Among the many vessels constructed and equipped at these works, we find armour-cased floating batteries, ironclad frigates, and great troop-ships built for the Admiralty; a monitor to protect the harbour of Melbourne; steamers for the Atlantic Ocean, and numerous cargo and passenger ships for the Baltic and Mediterranean trade. Mr. Palmer, who now enters Parliament, has been twice married; first, in 1846, to Jane, daughter of Mr. E. Robson, of Newcastle; and, secondly, in 1867, to Augusta Mary, daughter of Mr. Alfred Lambert, of Paris. The return of Mr. Palmer involves the gain of a seat to the Liberal party in North Durham, as Mr. Elliot was a Conservative. The Portrait of Mr. Palmer is from a photograph by Messrs. W. and D. Downey, of Newcastle-on-Tyne.

MR. T. BURT, M.P.

Mr. Thomas Burt, of Newcastle-on-Tyne, who has been returned as "The Working-Man Candidate" for the borough of Morpeth, in the room of Sir George Grey, retired from public life, was born, in 1837, at Percy Main, near North Shields. He is a son of Mr. Peter Burt, a man of the working classes, and began life himself as a working miner at Seaton Delaval. He removed, in 1860, to Choppington, and married, about the same time, Mary, eldest daughter of Mr. Thomas Weatherburn, of Blyth, and became secretary to the local school committee. In 1865 he was appointed agent for the Cramlington miners. He is also secretary to the "Northumberland Miners' Mutual Confidence Association." Mr. Burt is the second member of his class who has found his way into the House of Commons. The other is Mr. Alexander Macdonald, the new M.P. for Stafford. It is stated that his friends and supporters in the north have taxed themselves to the extent of £500 a year in order to supply Mr. Burt with the means of supporting the honour of a seat in Parliament. This Portrait is likewise from one of Messrs. Downey's photographs.

House coal was, on Monday, reduced in price throughout the Durham coal-fields by three, and in some cases four, shillings a ton, with some hope of further decline. Manufacturing coal and coke are also lower.

The malt tax has been again condemned by the Cambridge-shire and Isle of Ely Chamber of Agriculture. There was a strong minority who advocated a readjustment of local taxation as a preferable boon to ask from the Legislature.

The Western Times (Exeter paper) mentions the case of a young couple who were ruined by the Tichborne case. They set out in life with every comfort; but the husband, much against the wishes of his wife, invested £14,000 in "Tichborne Bonds." After the cross-examination of the Claimant by Sir John Coleridge the young man became disheartened and despondent, and died in a short time, his early death being attributed to vexation consequent upon the feeling that he had lost his money and had shown a great want of prudence.

Archæology of the Month.

Mr. J. F. Nicholls, of the Bristol City Library, has exhibited to the Archaeological Institute a gold ring, lately found on "the battle-field" at Winterbourne, Gloucester, by a man ploughing, near the spot where, some forty years since, a jar full of gold coins was found and quickly appropriated by the finder. It is near the well-known earthwork of "Bury Hill," and surrounded by evidences of early occupation. The ring is in excellent condition, the gold very pure, being of the Carolingian epoch, when the traditions of the goldsmiths' work of the Lower Empire were still traceable among semi-barbaric influences. It is formed of a flat band of gold, beaten out at the ends, overlapped, and rudely joined to produce a large oval bezel, which contains an onyx polished merely en carbochon, the surrounding rim being ornamented with a ribbon of gold, fluted perpendicularly, with small fillets along the edge; a rude pattern is pricked on the hoop. The work does not appear to be English, but is in the style of the Gallic goldsmiths.

The Temple of Diana, Ephesus (writes Mr. J. T. Wood), is found to measure 163 ft. 9½ in. by 342 ft. 6½ in.; the platform on which it was raised, 239 ft. 4½ in. by 418 ft. 1½ in., measured on the lowest step. The length here given nearly accords with that given by Pliny—viz., 425 Roman feet; the ascertained width exceeds Pliny's dimensions of 220 ft. An element of great beauty had almost escaped discovery—i.e., the plentiful use of gold in the decoration of the temple. One fragment was found composed of two astragals, between which a narrow slip of lead was doubled in, in the fold of which was inserted a narrow strip of gold, which formed a fillet of gold between the astragals. The beauty of the temple was, moreover, heightened by the use of brilliant colours, remains of which are found in numerous fragments, blue, red, and yellow being readily distinguished—blue for the background of enrichments and sculpture in relief, red and yellow for parts requiring prominence.

The Church of St. Martin Outwich, now in course of demolition, has had its vaults cleared of its coffins and chests of disinterred bodies, which have been conveyed to Ilford Cemetery. The space inside the church has been dug out to a depth of fourteen feet. Above 150 leaden coffins and 97 large chests of remains have been discovered and placed in a huge vault, the mouth of which will be closed with slabs suitably inscribed. Among the remains discovered were those of John Oterwich and his wife, Mrs. Abigail Vaughan, who bequeathed 4s. annually to purchase faggots for burning heretics.

The excavations in the Coliseum at Rome are being continued, and two of the stations of the Via Crucis have been removed. Marble slabs will be placed in the best preserved arched corridors, with the names sculptured on them of the Christian martyrs who gave up their lives in the Coliseum for their faith.

Mr. R. Burchett has laid before the Society of Antiquaries a series of paper moulds of the carvings on the stones of New Grange, a tumulus in the county of Meath, Ireland, which is one of the most interesting antiquarian remains in this country, and which Dr. Petrie called one of the "pyramids" of Ireland. Mr. Burchett also showed drawings, plans, and moulds which had been executed by himself within six days that he spent inside the tumulus. Everything tends to show that New Grange was a burial-place of very remote antiquity, used by a Royal race at that time.

Amongst Sir William Tite's books is a copy of the exclusively rare account of the famous quarrel of Arthur Hall (member for Grantham in 1576) with Melchisedek Mallerie, all the copies of which were destroyed by order of Parliament (except fifty-four previously distributed by Hall among his friends), as derogatory to the Speaker and other members, who were personally charged with drunkenness. For writing this work Hall was expelled the House, fined 500 marks, and committed prisoner to the Tower for six months.

In another collection of Chaucer Gleanings, by Mr. Furnivall, is his appointment as clerk of the works at St. George's Chapel, Windsor, which was separate from the general one at the King's Palaces at Westminster, Eltham, &c., and the Tower of London. Chaucer was appointed when the chapel was ruinous and ready to tumble down, and seems to have done nothing to it during two years except buy some stones for future repairs, and pay a few men to unload them. Mr. Furnivall adds, "It is possible that this neglect may have led to the loss of his office." His own wages were two shillings a day, the master carpenter's being one shilling.

At a meeting of the Geographical Society Dr. S. W. Bushell, describing his "Journey Outside the Great Wall of China," takes his route as north-westerly, through inner Mongolia to Kalgan, and thence north-easterly to Dolonnor (a large town whose exact position was previously unknown), and Shang-Tu, the old northern capital of the Yuan dynasty, described in glowing terms by Marco Polo. The ruins of Shang-Tu, built by the famous Kublai Khan, were identified by the existence of a marble tablet, with an inscription of the thirteenth century. It is the place referred to by Coleridge in the lines—

In Xanadu did Kublai Khan
A stately pleasure dome decree, &c.

The site was a complete desert, overgrown with rank weeds and grass, the abode of foxes and owls, which prey on the numerous prairie-rats and partridges. The walls of the city, built of earth, faced with unhewn stone and brick, are more or less dilapidated, and the inclosed space is strewn with blocks of marble and other remains of large temples and palaces; broken lions, dragons, and remains of other carved monuments.

Mr. A. W. Franks has exhibited to the Society of Antiquaries a fine specimen of those brass (so-called) alms-dishes, about the origin of which so much uncertainty exists—some antiquaries supposing they were made at Dinorath, in the Low Countries, while others consider them of Nuremberg art or industry. The present example bears date 1487. Mr. Franks also described some Roman remains in the neighbourhood of Derby, and a fragment of Roman glazed ware, with another bearing a name unknown in the lists of Roman potters—scilicet, Samogenus.

Among the old work at Whitehall, in the corner house nearest the Home Offices, was a panelled library with carved enrichments, and a remarkably well modelled stucco ceiling, the whole being a perfect specimen of Inigo Jones.—Mr. Lord, in the Builder.

A collection of some of Mr. Phéné's Celtic antiquities is now at the Burlington Fine Arts Club, Savile-row.

The magnificent ruins of Angkor, in Cambodia, discovered last year by the French traveller, Lieutenant Garnier, are of extraordinary magnificence and architectural splendour. The sides are two miles and a quarter in circumference, and the remains of endless roads, buried in forests and jungle, contain monument after monument. Angkor must have been one of the greatest cities on the globe, yet of its history no account remains. Nothing is known of its past, save that a Chinese traveller, in the year 1202 mentioned its splendour, and 300 years later it was referred to by Ribodoneyra as an ancient ruin.

CAPTAIN BUCKLE.

R. Nicolls Buckle, Esq., Captain Royal Engineers, whose death, on the field of battle in Ashantee, is just announced, was distinguished at Woolwich Royal Military Academy, from which he passed fourth out of a batch of seventeen cadets. His first commission bears date June 22, 1858. In 1862 he received an appointment in connection with the Great Exhibition of that year; and shortly after proceeded to Gibraltar, where he remained till 1865, when he was ordered to China. In 1869 he became Assistant-Surveyor at Hong-Kong; and in 1871, returning to England, attained the rank of Captain. He was at Aldershot in 1873 in command of the B troop Royal Engineer Train.

A pension of £100 per annum has been conferred on Major-General Walker for distinguished services in China and the Crimea. The grant is from the fund for meritorious services.

The widow of a bailiff named Patrick Mitchell, who was murdered in the county of Limerick, has been awarded £500 compensation under the provisions of the Peace Preservation Act.

A new method of dyeing with indigo has been introduced in Huddersfield. The indigo is rendered soluble by hydro-sulphide of soda, prepared by acting on a solution of the bisulphide by metallic zinc. By this process nine pieces of cloth can be dyed in an hour and a half.

A terrible shipwreck is reported from Fraserburg as one of the consequences of the late severe storm. The ship Grace Darling went ashore at St. Combs, and, though there were four sets of rocket apparatus within a few miles of the spot, her crew of fourteen men were drowned.

CHESS.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

*All communications relating to this department of the Paper should be addressed "To the Editor of the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS," &c., and have the word "Chess" legibly written on the outside of the envelope.

G. D. M. D., W. F. S.—We are sorry to have to say that the conditions of mate in Problem No. 1565 were not correctly stated. They should have been: "White to play and mate in four moves." The error was not discovered in time to rectify it last week; and we fear, therefore, it may have occasioned a great deal of fruitless trouble. We shall withhold the solution for another week.

F. H. B.—It shall have immediate attention. Many thanks for your kind offer, of which we shall certainly avail ourselves.

T. A. H.—The route is very good, and deserves better words.

LES AMATEURS DU GRAND CAPE A TOULOUSE, G. S. S., W. T. AMAN.—Your solution of Problem No. 1564 is perfectly correct.

ACRLEY, Bernard-street.—Checking the King does not deprive him of his castling privilege.

G. L. B., Jun.—It shall be examined. You should have written your name over the diagram, not on a separate paper.

N. K.—You have omitted to send the geometrical and arithmetical properties of your tour; they are of far more importance than the syllabic arrangement.

Q. Q.—1. The Huddersfield College Magazine contains, among other matters, chess problems, games, &c. The price is threepence a monthly number. It can be procured of W. W. Morgan, 67, Barbican, London. 2. The City of London Chess Magazine we have not seen, and can give you no information regarding it at the moment.

X. Y. Z.—No Knight's Tour so numbered has appeared in the Illustrated London News.

A. D. NAPIER.—Nos. 1, 2, and 3 are, unfortunately, defective. No. 4, although apparently correct, is hardly worthy of you.

JOHN G., Boston, U.S.A.—Declined, with thanks.

A. B., Bethnal Green.—Received safely. A reply has been sent by post.

E. H. V.—Dr. PHILIPPA.—Problem 1560 is perfectly sound. If Black play, as you propose, Kt to Q 3rd, the answer is very obvious:—
1. Q to Q 2nd (ch) K to K 4th
(If K to Q 3rd, White plays 3. Q to Q R 4th, and mates next move.)
2nd (ch), and mates next move.

W. W. N., Stretford.—Correct, but very, very easy of solution.

QUEEN'S KNIGHT.—It admits of another solution, beginning 1. Q to Q B 6th (ch), 2. B takes P, &c.

G. COLLINS.—No. 1 admits of a second mode of giving mate by 3. Kt to Q B 3rd (ch), and 4. B takes P; and in No. 2, if we mistake not, White can mate by 1. R to K B 4th; 2. R to K B 6th, &c. Is it not so?

DEBATE.—The publication of such an article in our columns is, unfortunately, impracticable. Within the limited space we can afford for Chess it would not be finished in six weeks.

BOOKS RECEIVED.—The First Part of "Handbuch des Schachspiels" (fifth edition), by P. R. v. Bilguer. "Positions in the Chess Openings Most Frequently Played," by T. Long, Esq., B.A., T.O.D.; "being a Supplement to the 'Key to the Chess Openings,' by the same author."

SOLUTION OF PROBLEM NO. 1566.

WHITE.	BLACK.	WHITE.	BLACK.

2. Kt to Q R 4th	Any move.

*1. If he play P takes P, White answers with Kt to Q B 4th, and gives mate next move.

SOLUTION OF PROBLEM NO. 1567.

WHITE.	BLACK.	WHITE.	BLACK.
1. Kt to Q 5th B takes Kt		2. B takes Kt	Any move.
2. Q to Q 2nd (ch) K takes R		3. R or B gives mate.

White to play, and mate in three moves.

CHESS IN SCOTLAND.

The following Games between Mr. G. B. FRASER, of Dundee, and Mr. H. M. STIRLING are novel and interesting.

GAME I.

(Scotch Gambit.)

BLACK (Mr. S.)	WHITE (Mr. F.)	BLACK (Mr. S.)	WHITE (Mr. F.)
1. P to K 4th	P to K 4th	10. Kt to Q B 3rd	Q to K 4th
2. Kt to K B 3rd	Kt to Q B 3rd	11. R to K 4th	P to K B 4th
3. P to Q 4th	P takes P	12. R to K R 4th	Q to K 5th
4. Kt takes P	Q to K R 5th	13. B to Q B 4th (ch)	K to R sq
5. Kt to K B 3rd		14. B to K B 4th

This variation is the suggestion of Mr. Fraser, so he has his own weapon turned against him.

6. B to K 2nd Q takes K P (ch)
7. B to Q 4th B to Q 4th

It is difficult to determine whether this move, or P to Q 3rd, or B to Q Kt 5th is the preferable line of action at this critical juncture.

7. Castles K Kt to K 2nd
8. R to K sq Castles
9. B to Q 3rd Q to Q 4th

The situation of the Queen looks perilous, but there is no other square to which she could have been moved with safety.

10. Q to Q 3rd P to Q 3rd
11. Q to Q 3rd Q to K Kt 3rd

Foreseeing his opponent's intention to take the K R's Pawn with his Rook.

12. Kt to K Kt 5th Kt to K 4th
13. Q to K R 3rd P to K R 3rd
14. Q to K R sq Kt to K Kt 5th
15. Q R takes Kt Kt takes K B P
16. R takes R P (ch) P takes R
17. Q to K R 5th
18. After this clever and unlooked-for move Mr. Fraser resigned.

GAME II.

(French Opening.)

WHITE (Mr. F.)	BLACK (Mr. S.)	WHITE (Mr. F.)	BLACK (Mr. S.)
1. P to K 4th	P to K 3rd	11. Castles	B to K 3rd
2. P to Q 4th	P to Q 4th
3. Kt to Q 2nd

A novelty not deserving attention. "I have practised it pretty successfully during the past year or two," Mr. Fraser writes.

4. P to Q B 3rd P to Q B 4th
5. K to K B 3rd Kt to Q Kt 3rd

A good move in the ordinary form of the French Opening, but not at all commendable in this variation of it. The best reply seems to be 5. Kt to K B 3rd.

6. P to Q R 3rd P takes Q P
7. Q B P takes P Kt takes Q P
8. P takes P P takes P
9. Kt takes Kt Q takes Kt

The interposition of the Bishop would evidently have made matters worse for Black.

11. B takes Kt P takes B

THE OXFORD AND CAMBRIDGE CHESS-MATCH.—This match is appointed to take place on Friday, the 27th inst., at the City of London Restaurant, Milk-street, Cheapside, where it was played last year. The list of competitors has not yet been decided on, but we shall probably be enabled to publish it in our next.

SCIENTIFIC RESULTS OF THE MONTH.

In the journal of the Royal Agricultural Society a very important report appears by Mr. Lawes and Dr. Gilbert on experiments made by them on the growth of barley for twenty years in succession on the same land without allowing it to remain any of the time fallow and without a rotation of different crops. The results obtained are similar to those discovered by the same inquirers in the case of wheat—namely, that when the same crop is grown consecutively on the same land for a series of years mineral manures if used alone do not enable the crop to obtain sufficient nitrogen and carbon to reach a satisfactory yield, that nitrogenous manures alone are much more beneficial than mineral manures alone; but that the best results are obtained when the two kinds of manure are simultaneously applied. In the case of barley the mixed manures gave for twenty years in succession on the same land more corn and straw than farm-yard manure did, and considerably more than the average barley crop of the country grown under the system of the rotation of crops. These results point to the practicability of utilising land to greater advantage by a skilful selection of manures.

An anvil block weighing 500 tons has recently been cast at Perm, a town in the north-eastern part of Russia, where works for the manufacture of large guns have been established. To produce this casting it was necessary to erect fourteen cupola furnaces and three blowing-engines. The cost of the casting is said to have amounted to about £16 per ton. But, all things considered, it was probably more than this. Hydraulic forging-presses are now superseding steam-hammers. They do not involve costly foundations or shake surrounding buildings, and, their action being more of a kneading than of a percussive character, time is afforded for the expulsion of the slag from the heart of the incandescent mass.

At the annual meeting of the Glasgow Geological Society, on Feb. 12, Sir W. Thomson read an address on the Influence of Geological Changes on the Earth's Rotation. In early geological times, while the earth was still plastic, the axis of rotation, it was concluded, might have changed its position. But the earth is now so rigid that no such change is possible. Changes of climate, it was inferred, cannot have been produced by changes in the earth's axis of rotation; and in regard to subsidences or elevations, they would be incapable of producing any appreciable effect upon the axis.

A correspondent of the Garden speaks favourably of the prospects of fig-culture. The trees should be trained under glass, like vines. The Bourjassotte Griseis, hesays, one of the best kinds to cultivate, as it is a good grower, great bearer, and produces large fruit. Another good kind is La Madeleine or Angélique.

Two volumes in English and Japanese have lately been published by the Government of Japan containing the "Regulations and Syllabus of Studies for the Imperial College of Engineering" which has been established at Tokyo. The course of training is to extend over six years, and such students as at the end of that time are able to pass a satisfactory examination are to receive the diploma of M.E. (Master of Engineering), and are to be appointed engineers in the Board of Works. Professors from the English, Irish, and Scotch Universities have been appointed to conduct the classes, which are now attended by fifty-six students.

A valuable contribution to our knowledge of the glacial periods which formerly prevailed in either hemisphere has recently been made by Mr. James Geikie, in his work entitled "The Great Ice-Age, and its Relation to the Antiquity of Man." A large part of the work is taken up by a description of the drift-beds of Scotland, and especially of the Till, the lowest member of the Scottish drift, which is shown to have been formed on land beneath a sheet of ice, which overspread the whole country and pushed its way far out in the shallow sea. The periods of glaciation, however, were alternated with periods of comparative mildness, and Mr. Geikie considers that the theory propounded by Mr. Croll, and which we have on various occasions explained—namely, that the changes in climate revealed by geology are mainly due to the effect of the precession of the equinoxes—best accounts for the observed phenomena. According to this theory, one hemisphere receives most heat from the sun during a long series of years, and then the other hemisphere, so that, even supposing that the total heat received is a uniform quantity, the phenomena of Arctic cold and tropical heat may be alternately producible in the same locality, and geology shows that such alternations really existed.

Messrs. Arnold and Sons have produced an instrument called the "instantaneous vaccinator," in which three needles, gilt to prevent rusting, are released by a spring and protruded through the side of a small box applied to the child's arm. The spring is released by a trigger, as in the scarifier used in cupping. After the perforations have been made the lymph is blown from a tube and rubbed over the abraded surface.

The Lancet, which has already rendered such valuable service to the public in the detection of adulterations, draws the attention of the Revenue officials to the large importations of cocculus indicus, which is believed to be used for adulterating beer. On Jan. 31 the stock was 1066 bags.

The engineering world has learned with regret that one of the most beneficial inventors of the nineteenth century—Sir Francis Pettit Smith, late curator of the Patent Museum, South Kensington—has passed from amongst us during the past month. Whatever efforts or experiments may have been made by others, nothing is now more notorious than that it is mainly to the ingenuity, resource, and persistency of Sir Francis Smith that we are indebted for the practical introduction of the screw-propeller into steam navigation. But such was the difficulty of the achievement and the inertia of prejudice and ignorance to be surmounted, that his patent had nearly expired before the system came into favourable recognition, and, the patent laws at the time being imperfect, he in the end derived little pecuniary benefit from his successes.

A good deal of discussion has been going on in engineering circles about the refusal of the Board of Trade engineers to allow the safety-valves of steam-boat boilers to be pressed down by springs instead of weights. There is no good reason why springs should not be employed. Meanwhile we advise the interposition of a spring between the weight and the valve. When a steamer subsides between two waves in a rough sea the weights on the safety-valve lose part of their gravity and part of the steam blows off. But if a spring be interposed between the weight and valve this action will be prevented, or at least diminished.

Giffard's injector for feeding steam-boilers, though a most elegant and useful instrument, is known to be capricious in its action, and M. Ferrero says that this arises from the water and steam openings not being properly adjusted to one another. He therefore proposes a new injector, in which one orifice cannot be altered without correspondingly altering the other. In this we see no objection. But injectors fail to act sometimes from other causes than a mal-adjustment of the orifices, such as chip or straw getting into the passages, or a too high temperature of the injected water.

HER MAJESTY'S OPERA, DRURY-LANE.
 LATE MR. MAPLESON has the honor to announce that the OPERA SEASON of 1874 will COMMENCE on TUESDAY, MARCH 17. The Programme of the Arrangements is as usual this day (Saturday). Subscribers of last season are respectfully requested to communicate with Mr. Bailey, at the Box-office, Theatre Royal, Drury-Lane, which is open daily from Ten to Four.

HER MAJESTY'S OPERA, THEATRE ROYAL, DRURY-LANE.—The OPERA SEASON, 1874, will COMMENCE on TUESDAY, MARCH 17. The performances will take place in the Theatre Royal, Drury-Lane, which is found in all respects convenient as the home of Her Majesty's Opera, pending more definite arrangements.

The Repertory of the Establishment being well known, the Director need only state his purpose to give as varied a selection from it as circumstances render possible. He trusts that neither the lovers of classical nor of popular works will have cause to complain of the result.

The Director further intends to produce the following Operas in the course of the season:—

DONIZETTI'S ROBERTO DEVEREUX.

This opera, not having been heard in England for nearly thirty years, cannot fail to present much of the charm of novelty, in addition to the unquestionable charm of its music. The grand role of Queen Elizabeth will be sustained by Mlle. Titiens.

BALFE'S IL TALIEMANO.

The general regret caused by the unavoidable postponement of this interesting work last year is the best proof that it will be welcomed now. Madame Christine Nilsson has undertaken to create the part of Edith Benger.

AUBER'S FRA DIAVOLO.

The comic masterpiece of the French composer cannot but be a welcome addition to the repertory of Her Majesty's Opera. A new Zerlina will appear in the person of Mlle. Lodi.

AUBER'S CATHERINA (Les Diamants de la Couronne).
 This beautiful work will constitute an important addition to the Repertory of Her Majesty's Opera, never having yet been performed under Mr. Mapleson's management. The rôle of Caterina by Mlle. Singali.

ROSSINI'S OTTELLO.

The great interest excited by the revival of this opera in 1870 has not been forgotten. Madame Christine Nilsson will again appear as the representative of Desdemona.

VERDI'S ERNANI.

This important work will be revived in the course of the season, with Mlle. Titiens as Elvira.

Engagements have been made with the following artists, who will appear for the first time in London:—

Mlle. Lodi and	Soprano.	Mlle. Singali.
Signor Paladini,	Tenore.	Signor Ramini.
Signor de Roschi,	Baritone.	Signor Galanti.

ARRIVAL OF THE DUKE AND DUCHESS OF EDINBURGH AT GRAVESEND: MISS LAKE PRESENTING A BOUQUET TO THE BRIDE.

messages from the frightened King, and how at length he was driven to the conclusion that no reliance whatever could be placed upon that Sovereign's word, the reader must learn from the General's own despatches. There was no alternative left but the infliction of summary and severe punishment upon the wily foe. Successive torradoes had given impressive warning to Sir Garnet and his colleagues that a few days' stay where they were might put an insurmountable obstacle in the way of their return to the coast. Rain had fallen heavily; the rivers which they had crossed on their march northward were rapidly rising. The roads were becoming slippery, swampy, and in places nearly impassable. To temporise would have been madness; to return without leaving behind some visible and impressive evidence of the superiority of British power would have been to forego the main objects of the expedition. Reluctantly, but without the least hesitation as to the duty which devolved upon him, Sir Garnet Wolseley gave orders for the destruction of Coomassie by fire. The palace of the King was mined, and the city was set fire to in several quarters. The troops evacuated the place while it was still in flames. The Illustration forwarded to us by our Special Artist will give a vivid idea of the scene. The work of destruction was complete. Captain Sartorius, with an escort of twenty men detached from Glover's force, a few miles to the east of the city, passed through the ruins a day or two afterwards, and saw that not a single living soul had remained on the spot. The lesson seems to have told upon the mind of the King as nothing else could have done. Enraged as he was by the losses he had sustained, and apprehending further disaster from the advance of Glover's force, he sent messengers after Sir Garnet Wolseley, this time with an instalment of a war indemnity in their hands, to request the immediate countermanding of the further march of the troops under Glover, and to express his readiness to sign any treaty which Sir Garnet might deem suitable and necessary. Thus has ended a war forced upon us by wanton aggression on the part of the Ashantees. The programme of Sir Garnet Wolseley has been realised in all its parts. He has done what he said he would do; he has done it all within the brief period which he assigned for its execution. Our troops and our tars are now on their passage home, and may be expected off our own coasts in a few days. They will, no doubt, receive the distinction which they have deserved. They have borne the flag of England through a pestilential country to a capital deemed by most to be beyond reach of European power. They have shed new lustre, by their discipline, their courage, and their success, upon the name and fame of the nation which they represented. If, to a large extent, the war was, as Lord Derby characterised it, "an engineer's war," we have yet the consolation derived from the thought that it has been admirably conducted, and has resulted in a triumphant achievement of the end for which it was undertaken.

THE COURT.

The Queen's dinner-party at Windsor Castle yesterday (Friday) week included the Prince and Princess of Wales, Princess Beatrice, Prince Leopold, the Duchess of Wellington, Lady Augusta Stanley, Lady Frances Baillie, the Lord Chamberlain, and Lieutenant-General Sir T. M. Biddulph. The Dean of Westminster arrived at the castle, also the Countess of Macclesfield and Major-General Probyn, in attendance upon the Prince and Princess of Wales.

On Saturday last Princess Louise (Marchioness of Lorne) and the Marquis of Lorne, Prince Albert Victor and Prince George of Wales, and the Duke of Cambridge arrived at the castle. The Duke and Duchess of Edinburgh arrived at the castle from Russia. Prince Arthur met their Imperial and Royal Highnesses at Gravesend, and accompanied them to Windsor. The Queen, with all the members of the Royal family in England, received the Duke and Duchess at the railway station, and accompanied them to the castle. A description of the Royal procession and reception is given in our other pages, with illustrations. The Royal assemblage was received at the Queen's entrance by the great officers of state, the ladies and gentlemen of the household, and Count Gleichen. Upon alighting the Queen took the hand of the Duchess of Edinburgh, and, preceded by the Lord Chamberlain and the Lord Steward, conducted her Imperial Highness up the staircase to the corridor, where the household were severally introduced by her Majesty to the Duchess. Luncheon was served in the Oak-Room for the Queen, the members of the Royal family, Prince Edward of Saxe-Weimar, and Count Gleichen. Luncheon was served in the dining-room for the members of the household and the various suites in attendance. The band of the Grenadier Guards played in the quadrangle. Subsequently the Prince and Princess of Wales, Prince Albert Victor and Prince George of Wales, Princess Louise (Marchioness of Lorne) and the Marquis of Lorne, and the Duke of Cambridge left for London. The Prince and Princess of Wales, Princess Louise (Marchioness of Lorne) and the Marquis of Lorne, and the Duke of Cambridge arrived at the castle. Her Majesty entered the drawing room, where the company was assembled, at half-past seven o'clock, accompanied by the Prince and Princess of Wales, the Duke and Duchess of Edinburgh, Prince and Princess Christian, Princess Louise (Marchioness of Lorne) and the Marquis of Lorne, Princess Beatrice, Prince Arthur, Prince Leopold, the Duke of Cambridge, and the Maharajah Dhuleep Singh, conducted by the Lord Chamberlain and the Lord Steward and attended by the Duchess of Wellington and Lady Churchill, and the Countess of Macclesfield and Lady Frances Baillie, in waiting on the Princess of Wales and the Duchess of Edinburgh. The Queen, escorted by the Prince of Wales, preceded by the Duke and Duchess of Edinburgh, and followed by the other members of the Royal family and the other guests, was conducted by the Lord Chamberlain and the Lord Steward into St. George's Hall, where covers were laid for 136. Upon the table in front of her Majesty was the wedding-cake. The following toasts were given by the Lord Steward:—Their Royal Highnesses the Duke and Duchess of Edinburgh—"Rule Britannia;" The Queen—"God Save the Queen;" The Emperor and Empress of Russia—"Russian Hymn." The Lord of the 2nd Life Guards played during the banquet. After it her Majesty's private band played in the Throne-Room.

On Tuesday the Queen, accompanied by the Prince and Princess of Wales, the Duke and Duchess of Edinburgh, and other members of the Royal family, drove to the "meet" of her Majesty's stag-hounds at Winkfield church, where a large and fashionable "field" was assembled. The Prince of Wales and Prince Christian mounted their hunters, after which the stag "Captain" was uncared, which made off by Warfield, Bawthorn Hill, and Bracknell, where the Queen and the Royal family were passed by the hounds and full field. After a good run of an hour and a half "Captain" was captured in Windsor Great Park. Her Majesty returned to the castle to luncheon, after which Lieutenant the Hon. H. Wood, 10th Hussars, A.D.C. to Sir Garnet Wolseley, presented to the Queen the state umbrella belonging to the King of Ashantee, which was taken from the King's palace at Coomassie, and which had been sent home for presentation to her Majesty by Major-General Sir Garnet Wolseley, as a humble tribute of dutiful respect and affection from her Majesty's military and naval forces which took part in the war. The Prince and Princess of Wales, Princess Louise (Marchioness of Lorne) and the Marquis of Lorne, Prince Arthur, Prince Leopold, and the Duke of Cambridge, with numerous distinguished visitors, left the castle. The Queen's dinner-party included the Duke and Duchess of Edinburgh, Prince and Princess Christian, Lady Churchill, the Marchioness of Ely, Princess Wiasemsky, Prince Vladimir Bariatsky, and Lieutenant-General Sir T. M. Biddulph. The Duke of Edinburgh came to London and was present at the Levée, returning afterwards to the castle. Señor Gutierrez, Minister for Costa Rica, arrived and presented his credentials.

THE STATE ENTRY INTO LONDON.

"The welcome which their Royal Highnesses received on setting foot on the shores of England, and the cordiality and loyalty so markedly shown" (to quote the Duke of Edinburgh's genial letter to the Mayor of Gravesend), were excelled by the enthusiastic reception given them on their passage through London, with her Majesty the Queen, on Thursday. They were greeted with sunny weather, quite suggestive of the time "when flowers begin to blow" (as the Poet Laureate sang), upon their arrival at Gravesend; but snowdrops were the sole flowers which strewed their path on Thursday. Snow fell as the Queen, with her new daughter and Prince Alfred and a few other members of the Royal family, left Windsor Castle, at eleven o'clock, in closed carriages, for the railway station, with an escort of Scots Greys; snow fell and made the country look like one vast bride-cake as the Royal train was drawn by the flag-decked engine "Queen" to Paddington terminus, which was all ablaze with Russian and English colours; snow still fell as the Royal party were driven in open carriages from the Great Western station and received London's first "thundering cheer of the street." For hours the people had been gathering, in spite of the persistent "Russian snowfall," and they thronged the windows, balconies, and even housetops, and the pavements and each side of the roadway, all along the line from Paddington to Buckingham Palace. The Queen and the Royal couple showed their gracious appreciation of this English weather-ecorning heartiness by themselves braving the snow in an open landau, drawn by six bays, with postillions in scarlet and gold liveries. Her Majesty was dressed, as usual, in half-mourning, and looked in very good health as she smilingly bowed in acknowledgment of the hearty cheering. By her side sat the Grand Duchess, her fair winsome face lit up with a charming smile as she also lent her head to the hurrahing people. Her Imperial Highness was attired in a purple velvet mantle edged with fur, a pale blue silk dress, and white bonnet. The frank, ingenuous expression of her fresh, comely features seemed to win all hearts. Princess Beatrice sat facing the Grand Duchess; while next the Princess was the Duke of Edinburgh, in Captain's uniform, taking off his cocked hat every moment. The route was lined by the military and the police; a troop of Carabiniers preceded the Royal carriage, which had an escort of Life Guards; and the Duke of Cambridge rode to the right of her Majesty's carriage. Snow continued to fall, but the cheers grew louder, and the flags, and mottoes, and Venetian masts were in greater profusion as the Duke and Duchess passed down the Edgware-road, across which, at one point, was slung the most appropriate trophy of all—a model of the ship Galatea. Oxford-street was similarly gay with bunting and red cloth and loyal decorations. As the Royal cortège turned round Oxford-circus, quite a fairy scene greeted the eyes of the happy couple. From a pavilion, bright with hot-house plants and flowers, there were suspended from the thronged house-tops of the circus graceful garlands of red and white reeds; while at the commencement of Regent-street, plaster figures stood on pedestals holding wreaths of welcome. The cheering here was particularly enthusiastic. The same good-lumoured welcome came from the closely-packed people all the way down Regent-street, resplendent with flags and mottoes, and through Pall-mall and Cockspur-street to Trafalgar-square, where the cheers from the assembled thousands increased in volume; and—"happy thought" of the Admiralty—special pleasure must have been given to the Royal Captain by the final salute from the gallant bluejackets under Captain Boys, who were formed in front of the Admiralty, Whitehall, and Buckingham Palace, as the Queen with their Royal Highnesses finished their triumphal procession through the west end of London. At the principal window of the palace the Prince of Wales, Prince Christian, and the Royal children were awaiting the arrival of the procession, while the Princess of Wales and Princess Louise were stationed at another window. As the carriages entered the gates of Buckingham Palace the snow, which had been falling throughout the morning without intermission, suddenly ceased, and the sun broke through the clouds. A salute of artillery was given as the Royal family alighted. The immense crowd continued to cheer in the most vociferous manner; and a few minutes afterwards her Majesty and the Duke and Duchess, evidently rightly interpreting the wishes of the people, appeared at one of the balconies and repeatedly bowed their acknowledgments.

The Engravings illustrating the home-coming of the Duke and Duchess of Edinburgh given this week will be supplemented by several sketches of the reception of their Royal Highnesses in London which will appear in our next Number.

THE ASHANTEE WAR: LORD GIFFORD AND ADVANCE SCOUTS STORMING A VILLAGE.
FROM A SKETCH BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST.

THE ASHANTEE WAR.

On Saturday last we received from our Special Artist, who had been with Sir Garnet Wolseley's expedition at the capture of Coomassie, a letter and sketches, dispatched by him on Feb. 7 from Agemammu, fourteen miles from Coomassie, on the return march, after the overthrow and expulsion of King Koffee Kalkali and the burning of the city. We are indebted to the Hon. Lieutenant H. J. L. Wood, 10th Hussars, Aide-de-Camp to Sir Garnet Wolseley, for bringing us these sketches, together with the General's despatches to the Colonial Office. Our Artist wrote as follows:—

"Coomassie has been reached at last, and was destroyed yesterday morning. On the 4th we had tremendous fighting, a very hard day altogether, and we all arrived at Coomassie so very much exhausted that many of us were incapable on the following day. Unfortunately, I was among the number; but nevertheless I was able to keep up sufficiently to make some interesting sketches. I have hurried off the accompanying sketch, as Sir Garnet is going to send it, in a few minutes, with his despatches. Coomassie was burnt, and therefore I think it more interesting to show it in flames. The Naval Brigade cleared the streets of our carriers and others, that they might not be burnt while trying to save and steal things from the burning houses. The King kept out of sight, and would not see Sir Garnet. My sketches of the house and bed-room of the King, of the slaughter-place where the slaves are killed, and various other sketches, I shall take up with me, as I hope to leave Cape Coast by the next mail, or else in a Government ship. Our active engineers set fire to the thatched roofs of the houses with large and long torches, and the whole town was soon a mass of flames and smoke."

This is the scene represented in our Artist's Sketch, which forms the subject of our Large Engraving, presented as an Extra Supplement with this Number of the Illustrated London News. The details of the military actions, and the circumstances under which General Sir Garnet Wolseley ordered the destruction of the enemy's capital, are related in the following extracts from his despatches to the War Office and to the Colonial Office, the former dated from Coomassie on Feb. 5, the latter from Agemammu, on the 7th:—

"Coomassie, Feb. 5.

"According to the intention expressed in my despatch of the 1st inst., I on that day attacked Bequah, about a mile to the west of Amoafu. The operation was successfully carried out under the command of Brigadier-General Sir Archibald Alison, Bart., C.B. On the day following I moved forward to Agemammu, the enemy disputing every mile of ground. There I established a fortified post, at which I left all my tents and baggage."

"On the 3rd inst. I moved forward again, the enemy in great force opposing our advance and hanging round our flanks. While on the march I received a letter from the King, begging me to halt and saying he would consent to my terms. I replied that he had so deceived me before that I could not trust him; but, to prove to him how anxious I was for peace, I would wait for the night on the Ordah river, and would not advance beyond it with all my force until the following morning, if he would send to me at once his mother and brother as hostages."

"During the night I had a bridge constructed over the river, and gave the enemy nearly two hours of daylight the following morning (4th) before I crossed the river. The advance guard, under the command of Colonel M'Leod, 42nd Highlanders, was brought to a standstill shortly after the advance began, and a general action soon developed itself, lasting for more than six hours. The enemy did not, however, fight with the same courage as at Amoafu, for although their resistance was most determined their fire was wild, and they did not generally attack us at such close quarters as in the former action. The village of Ordah-su having been carried by the Rifle Brigade at nine o'clock, I massed all my force there, having previously passed all the reserve ammunition, field hospitals, and supplies, through the troops, who held the road between the river and the village, a distance of about a mile. The enemy then attacked the village with large numbers from all sides, and for some hours we could make no progress, but steadily held our ground. The 42nd Highlanders, being then sent to the front, advanced with pipes playing, and carried the enemy's position to the north of the village in the most gallant style, Captain Rait's artillery doing most effective service in covering the attack, which was led by Colonel M'Leod. After some further fighting on the front line, a panic seemed to have seized the enemy, who fled along the road to Coomassie in complete rout."

"Although the columns they had detailed to assault our flanks and rear continued for some time afterwards to make partial attacks upon the village, we followed close upon the enemy's heels into Coomassie. The town was still occupied by large numbers of armed men, who did not attempt to resist. The King had fled no one knew whither. Our troops had undergone a most fatiguing day's work, no water fit for drinking having been obtained during the action or the subsequent advance, and the previous night's rest having been broken by a tornado, which drenched our bivouac. It was nearly six o'clock when the troops formed up in the main street of Coomassie and gave three cheers for the Queen. Since my arrival here last night I have sent several messengers to the King, and used every possible effort to induce him to come in and make peace. Should he refuse my offers, I shall destroy his palace and his capital, and march without a day's delay to the coast."

"Agemammu, Feb. 7.

"On the 5th inst. I had the honour to address you from Coomassie, and to inform you that, if the King refused to come in, I should destroy his capital. I now regret to have to report that all my efforts to induce him to come himself, or send a Prince of the Royal blood to treat with me, failed; and that the King only continued that policy of falsehood and deception which have marked all his dealings with me. Messengers who arrived throughout the 5th were abusing the liberty which I allowed them by carrying off arms and ammunition from the town, and on the evening of that day I decided upon withdrawing my troops and destroying Coomassie."

"My decision to withdraw immediately was strengthened by the fact that tornadoes appeared to have set in, and that the passage of the rivers in my rear might be rendered more difficult by delay. I had in the morning sent off all the wounded who were unable to march under escort of Wood's and Russell's regiments and a company of the Rifle Brigade; and I now issued orders for an advance, on the morning of the 6th, of all the remaining troops, beyond Coomassie, the dispositions being such that, on the facing about of the column, all would be in order for the homeward march. Prize agents were appointed, and the most valuable articles left in the palace were packed up; the King having evidently removed or concealed his treasure. A party of the Royal Engineers was engaged during the night mining the palace. Early on the 6th our homeward movements commenced, headed by the Naval Brigade and covered by a rear guard of the 42nd Highlanders, which did not retire till the town had been set on fire in every quarter and the mines in the palace fired. A tornado had raged during the previous day and night, but the destruction of the town by fire was complete."

"In the despatch which I addressed to you on Oct. 13 last, asking for English troops to be sent out to enable me to accomplish my mission, I stated that that mission—to ensure a lasting peace with the Ashantee kingdom—could only be fulfilled in one way—by defeating the Ashantee army, by pursuing it, if necessary, to the capital of the Ashantee kingdom, and by so showing to the King and all those chiefs who urged him on to war, that the aim of her Majesty is powerful to punish her enemies even in the very heart of their own country. That mission I conceive I have now fulfilled by the aid of the troops which her Majesty's Government confided to me for its accomplishment. Yet I can truly state that no means were left untried by me to bring about a peaceable solution of the campaign. Up to the last hour I left the King's palace untouched, in hopes that he would return. The troops refrained with the most admirable self-control from spoliation or plunder; and they left the capital of this kingdom, so famed for its gold, without carrying away as plunder one article of value."

"All the troops have now reached or passed this point. The return march was not made without difficulty. The streams and rivers had become so swollen from the effect of the tornadoes of the last few days that the shallow swamps had become waist deep, and the water in the river Ordah had yesterday submerged the bridge constructed on the night of the 3rd inst., and was still rising when the troops passed the river. But the convoys were all taken over in safety, and the men of the Rifle Brigade and 42nd Regiment, before whose arrival the bridge had commenced to give way, undressed, passed their clothes over the heads of natives, and themselves forded the stream, in one part fully 5 ft. deep. I shall continue my homeward march to-morrow by as rapid stages as the nature of the country will allow, and with every military precaution."

In his despatch to the Secretary of State for Colonial Affairs Sir Garnet Wolseley remarks:—

"The whole scheme of Ashantee politics is so based upon treachery that the King does not either understand any other form of negotiation or believe it possible that others can have honest intentions. Under these circumstances, it became clear that a treaty would be as valueless to us as it was difficult to obtain. Nothing remained but to leave such a mark of our power to punish as should deter from future aggression a nation whom treaties do not bind. I have done all I could to avoid the necessity, but it was forced upon me. I gave orders for the destruction of the palace and the burning of the city. I had at one time also contemplated the destruction of the Bantama, where the sacred ashes of former Kings are entombed, but this would have involved a delay of some hours. Very heavy rain had fallen. I feared that the streams might have risen in my rear sufficiently to seriously delay my march. I considered it better, therefore, not to risk further the health of the troops, the wet weather having already threatened seriously to affect it."

"The demolition of the place was complete. From all that I can gather, I believe that the result will be such a diminution in the prestige and military power of the Ashantee monarch as may result in the break-up of the kingdom altogether. This I had been anxious to avoid, because it seems impossible to foresee what Power can take this nation's place among the feeble races of this coast. I certainly believe that your Lordship may be well convinced that no more utterly atrocious Government than that which has thus, perhaps, fallen ever existed on the face of the earth. Their capital was a charnel-house; their religion a combination of cruelty and treachery; their policy the natural outcome of their religion. I cannot think that, whatever may be the final fate of the people of this country, the absolute annihilation of such a race, should it occur, would be a subject for unmixed regret. In any case, I believe that the main object of my expedition has been perfectly secured. The territories of the Gold Coast will not again be troubled by the warlike ambition of this restless Power. I may add that the flag of England from this moment will be received throughout Western Africa with respectful awe, a treatment which has been of late years by no means its invariable fate among the savage tribes of this region."

On Wednesday the following telegraphic despatch from Sir Garnet Wolseley, dated Feb. 16 at Prah-su, was published, together with one of the same date from Commodore Hewitt:—

"Feb. 16.

"King Koffee having sent 1000 oz. of gold as a first instalment of the indemnity, with a request for peace, I received his envoy at Fomanna on the 13th inst., and sent the draught treaty to Coomassie for signature. The King of Adansi intends to leave Ashantee and live with the Wassaws and Denkiras, in alliance with her Majesty. An officer left Captain Glover eighteen miles east of Coomassie on the 10th inst., and passed through Coomassie to Fomanna unmolested, with escort of only twenty men. Captain Glover will retire immediately to Accra. All my white troops are on the way to Cape Coast. The last detachment will embark on the 22nd inst. The sick and wounded are doing well."

The despatch from Commodore Hewitt, on board H.M.S. Active, at Cape Coast Castle, Feb. 16, stated that the Dromedary would leave on that day, with thirty-nine invalids for St. Vincent. The most serious cases of fever and dysentery would be sent to Gibraltar by the Victor Emmanuel on the 25th. The Thames, Sprite, and Nebraska would convey others to England immediately. The health of the naval squadron was very good. All the white troops had recrossed the Prah, and would be embarked by the 23rd. The sick and wounded were being carried down by easy stages to the coast."

Special telegrams from Prah-su profess to state the preliminaries of peace agreed upon between Sir Garnet Wolseley and the King of Ashantee. The latter binds himself to pay 50,000 oz. of gold; to renounce his pretensions on five tributary districts; to withdraw his forces from all parts of the Protectorate; to keep a clear road between the Prah and Coomassie; to protect goods in transit, and to prohibit human sacrifices. A garrison is to be left at Prah-su until the completion of negotiations.

The incidents which our Special Artist has delineated in the sketches engraved for this week's publication are sufficiently described by himself as follows:—

"Lord Gifford, who, with about fifty scouts, has been at the front of the army, to feel the position and strength of the enemy, was ordered to attack and destroy the village of Egginassie. His scouts, who are seen entering the village in my sketch, consist of picked men from the Kossahs, Bonny men, Houssas, Opobos, and West India negro regiments. Their costumes are so varied that it is impossible to describe them. In this particular charge the Opobos were to the front. They were fantastic figures, as you see, wearing caps of monkey-skin decorated with long feathers, porcupine quills, or tails of roe. But they stormed the place with a rush. It was not one of the largest villages, but so near to the road that it was thought unwise to leave the Ashantees there, lest they should attack our convoys of stores. Lord Gifford is a most courageous and active officer, as he has proved by his behaviour at the front. Since I made this sketch we have been to a very large village called Bequah. He led here, as usual, and met with some very severe firing from the enemy. Unfortunately, his scouts, who behaved admirably, were ill supported by the Houssas. These, instead of running up to his assistance, made for the bush on each side and lay down. So Lord Gifford alone had to return the fire of nearly three thousand Ashantees before the whites could come up. As it was, he at once ran back, and, with the assistance of another officer, literally kicked the Houssas on. They were actually found by him lying down and refusing to fight. At last, by great exertion, they were got up and pushed forward. Lord Gifford thus succeeded in keeping back the enemy until the white troops arrived. I was, unluckily, in the middle of a native company, and for a time I was rather nervous, for fear these should start off on their own account. But, just when they showed the most likelihood of doing so, a shout of triumph rent the air, which told us that Lord Gifford was in the village. The native company I was with was then persuaded to rush forward. So I arrived in the village of Bequah just as the enemy were compelled to leave it. Almost immediately afterwards the Naval Brigade, the Marines, and part of the 42nd Highlanders arrived to complete the rout of the enemy. The Ashantees, as usual, took to the bush, and opened a heavy fire upon us in the village. But, not long after this Colonel M'Leod, who was in charge of the attack, ordered the village to be burnt. Only those who have beheld such a scene will or can imagine its grandeur. The thatched roofs, being very dry, burned with wonderful rapidity." This is the subject of one of the Illustrations.

With reference to another subject, our Artist writes:—"The group of Ashantee prisoners brought into camp at Quaman (or Korraman, as in our map) had been captured in one of these village attacks. They looked a miserable set of men, women, and boys. One or two, indeed, of the women, though extremely plain, appeared to have lived well; but the men and boys were, in general, mere masses of bones held together by skin. The King's head scout was fortunately captured among them. He is the second man to the left, in the front rank, of those I have drawn. A guard of Bonny men was placed over these prisoners. No doubt, as the Bonny men are cannibals, they would have much liked to try the flavour of an Ashantee. Indeed, they looked at the poor meagre bodies in such a manner as led one really to believe that it was only the presence of the white man that prevented their eating the captives."

"The reception of news from the front," says our Artist again, "was always an exciting moment. It is shown in my sketch. General Sir Garnet Wolseley rides in a Madeira chair, so constructed and fixed to bamboo poles that four natives are enabled to carry him. The officer who brings the news has been wounded, and rides upon a white mule. He comes up to Sir Garnet, as close as the narrow bush road will allow him, to hand him a slip of paper. All those who are round the General try to read in his face what kind of news he has received. But in this they are sure to fail; the face does not change in the least. Sir Garnet, too, has lately grown a beard. An escort of native policemen is behind his travelling-chair."

In the long day's battle at Amoafu, on Jan. 31, when so many British officers and soldiers were killed or wounded, we see the means by which they were carried off the field. Our Artist says of this:—"The manner in which the native hammock-men worked yesterday, at the big fight, when shot and slugs were flying all round them, was very much to their credit. My sketch shows the arrival of a wounded officer of the 42nd, in a hammock, and the men running forward to see who it is that is wounded. The energetic medical officer of the Naval Brigade, when not engaged with his own men, always first approached the wounded to ascertain the nature of the case, and walked beside the hammock to the temporary field hospital. He was, without doubt, one of the most active. The hammock-bearers, having delivered their charge, again returned, in the most courageous manner, to the scene of fighting in the bush. They had a lively time of it, with nearly 250 men and officers wounded out of our total strength of 2000." We understand from Commodore Hewitt's despatch that the medical officer above referred to is Dr. Henry Fegan, R.N., staff-surgeon of H.M.S. Active. Captain Grubbe, also, in reporting the affair at Boborassie, on the 29th, speaks of the gallant conduct of Dr. Fegan. While the rear guard, to which he was attached, was being attacked, he brought in a wounded marine, at great personal risk to himself. The Commodore praises his zeal and energy, his arrangements for the sick and wounded, and his kind attention to their wants. Sir Garnet Wolseley's despatches mention Deputy Surgeon-General Home, C.B., Surgeon-Major Mackinnon, C.B., and six other army surgeons, besides Staff-Surgeon Irwin, R.N., as having done their duty well."

In an hour of repose on the march to Coomassie, natives belonging to the force may be seen playing at the negro game of "warry." Twelve cups are ranged before them, and four of the large seeds, picked from the neighbouring bush, are put into each cup. Each player has to pass his hand round the board a certain number of times, and there are certain rules by which he may take a seed from one cup and place it in another. Our Artist watched the game, but could not quite understand its rules. The winner is he who at the end holds most seeds in his cup. They are as intent and silent over this game as our chess-players or whist-players, and large sums of money—in one instance so much as £17—are often staked upon it. In that instance the money was snatched up by a man of another tribe, who ran away with it. He was pursued by the players, and they got it back from him. Gambling is the vice of barbarians in every land."

We shall give a number of additional Illustrations in our next week's issue.

At Sheffield, the unionist dispute between Messrs. Rogers and Sons and a number of their cutlers who had left work without notice has been adjusted by the agreement of the men to return and work out their month. Meanwhile the dispute itself will be submitted to the arbitration of Mr. Thomas Hughes.—On Monday the Leicestershire coalowners reduced the price of coal 1s. to 3s. per ton. A fall in price to the extent of 3s. to 4s. per ton has taken place in South Staffordshire. The wages of the West Lancashire collier are to be reduced 15 per cent.—On Tuesday the Earl of Dudley and other colliery owners in South Staffordshire reduced coal 4s. per ton to domestic consumers, and 3s. to ironmasters, bringing down best coal east of Dudley to 20s. 6d.—The colliery proprietors in the Forest of Dean have decided to reduce wages 20 per cent.—Apprehensions of a strike of colliers in the Bristol district have been dispelled by an amicable agreement that the matter shall be left to arbitration, and that the disputed 10 per cent shall be paid into a banker's hands pending the decision.—An extensive lock-out of farm labourers is reported in the fen and the eastern counties. In some districts it is due to the demands of the men for higher pay, and in others to an effort on the part of the farmers to reduce wages.

FOREIGN AND COLONIAL NEWS.

FRANCE.

Thursday, March 12.

Every fresh victory gained by the Government of "moral order" in the Assembly is in reality an additional defeat, as it necessarily conduces to its unpopularity throughout the country. During the past week the Duc de Broglie and his colleagues have achieved another triumph at Versailles, which has only increased the contempt with which they and their arbitrary rule are generally regarded. A short time ago the Figaro—a journal which, though professedly Legitimist, has paid court by turns to the Bonapartists, the Thiersists, the Orleanists, and the present Chief of the State—published an extremely violent article inviting Marshal MacMahon to achieve a coup d'état, presumably to the advantage of the Count de Chambord. The article attracted much attention, especially as it was said that the Figaro was the President's favourite newspaper; and M. Baze, one of the questors of the Assembly, brought the matter before M. Buffet and the Bureau. The latter decided, however, not to move in the matter, although the insulting language used by the Figaro with reference to the Assembly was such as no journal has ever employed since the Mot d'Ordre and the Cri du Peuple demanded that all the "rurals" should be guillotined.

The Republican party, however, determined to call the attention of the Assembly to the article; and at a recent sitting M. Christophle formally interpellated the Government on the subject. He set forth in a most moderate speech that, by allowing the Figaro to go unpunished, the Cabinet showed that it sympathized with its seditious suggestion. Such a state of things, he maintained, could not exist. If Republican journals, such as M. About's paper, the XIXe Siècle, were interdicted on the public way for insulting the Assembly, Royalist organs guilty of the same offence should not enjoy immunity. It might be said that the editor of the Figaro had apologised and disavowed the writer of the article; but in the course of his so-called apology he had repeated the offence with aggravation, recommending force against the Republican minority. The Ministry, M. Christophle remarked, had "falsified the title of 'Government of moral order,' which it assumed a few months ago, and has fallen back upon its original odious designation of 'Gouvernement de Combat.' It has made use of the power vested in its hands by virtue of the state of siege in the most illegal manner, not in furtherance of any principle, but simply of its own interests, decreeing the inviolability of its own friends in place of Parliamentary inviolability. It is energetic against agitation for a legal dissolution, but connives at a threat of terrible dispersion."

The Duc de Broglie, who replied, treated the matter as one of very little import. He agreed that the Figaro article was blamable, but remarked that the general line taken by it was good, that of the XIXe Siècle—which supports M. Thiers—being, on the contrary, very bad. An allegation that the Thiers Government was as arbitrary as the present Ministry in press prosecutions brought M. Victor Lefranc, ex-Minister of the Interior, to the tribune. He indignantly repudiated the Duc de Broglie's imputation, and defied him to show that he had ever passed over such an attack as that made by the Figaro without bringing it before the tribunals. The Chamber then divided, the Government triumphing by 388 votes against 331.

With the exception of this discussion—which, it may be remarked, completely disappointed popular expectation, there being no exciting contest, no "scenes," no calls to order, such as usually occur at interpellation debates—nothing of interest has taken place in the Assembly this week. The deputies have been steadily plodding on through the new taxation laws, listening to innumerable dry financial speeches, and rejecting countless amendments, each more ridiculous than the other. This much has been decided upon: that there shall be a new valuation of land formerly uncultivated, and that a tax shall be levied on goods conveyed by luggage-trains. Warm congratulations were offered to M. Ledru-Rollin by the Left on his taking his seat on Monday.

With regard to the Committee of Thirty, which has been occupied during the last three months in drawing up the new electoral law, that body has decided that candidates for election must be born or domiciled in the departments in which they present themselves, or must be registered on the list of ratepayers there, or have previously been public functionaries. They must, moreover, have attained the age of thirty instead of twenty-five years, which has hitherto been deemed the period of discretion. Officers of the army, whether serving with their regiments or on the retired list, will be ineligible.

A grand ball was given at the Tribunal de Commerce, on Monday night, in honour of Marshal MacMahon. The decoration of the grand courtyard, which had been transformed into a dancing-room, was exceedingly gorgeous. Eighteen immense chandeliers hung from the glazed roof, concealed by a veil of star-spangled rose silk, through which streamed the rays of eight electric lamps. The arcades of the ground floor were profusely decorated with mirrors and trailing plants—masses of palm-trees, bananas, camellias, cacti, and rhododendrons rising at each corner of the salle. Between the eighty lofty columns of the first-floor gallery, hung with crimson silk curtains fringed with gold, hung eighty chandeliers, throwing additional light upon the animated scene below. The decoration of the various salons was equally splendid. Marshal MacMahon and the Duchess de Magenta arrived at ten o'clock, attended by a numerous suite. Having been received by M. Daguin, the President of the Tribunal, they walked in regal fashion round the salons, preceded by several huissiers and commissaries of the fête, eventually returning to a special drawing-room, where the Ministers, the members of the diplomatic body, the Governor of Paris, the Préfet de la Seine, and other functionaries were already awaiting their arrival.

M. Emile Olivier is now an Academician in partibus. At the eleventh hour the Academy deputed M. Patui to request him to modify his eulogium of Napoleon III.; but the ex-Minister formally declined to do so, and his reception has consequently been indefinitely postponed. Facetious journalists suggest that he and Bishop Dupanloup, who it will be recollected, resigned his arm-chair at the Institute when M. Littré, the eminent Positivist, was elected in the place of Father Gratry, should establish an opposition Academy, selecting their colleagues among the unsuccessful candidates for admission to the older establishment. The speech that M. Olivier was to have read, and the reply which M. Emile Angier was to have made, have both been published by the newspapers. The latter, who has never made any secret of his Imperial sympathies, warmly compliments M. Olivier on his devotion to the Bonapartes. The latter is reported to have received a letter from the ex-Empress thanking him for the terms in which he proposed to speak of her late husband.

The death of Mlle. Desclée, after a long illness, leaves a great blank in the theatrical world here.

The Director of the Fine Arts has published the regulations concerning the admission of works of art to the Salon, which opens, as usual, on May 1. March 20 is the last day for sending in pictures.

SPAIN.

Marshal Serrano has replaced General Moriones Reinforcements to the extent of 16,000 men have been sent to the north since the Marshal left Madrid. The total Republican force in the north is now estimated at 65,000 men. The Carlists are concentrated before Bilbao, their positions occupying three leagues of ground.

A number of prominent Carlists residing in Madrid have received orders to quit the city.

The Government have decided to appoint General Concha to succeed General Jovellar as Captain-General of Cuba. Cespedes, ex-president of the Cuban insurgents, has been betrayed and shot.

ITALY.

In the Parliament, on Wednesday, it was resolved to present an address to King Victor Emmanuel congratulating him upon the anniversary of his accession to the throne. A similar address will be presented by the municipality of Florence.

The Chamber of Deputies has agreed to all the clauses of the Fortification Bill, and has approved a special outlay of 9,000,000 lire to complete the grant for clothing the army. The bill is progressing in Committee. The financial bills have all been reported upon with approval, save one rendering unregistered documents invalid, which was rejected.

HOLLAND.

An official despatch of the 3rd inst. from the Acheen expedition reports that the Dutch are organising an establishment in the Kraton. The neighbourhood of their camp was quiet, and most of the Sultan's allies are said to have left him.

In Wednesday's sitting of the Parliament a bill was passed, by 60 votes against 6, providing for a system of fortifications at an expense of about 30,000,000 florins.

GERMANY.

On Saturday the Emperor had a short drive out—the first public appearance he has made since his late illness.

Prince Bismarck has been suffering for some days from acute neuralgia, and attacks of his old enemy, sleeplessness.

A further distribution of the French indemnity to the extent of forty-two million thalers has been resolved upon by the Federal Council.

Bishop Eberhard of Treves has been arrested for acting in contravention of the ecclesiastical laws, and has been lodged in prison. There was no disturbance on the occasion. A riot occurred at Treves on Monday in consequence of the forcible closing of the Roman Catholic seminary by the police. The professors having been turned out, the mob succeeded in beating the police and letting the professors in again. The authorities prevailed in the end, however. The professors had to go, and soldiers occupied the college.

An international agricultural exhibition on a grand scale will be held at Bremen, under the patronage of the Crown Prince, from June 13 to June 21 next.

AUSTRO-HUNGARY.

The Emperor Francis Joseph arrived, on Sunday morning, at Pesth, from Vienna. His Majesty received the resignation of the Hungarian Ministers; but, before deciding upon accepting it, he determined, it is said, to receive in audience, singly, the different party leaders who may eventually be called upon to form a coalition Ministry, and to hear their views on the state of affairs. The Emperor on Wednesday paid a visit to M. Deak. It is stated that in the new Cabinet M. de Szlavy will again be Premier, and that MM. Ghyczy and Tisza will likewise take office in the new Administration.

In the Hungarian Chamber of Deputies a petition for the introduction of civil marriage has, by consent of the three chief parties in the House, been referred to a Committee.

Rioting has been caused at Pesth by the excitement of the populace at certain reports that a prisoner who had committed suicide was driven to the act by ill-treatment. After the funeral, a tumultuous assemblage took place in front of the Townhall, which was set on fire. The military had to be called out, and the mob was fired upon, four persons being killed and others severely wounded.

The bill introduced by the Government for settling the relations between Church and State—in other words, for keeping the clergy from interfering in civil affairs—was doctored on Monday in the Lower House of the Reichsrath by 224 votes against 71. The Minister of Public Worship, Herr von Stremayr, made a speech in which he declared that the bill was the product of a calm and unprejudiced consideration of the existing state of affairs, and not an attempt to oppress the Catholic Church. The House proceeded, on Wednesday, with the discussion of the clauses of the Ecclesiastical Bills. An amendment relative to the oath to be taken by the bishops on their appointment was rejected after the Minister of Public Worship had delivered a speech in opposition to it.

AMERICA.

Mr. Charles Sumner died, on Wednesday, at Washington, aged sixty-three. Over-exertion in the Senate reproduced angina pectoris, his former disease, and he sank rapidly.

The death is also announced, at the age of seventy-four, of Mr. Fillmore, who was President from 1850 to 1853. This gentleman was one of the three "accidental" Presidents of the United States. When President Taylor died, on July 9, 1850, after a reign of one year and four months, Vice-President Fillmore succeeded to the post by constitutional provision.

The currency controversy still proceeds in Congress.

INDIA.

There is little change in the general character of the intelligence from Bengal. The Commissioner of Patna telegraphs from Durbunghah that he is not now apprehensive. The relief works have staved off the danger. The Viceroy states that the staff of Europeans for the relief works has been increased. All the requests of the Bengal Government for men have been promptly and fully complied with, "and nothing," he adds, "shall stand in the way of meeting the wants of the famine districts." The number of persons employed on the relief works in Northern Tirhoot is rapidly increasing. The distress, it is said, is being effectually relieved in the worst districts.

The India papers contain accounts of the religious riots which took place in Bombay. It seems that the Mohammedans were greatly excited by the comments of one of their priests upon a translation of Washington Irving's "Life of Mahomet," which had been published by a Parsee. An offer was made to stop the sale of the book, and it was thought that the matter had been pacifically settled. As already reported, however, serious riots occurred, a good deal of pillage took place, many arrests were made, and several persons were injured. The Parsees of Bombay have met and commented on the attitude of the local Government towards the Parsee community with reference to the late riots. A memorial on the subject is to be addressed to the Secretary of State for India.

AUSTRALIA.

It was telegraphed from Melbourne on Tuesday that the Victorian Parliament has been dissolved. The Ministry has announced that the policy upon which it appeals to the country is confined to the one issue of constitutional reform. The Government desires to bring both Chambers of the Legislature into harmony, and proposes the Norwegian plan—that on the rejection of bills by either House both Houses should sit together to consider such bills.

Countess Danner, widow of the late King Frederick VII. of Denmark, to whom she wasmorganatically married, died yesterday week at Genoa.

Yarkund has begun to feel the commercial effects of Russian encroachment. It is said that Russian goods are being imported there so largely as to depress the value of native goods.

A telegram has been received at the Foreign Office from Mr. Wade, dated Pekin, Feb. 17, stating that all was quiet there on that day, which is the first of the Chinese new year.

It is stated from Constantinople that the Turkish Government has contracted for another advance, amounting to £100,000. The conditions are nearly the same as those stipulated for the advance of £130,000 reported a short time ago.

When 1500 miles on her voyage to New Zealand, the steamship Atrato, with Government emigrants on board, broke her piston and split her cylinder, in consequence of which disablement she was obliged to put back under sail, and arrived at Plymouth yesterday week.

An agreement has been signed between the representatives of the late Duke William of Brunswick and the city of Geneva acknowledging the validity of the Duke's will. The city of Geneva undertakes to restore the Mantua vase, it having been proved that the late Duke had only a life interest in it.

WILLS AND BEQUESTS.

The will, with four codicils, of St. Andrew Beauchamp, Baron St. John, of Bletscoe, Bedfordshire, who died on Jan. 27 last, at Melchbourne Park, was proved on the 2nd inst., by his eldest son, St. Andrew, now Lord St. John, the acting executor, the personal estate being sworn under £25,000. The testator devised to his widow, Eleanor Lady St. John, for life, Melchbourne Cottage as a residence, and £500 per annum in addition to the jointure already secured to her, and he provides portions for his four younger children: the residue is left to his eldest son. The will and codicils are dated, June 19, 1866; July 2, 1868; Feb. 9 and May 18, 1869; and Jan. 20, 1874.

The will and codicil of James Randall, of No. 25, Mark-lane, and of Buckingham, who died on the 4th ult., have been proved, the personal estate being sworn under £70,000. There are numerous bequests to his executors and personal friends; a life interest in £20,000 is given to his brothers and sister, and the reversion to his nephews and nieces; the nephews also take present legacies of £2000, and the nieces £500, each. Testator's collection of paintings is left to members of his family as heirlooms; one, by Sir Joshua Reynolds, is specifically bequeathed to his nephew Henry, who is also appointed residuary legatee; £500 each is bequeathed to the Royal Free Hospital, the London Fever Hospital, the Charing-cross Hospital, the North London Hospital, the Royal National Life-Boat Institution, the Dogs' Home, and the Royal Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals; and £200 to the Artists' General Benevolent Institution.

The will, dated Nov. 7, 1873, of Mrs. Julia Maria Morton Pegus, late of Freshford, Somersetshire, who died on Jan. 29 last, was proved on the 27th ult. by the Rev. Henry Wheeler Brenton, the acting executor, the personal estate being sworn under £40,000. The testatrix bequeaths to her sister-in-law, Miss Mary Anne Jane Pegus, £6000 Consols, and a similar amount of stock to her executor, Mr. Brenton; to the British and Foreign Bible Society (for circulating Protestant revisions of the Bible only), the London Society for Promoting Christianity Among the Jews, the Irish Church Mission, and the Church Pastoral Aid Society £2000 Three per Cent Consolidated Bank Annuities each; to the Colonial and Continental Church Society, the London Female Domestic Bible Mission, and the London City Mission, £1000 each of the same annuities; to her servants, Mary Mortlock and Elizabeth Grove, she leaves legacies of 19 gs. each, ample mourning, and annuities of £30—at their deaths the stock to be set aside to meet such annuities is to go to the Church Missionary Society for Africa and the East, to which society testatrix also leaves the residue of her personal estate. All the legacies are given free of legacy duty. Testatrix devises all her real estate to Mr. Brenton.

The will, with two codicils, dated March 31, Aug. 16, and Sept. 10, 1873, of Frederick Charrington, late of Mile-end, and of Farnside, Wimbledon, who died on Dec. 13 last, was proved on the 27th ult. by Louisa Elizabeth Charrington, the widow, Charles Charrington, the brother, James Vaughan Stock, and Henry Stock, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £140,000. The testator has left to his widow his furniture, an immediate legacy of £400, an annuity of £3000, and his residences at Brighton and Wimbledon for life; to each of his daughters, £10,000; and the residue of his property to his sons in equal shares. There are pecuniary legacies to his executors and others.

The will and codicil, dated Feb. 6 and 7 last, of George Chasemore, late of Croydon, Surrey, who died on the 9th ult., were proved on the 26th ult. by Henry Chasemore, the son, and Thomas Chandler, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £80,000. The testator leaves to his daughter, Mrs. Augusta Trew, an absolute legacy of £2000, and £17,000 upon trust for her and her children. After making a provision for his son Frederick, and giving legacies to his grandchildren, Mr. Chandler, and two of his servants, he gives the remainder of his property to his son Henry.

The will and three codicils of William Ewart, senior partner in the firm of William Ewart and Son, of Belfast, flax-spinners and linen merchants, were proved at Belfast on the 25th ult., the personal estate being sworn under £120,000. It bequeaths £5000, in addition to a sum of £5000 secured by marriage settlement, in trust for his grandsons, William Ewart Beamish Barter, Charles St. Ledger Barter, and Beamish St. John Barter, and their issue; the further sum of £500 to William Ewart Beamish Barter, and the following life annuities:—£50 to James Tilley, testator's nephew; £50 to Jane Whittle; £50 to Rosetta Ewart, and eight annuities of £30 each to her children. Testator leaves his pictures, prints, books, plate, and household furniture to his widow for her life, with an annuity of £400 and a legacy of £100; to the Protestant Orphan Society for the counties of Antrim and Down, £200; to the Belfast General Hospital, £50; to the Belfast Charitable Society, £100; and to the Representative Body of the Church of Ireland, £200 in trust for the widows of the clergy of the united dioceses of Down and Connor and Dromore, and devises and bequeaths all the estates of which the testator was possessed and the residue of his personal estate, after providing for the payment of the above legacies and annuities, to his son, William Ewart. The executors are William Ewart, William Quartus Ewart, and Robert Kelso Mathewson. By his second codicil testator bequeathed additional life annuities to the extent of £50.

PARLIAMENT.

On the day after the meeting of Parliament there seemed to be still a sort of bewilderment and confusion, and settling down was by no means the order of the day. The new members were as yet rather wild, though the old ones seemed more at their ease when they ranged themselves in their changed places on each side of the chair. Notably, components of the late Government were in presence, fitting themselves into seats on the front Opposition bench—Mr. W. E. Forster, seeming to be rehearsing the part of leader; Mr. Lowe, smiling, and apparently prepared to be bitterly facetious on the least provocation; Dr. Lyon Playfair, looking, it might be fancied, rather glum, and with reason, inasmuch as he has missed the fruition of his political life; Mr. Adam, stoically pleasant in expression; Mr. Stansfeld, wearing a smile so stereotyped that it suggested a painful effort to preserve it; Mr. Arthur Peel, calm as usual; and Mr. Childers, who assumes a right to a seat in this place of honour, to which he has not strictly a right, inasmuch as he was an ex-Minister long before the late Government resigned. Sir Henry James was there as a member of the ex-Ministry, but Sir W. Vernon Harcourt did not assume so much of state as belongs to occupying the front Opposition bench, but hovered about the bar restlessly.

The new Ministers, or rather those subordinate officials who had not vacated their seats on taking office, were not in a hurry to fix themselves on the Treasury bench, even Mr. W. H. Smith, who was temporary manager for the Government, settling there as little as possible. Some of the old members who have acquired particular seats, corresponding to each other on either side of the chair, by courtesy or a sort of prescription, took "seisin" of them; and notably Mr. Henley and Mr. Walpole, as ever, sat close together, like "twin cherries on one stalk," on the first seats above the gangway, on the third bench. There was a considerable crowd in which numerous familiar faces were to be recognised, even when neophytes and veterans were mingled higgledy-piggledy on the floor.

The stentorian cry of "Mr. Speaker!" which the old members know so well, soon echoed through the chamber, and, startling the novices, sent them like so many frightened rabbits into any places they could find, and the House was duly ranged, all standing to receive Mr. Brand as he marched up the floor. This, perhaps, was rather a trying situation, for, as he was not yet a full-blown Speaker, he had not assumed his panoply of full-bottomed wig and flowing gown, but wore a bob-wig and a plain black Court dress, but without the small sword that usually accompanies that costume, which all Speakers were accustomed to wear on like occasions to the present, but which Mr. Evelyn Denison first dispensed with about the middle of his career. Presently came Black Rod, with the usual dictatorial message from the Lords ordering the Commons to appear in the Upper House before quasi-Royalty semi-authorised—that is, before a Royal Commission sitting on a bench before the regular throne. There confirmation of the choice of a Speaker was accorded to her Majesty's faithful Commons; and Mr. Brand, with special dignity and impressiveness, demanded the usual privileges of those over whom he had been placed, and was eloquently when he changed his tone and spoke of himself in all humility.

Returned to their own House, the Commons received from the Speaker intelligence of what had occurred in the "other place," which no one was supposed to know, though half of them had seen and heard it all with their own personal eyes and ears; and then Mr. Brand, slipping out for a few minutes, came back "full-armed"—that is to say, in his complete official costume; and, being now "every inch" a Speaker, assumed the chair amidst the cheers of everybody present who had a right to cheer. Alone, he took the brief oath that is nowadays considered to be sufficient to bind members of the Legislature to their loyalty and good behaviour, and then commenced the general process of swearing in. Long tables had been added to the massive fixtures of that kind which stand before the chair, and on both were arranged, exactly like the plates for a coming feast, all the purple and gilt Testaments which are kept in store in the House. As many members as could hold a corner of each of these were called by name, and, having arranged themselves in two rows, followed the oath, as read by Sir Erskine May, together, and as much in unison as they could, the effect being, so to speak, rather congregational.

The proposer and seconder of the Speaker, Mr. Chaplin and Lord George Cavendish, who had been in attendance on him as closely as two aides-de-camp, had the privilege of swearing in the first group, and inscribing their names at the head of the roll of the new Parliament. In succession—amidst very large numbers who were either not distinguished or not distinguishable—came, to pledge their Parliamentary fealty, Mr. Walpole, Mr. Horsman, Mr. Newdegate, Mr. Walter, Mr. Mowbray, Mr. W. H. Smith, Mr. W. E. Forster, Mr. Stansfeld, and so on. For nearly three hours the somewhat tedious process was kept up, and considerable way made in the perfecting of membership.

The next day, though it was Saturday, the House met again, and resumed the giving of the finishing touch to the newly-elected. The zeal in attendance, and the anxiety to be sworn which was the characteristic of the day before, were rather wanting now; but during the sitting fair progress was made in the operation for which the sitting had been held. It may be mentioned that Mr. Henley and Mr. Roebuck put in appearances; and Lord George Hamilton, who had been expected to be playing Under-Secretary with effusion on the Treasury Bench long before, made his first appearance. There, too, were Sir Charles Dilke, Mr. Beresford-Hope, Lord Eustace Cecil, Mr. Russell Gurney, cum multis aliis, of lesser or no note.

On Monday there was more formal ceremonial, for the Lords Commissioners again sent for the Commons to the Upper House, and told them that perhaps they had done enough in the way of swearing, and that they had better let the writs for the elections of the Ministers who had vacated their seats be moved, and then adjourn until the 19th inst., when the real business of the Session would begin. Being informed by the Speaker of the Royal mandate, the House meekly obeyed; and Mr. Hart-Dyke, the new Parliamentary Secretary to the Treasury, who had hitherto modestly abstained from making himself prominent on the Government bench, came forward and, with good emphasis, moved in succession most of the necessary writs. Amongst them was not that for the county of Buckingham, because, there having been a fantastic opposition to Mr. Disraeli at the general election, it was necessary to let twenty-one days pass from the date of the election before a new writ was moved, in order to allow a petition against the return to be lodged. The Commons, therefore, had to meet once more on Thursday for the purpose of sending Mr. Disraeli back to his constituents. From that time to a week hence the country will have to wait before it learns or is vouchsafed a glimmering of the great Conservative policy.

Lord Lothian will move and Lord Cadogan second the Address in the House of Lords; and Sir W. Sterling-Maxwell will move and Mr. Callender second the Address in the House of Commons.

MUSIC.

THE OPERA SEASON.

We last week gave a summary of Mr. Mapleson's programme of Her Majesty's Opera, which is to reopen, at Drury-Lane Theatre, on Tuesday next; and are now enabled to summarise Mr. Gye's prospectus for the forthcoming performances of the Royal Italian Opera, at Covent-Garden Theatre, to commence on the 31st inst.

The last-named establishment will continue to possess the invaluable co-operation of Madame Adelina Patti, in combination with the more recently-proved attraction of Mdlle. Emma Albani. The possible return of Madame Pauline Luoca is mentioned, and additions to the list of lady vocalists are promised in the reappearance of Madame Vilda, the transference from the other opera-house of Mdlle. Marimon, and the first appearance of Mdlles. Ghiotti, Clemence Calasch, and Diani. Among the re-engagements are those of Meadames Sinico, Saar, and Dell' Anese, and Mdlles. Scalchi, Smeroschi, D'Angeri, Pezzotta, and Corsi. Four new tenors are engaged—Signori Bolis, Sabater, Piazza, and M. Blume—the principal and secondary artists of this class being, as in previous seasons, Signori Nicolini, Bettini, Pavani, Marino, Manfredi, and Rossi.

The list of baritones and basses is the same as last year—MM. Faure and Maurel, Signori Graziani, Cotogni, Bagagiolo, Ciampi, Capponi, Tagliafico, Raguer, and Fallar.

The conductors will again be, in alternation, Signori Vianesi and Beignani; Mr. Carrodus continues as chief and solo violinist, Mr. Pittman as organist, and most other offices are also filled as before.

In the ballet department the name of the clever dancer, Mdlle. Girod, reappears, and two new comers—Mdlles. Pratti and Biceati—are announced.

Besides the ample repertoire already at command, five additional operas are named—Verdi's "Luisa Miller," Ambroise Thomas's "Mignon," Mozart's "Il Seraglio," Puchelli's "I Promessi Sposi," and Glinka's Russian opera, "La Vie pour le Czar"—three of which, at least, are to be produced.

At this week's Monday Popular Concert Miss Agnes Zimmermann was the pianist, her solo performances having consisted of the third of the seven "characteristic pieces" of Mendelssohn classed as op. 7 (these being among the several extraordinary productions of his youth) and the last of the same composer's six preludes and fugues (op. 35). Herr Joachim, who was the leading violinist, played the "Chaconne" from the fourth of Bach's sonatas for violin alone, and received the usual enthusiastic encore. Beethoven's string quintet in C and Hadyn's quartet in E flat (from op. 64) were the other instrumental pieces. Miss Antoinette Sterling sang with much effect the "Cradle Song," from Bach's "Christmas Oratorio," and lieder by Schubert, Schumann, and Mendelssohn, the last of which was encored. Sir J. Benedict conducted.

The present season of the London Ballad Concerts is nearly completed, the last performance but one having taken place on Wednesday evening.

Last week's Crystal Palace Concert included a performance of the noble music which Beethoven composed for Goethe's tragedy, "Egmont." The overture has for many years found occasional hearing at London concerts; but the equally fine music intended for incidental use in the drama was little known here until given at one of these concerts eleven years ago; having been repeated in 1869. Again, on Saturday, it produced a marked impression—the orchestral movements finely played by the band, and the two songs for Clara admirably declaimed by Madame Otto-Alvleben. The connecting links of the dramatic text were declaimed by Mr. Lin Rayne. The concert referred to brought forward—for the first time in England—a series of variations for full orchestra, composed by Brahms, on a theme by Haydn. These are full of variety and interest in the treatment of the principal subject, which is varied eight times, with a supplemental movement as coda. Miscellaneous vocal solos by Madame Alvleben and Mr. Santley, and Rossini's overture to "Tell," completed the programme.

The second season of the British Orchestral Society is approaching its close, four of the six concerts having taken place. The programme of the fourth occasion (on Thursday evening) comprised Mendelssohn's "Scotch" Symphony, the overture to Mr. Macfarren's "St. John the Baptist," that to Mozart's "Zauberflöte," and a new one, entitled "The Witches' Frolic," by Mr. H. Gadsby, besides Spohr's eighth violin concerto ("in modo di scena cantante") played by Mr. Carrodus.

The last but one of the second series of the Wagner Society's concerts took place yesterday (Friday) evening, when the programme commenced with Beethoven's overture to "King Stephen," and his Choral Fantasia, followed by songs by Liszt and Rubinstein, the remainder of the selection having consisted of Wagner's "Huldigung's Marsch," and extracts from the operas of "Rienzi," "Die Meistersinger von Nürnberg," and "Lohengrin." Of the performances we must speak next week.

The second concert of the Royal Albert Hall Amateur Orchestral Society is to take place this evening, having been postponed until after the return of the Duke and Duchess of Edinburgh.

Two important novelties, so far as London is concerned, will be produced next week—Mr. Arthur Sullivan's oratorio, "The Light of the World," and that by Mr. G. A. Macfarren, entitled "St. John the Baptist." The former work was composed for and brought out at the Birmingham Festival, in August last year, and is to be given by the Royal Albert Hall Choral Society on Thursday next. Mr. Macfarren's oratorio, although composed several years ago, was first performed at the Bristol Musical Festival in October last; and is now announced for the next concert of the Sacred Harmonic Society on Friday.

That clever pianist, Miss Madelena Cronin, has announced her soirée musicale for next Tuesday, when she is to play Mendelssohn's trio in D minor and Chopin's polonaise with violoncello, besides Beethoven's solo sonata dedicated to Count Waldstein, and pieces by Chopin, Schumann, and Liszt. It will be held, by permission of Mr. and Mrs. Blyth, at their residence, 94, Portland-place.

Mr. Carl Rosa intends to found a scholarship at the Royal Academy of Music in memory of his late wife, Madame Parepa-Rosa, to bear her name. It will be awarded by competition to British-born female vocalists between the ages of eighteen and twenty-two years, and the successful candidate will be entitled to two years' free education in the Royal Academy of Music. In connection with the scholarship there will be also a prize of a gold medal with Madame Parepa-Rosa's likeness, to be awarded to the best female vocalist in the Royal Academy of Music at the annual public distribution of prizes in July. The first election will take place in April next, for the admission of the successful candidate at the commencement of the midsummer term.

THEATRES.

PRINCESS'S.

The action of theatres during the week has been rather irregular. Among other changes an important modification has been made in the cast of Mr. Wills's play, "Mary Queen of Scots," at the Princess's—Mr. Charles Harcourt having surrendered the part of Chastelard into the hands of a young actor named Mr. Forbes Robertson, who appeared in it for the first time on Thursday week. He made a very favourable impression, and indeed showed many qualifications for the task. His elocution is very satisfactory; besides, he displayed much emotional power, and imparted pathos to the delivery of many of the speeches. His style and appearance are remarkably self-possessed, and he seizes upon special points with a readiness which testifies at once to his sensibility and judgment. The acting of the entire play is, as we have already said, greatly improved. Much controversy has arisen as to the manner in which the author has drawn the character of John Knox. For the rigid historical outline he has substituted a more flowing and varying form of individuality, admitting natural emotion to mitigate the severity of the general ecclesiastical character. For a moment the great preacher and reformer yields to the fascinations of the beautiful queen; and it requires all the force of his piety to rectify his position. Many critics have thought this treatment wrong, because it subjects a religious hero to laughter. Certainly, this appeared to be wrong upon the first night; but on Thursday, so hearty was the response on the part of the audience, that it was impossible not to feel that the judgment of the dramatist was justified by the result. The scene is evidently not intended to be a serious one, but to serve as a comic relief to the monotony of the prevailing sentiment. Mr. Rousby has, at last, seized on the idea; and he and his wife carry it through with great spirit. The house was full, and the applause vehement.

ADELPHI.

Mr. Chatterton has taken to the Adelphi, and begins his management with a revival—reproducing, on Saturday, Frederick Reynolds's dramatisation of "Elizabeth; or the Exiles of Siberia," which title he has adopted for the play, instead of "The Exile," the title under which it was originally produced, in 1808, at Covent Garden Theatre. The new relations established between the British and Russian Courts appear to have suggested the policy of reviving this old play, which is of the stage stagey, and possessed of no remarkable merit. It is a musical melodrama intended to be spectacular, with dialogue of an inflated sort, which in its day was considered fine writing. Originally, the best performers of Covent Garden, including Mr. Charles Young, Mr. Liston, and Mr. Ingleton, were engaged. The present revival is produced under the superintendence of Mr. Edward Stirling, and has been carefully placed on the stage. The scenic artist, too, has been called into requisition, and Mr. F. Lloyds has been required to present us with a set scene representing the river Neva at St. Petersburg, the frozen plane being occupied with a capital band of ballet-skaters, attended by Mr. John Levy, who performs some national airs on the cornet-a-piston, which, as Russian melodies, were immediately recognised. The performance is preceded by a lively farce, one of those funny compositions of a light and agreeable kind for which Mr. John Oxenford is celebrated. It is called "A Waltz by Ardit," and gives opportunity for the display of talent on the part of Miss Hudapeth, Mr. Brittain Wright, and Mr. A. Glover. As if these attractions were not enough, a ballet divertissement by Miss Kate Vaughan and her troupe, and a comic ballet, are added.

OLYMPIC.

Mr. Tom Taylor has contributed to the repertoire of the Olympic a new and original play in four acts, which is likely to make its mark. No doubt it is somewhat too long, and certainly over-elaborate in its general treatment; but it is exceedingly clever, and each act is worked up to a striking climax, so that the curtain falls to vehement applause. The title is "Lady Clancarty; or, Wedded and Wooed." The theme is partly historical, partly fanciful, the two being blended into an agreeable unity. King William III. is one of the characters in it, and we mention this at once to notice the capital manner in which Mr. Charles Neville makes up for the Protestant Monarch and the skilful style in which he maintains the assumption. The part of the heroine, Lady Clancarty, is supported by Miss Ada Cavendish, who works hard to realise the situations and express the various passions by which, in the course of the dramatic action, she is agitated; but her efforts are somewhat marred by the artificiality of her general manner. This, perhaps, becomes more apparent by the contrast which it manifests with Miss Fowler's natural bearing, who, as Lady Betty Noel, is perfectly bewitching in her spontaneous creativeness, the result simply of heartfelt impulse and native feeling. Lady Clancarty and her husband were married when boy and girl, and from that moment were separated, the breach between them being widened in after years by the political disquietudes of the time. Lord Clancarty, at the date of the play, is mixed up with the Jacobite assassination plot of 1696; but, differing from his companions, determines to expose the conspiracy without compromising them, and informs the King of the fact. However, he is so far implicated in their proceedings that he is arrested by the brother of his wife, Lord Charles Spencer, son of the Earl of Sunderland (Mr. W. H. Vernon); and to this accident it is owing that he meets with Lady Clancarty, and in this manner defeats a scheme for their divorce which had been concocted by Sir Charles. Ultimately, the Earl survives the peril, and is re-united to the lady, by whose intercession with the King he is reinstated in his social position. Upon the whole, the play is well acted; and we see no reason why it should not enlist the sympathies of a mixed audience for many weeks to come.

GAIETY.

The comedy of "The Rivals" has been revived this week, Mr. Phelps appearing as Sir Anthony Absolute, Mr. J. L. Toole as Bob Acres, Mr. Hermann Vezin as Falkland, Miss E. Farren as Lydia Languish, Mrs. Leigh as Mrs. Malaprop, Mr. Charles Harcourt as Captain Absolute, Mr. Lionel Brough as David, and Miss Baldwin as Julia. This is a tolerably strong cast, and the performance bids fair for popularity.

Captain Mayne Reid is about to enter upon a new field of literature—the Drama. Mr. Barnum, the American entrepreneur, has engaged him to write a series of plays founded on his own novels, to be produced simultaneously on the British and American stages. Two of them, already written, have been pronounced by critics to be equal in dramatic power to any on the modern stage, while superior in picturesque effect.

The anniversary ball of the Caledonian Society of London took place at Willis's Rooms, yesterday week, and was attended by over 400 ladies and gentlemen. Many of the gentlemen appeared in kilts, and most of the ladies wore Scottish emblems. At supper Mr. Annes M'Intyre, Q.C., president of the society, occupied the chair at the principal table.

METROPOLITAN NEWS.

The Royal Academicians have elected Mr. E. M. Barry to be their treasurer, as successor to Mr. Sydney Smirke.

The Duchess of Edinburgh has consented to become a patroness of the annual ball in aid of the funds of University College Hospital, to be held at Willis's Rooms on May 7.

The annual general meeting of the governors of the Cancer Hospital was held at Brompton yesterday week—Mr. Benjamin Hood in the chair. The actual receipts amounted to £10,550, while the expenditure had been somewhat reduced. The report stated that 779 new patients had been received last year.

The Lord Mayor has consented to preside at the annual festival in aid of the London Coffee and Eating House Keepers' Benevolent Association's funds on Monday, April 13, at the London Tavern. His Lordship will be accompanied by the Sheriffs and Under-Sheriffs of London and Middlesex.

The weekly meeting of the London School Board was held on Wednesday—Sir Charles Reed, M.P., in the chair. After a discussion of over three hours, the board came to the conclusion that it was expedient to utilise the board schools at certain hours on Sundays and week-day evenings.

The Oxford University boat crew having declined the Lord Mayor's invitation to dine at the Mansion House on the evening of the day on which the race is to be rowed, his Lordship has been compelled to abandon his idea of entertaining the two crews on that occasion. The Cambridge men, it may be stated, had accepted the invitation.

On receiving the freedom of the Turners' Company, last week, Sir Samuel Baker gave a valuable statement of his views on the promotion of legitimate trading and the suppression of the slave trade in Central Africa. As to the former, he declared that the main requisite was for the Africans to see an English company, protected by law, dealing fairly.

The commissioners appointed by the Board of Trade to inquire into an application by the Imperial Gas Light and Coke Company for a revision of the scale of illuminating power and price of gas have made their report. The maximum price chargeable will be at the rate of 4s. 8d. per thousand cubic feet, an increase of 11d. per 1000.

The weekly return of metropolitan pauperism shows that the total number of paupers last week was 108,234, of whom 37,129 were in workhouses and 71,105 received outdoor relief. Compared with the corresponding weeks in the years 1873, 1872, and 1871, these figures show a decrease of 12,254, 13,126, and 42,364 respectively. The number of vagrants relieved was 567, of whom 407 were men, 118 women, and 42 children.

The usual dinner to supporters of the Government in the House of Peers will be given, on the 18th inst., by the Earl of Derby, at the Foreign Office, the Duke of Richmond being prevented giving it by the severe illness of the Duchess (Dowager) of Richmond. After the dinner the Countess of Derby will have an evening party at 23, St. James's-square.—Mr. Disraeli has invited the Speaker and about forty of the supporters of the Government in the House of Commons to a Parliamentary dinner on the same day.

The executive committee of the Bengal Famine Relief Fund met, on Monday, at the Mansion House, under the presidency of the Lord Mayor. The opinion expressed in Lancashire that the famine is a Government question with which private subscriptions cannot, and should not, attempt to cope, was strongly combated, and a hope was expressed that Manchester and Liverpool would alter their determination not to assist the flow of private charity. The fund amounts to more than £42,000.

The Duke of Cambridge presided, on Tuesday afternoon, at the annual meeting of the National Rifle Association, which was held at the Royal United Service Institution, Whitehall. The Duke congratulated the members on the continued prosperity of the association, and especially on the satisfactory result of the last Wimbledon meeting, the receipts from which had increased their reserve fund to £14,000. Expenses had, however, already reduced that fund to £10,000. Some had doubted the propriety of having so large a reserve fund; but, considering the heavy expenses to which the association was put by the changes contemplated at Wimbledon, he thought it was best to be on the safe side. After some discussion the report was adopted.

There were 2536 births and 1578 deaths registered in London last week. After making due allowance for increase of population, the births exceeded by 75, while the deaths were 107 below, the average numbers in the corresponding week of the last ten years. The deaths referred to diseases of the respiratory organs and phthisis, which in the two previous weeks had been 595 and 667, declined last week to 609, exceeding the average, however, by 27; 289 resulted from bronchitis, 153 from phthisis, and 100 from pneumonia. There were 62 deaths from measles, 25 from scarlet fever, 2 from diphtheria, 56 from whooping-cough, 19 from different forms of fever, 13 from diarrhoea, and not one from smallpox; thus to the seven principal diseases of the zymotic class 177 deaths were referred, against 118 and 213 in the two preceding weeks. Measles and whooping-cough are the only two prevailing epidemic diseases, and the fatal cases of each showed a decline from the numbers in recent weeks.

Mr. Disraeli received, yesterday week, an imposing deputation of members of Parliament, merchants, and others who have set their hearts on the abolition of the income tax. After he had heard a large number of spokesmen, he assured them that Government was giving the matter grave consideration. To urge upon Government the justice and expediency of repealing the brewers' license duty, a numerous deputation waited, on Monday, upon the Chancellor of the Exchequer, who was accompanied by Mr. W. H. Smith, M.P., Financial Secretary to the Treasury.—The question of abolishing all taxes on food was on Tuesday brought before Sir Stafford Northcote, Chancellor of the Exchequer, by a deputation of the Free-trade League, including members of the Working Men's Club and Institute Union, the Trades Guilds of Learning, the Labour Representation League, and other industrial bodies.—In an interview with the Home Secretary the Licensed Victuallers, on Tuesday, submitted a draught of their bill for the amendment of Lord Aberdare's Act. The principal concessions asked for by the trade are uniform hours of closing—namely, from midnight till five a.m. throughout the country; permission to entertain their friends after hours; and the indorsement of licenses to be optional with the magistrates.

Second Edition.

"The verification of the poems in this little volume is clear and smooth. The longest poem in it, 'Imauddeen,' is the simple history of an anxious spirit seeking after truth. It is, though containing some beautiful passages, by no means the best in the book. The book is a collection of poems, and the selection of the poems is a selection of the best."—Athenaeum.

SKETCHES OF THE ASHANTEE WAR, BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST.

LORD GIFFORD'S SCOUTS SETTING FIRE TO A VILLAGE.

NATIVE SOLDIERS PLAYING AT "WARRY."

THE LATE CAPTAIN NICOL.

This excellent officer, killed in the battle with the Ashantees on Jan. 31, was one of a soldier family. His father was for some years Adjutant-General of Bengal; and his uncle, General Nicol, was a Peninsular hero. Captain James Nicol was but young when he joined the 10th as it was on its way down from Jellalabad. He remained in that regiment some years, and then exchanged into the 13th. About twelve months before the Crimean War he and his brother, of her Majesty's 68th, sold out; but when the war began the two brothers went, in their little steam-yacht the Army and Navy, to offer what help they could to their country. They set an example of enterprise and usefulness. Their yacht was employed as a despatch-boat to our own Army and afterwards to our allies. They had the satisfaction of doing all in their power to alleviate the sufferings of our army in that dreadful winter. On returning home Captain Nicol obtained the adjutancy to the Hants Militia; and it is well known how admirably he trained that regiment. But it was his great desire to get back into the regular Army; and, thinking he saw a way to this by joining the expedition to Ashantee, he offered his services to Sir Garnet Wolseley. The General saw that Nicol was the sort of man he needed, and accepted his services. Captain Nicol had had experience in dealing with savages in Vancouver Island and Central America, and this experience he brought to bear in West Africa. On his arrival at Cape Coast he was almost immediately sent down to the Opobo river, where King Ja-Ja rules, and also to the territory of Oko Jumbo. Captain Nicol displayed much skill in dealing with these potentates. He played off their jealousy of each other, and succeeded in raising from both a larger body of men than was expected. He brought up with him the men supplied by Ja-Ja, who did good service in the late campaign.

THE LATE CAPTAIN HUYSHÉ.

Among the good and deservedly esteemed officers whom their country has lost in the Ashantee War is Captain George Lightfoot Huyshé, Rifle Brigade, late Deputy-Assistant Quartermaster-General on the staff of Sir Garnet Wolseley. He died of fever and dysentery, at Prah-su, on Jan. 19. Captain Huyshé was the only surviving son of the late General Huyshé, C.B., of Guernsey. He entered the 83rd Foot in 1856, and served with that regiment in Central India during the mutiny; but, exchanging into the Rifle Brigade on his promotion he went with his regiment to Canada in 1866, and, in 1870, volunteered for the Red River Expedition, which he accompanied on the staff of Sir Garnet Wolseley. He published a clever and interesting book, which we noticed at the time, narrating the history of that expedition, and showing the energy and skill which overcame its difficulties. Captain Huyshé passed into the Staff College in 1872, and in August last year, when it was determined to send the expedition to the West Coast, being then in Germany for the purpose of completing his knowledge of the German language, he was invited by Sir Garnet Wolseley to join his staff, and sailed with the head-quarters in the Ambriz on Sept. 12. At the request of the General, Captain Brackenbury and Captain Huyshé lectured to their brother officers during the voyage out. Captain Brackenbury explained "The Relations between Great Britain and Ashanti, and the Causes which led to the War;" while Captain Huyshé gave information upon "The Topography of the Gold Coast." These papers have been published in a small volume, under the title of "Fanti and Ashanti," which we have noticed. Captain Huyshé was appointed Deputy Assistant Quartermaster-General, and was engaged in the bush-fighting which resulted in the retreat of the enemy beyond the Prah, and in missions to the native chiefs. His most valuable service, however, was in the survey of the country between the coast and the Prah, in which work he engaged with the greatest energy and zeal, penetrating with a slight native guard into the remote parts of the bush, often close to and in the rear of the Ashantee army. The map of the country was compiled under his supervision. Captain Huyshé was well until a short time before his death; but the malaria had no doubt entered his system long before, and an excursion into a swampy region brought on the final attack of dysentery and fever which resulted in his death after a week's illness. He died in his thirty-fifth year, deeply regretted by all who knew him.

The Portrait is from a photograph by Mr. T. R. Williams.

THE LATE CAPTAIN G. L. HUYSHÉ.

at Worcester College, Oxford, where he took the usual degree. He was also called to the Bar at Lincoln's Inn, in Easter term, 1834. He is a magistrate for Middlesex, and a Commissioner of Lieutenancy for the City of London. He is now a banker in the City, being a partner in the firm of Messrs. Barclay, Bevan, Tritton, and Co. He now enters Parliament for the first time, having lost his election, though only by a few votes, when he offered himself before for the City at the general election in November, 1868. He is well known in connection with London charities and philanthropic associations. The return of Mr. Twells and his two Conservative colleagues, Mr. Hubbard and Alderman Cotton, involves the gain to their party of three seats in the City of London.

Mr. William Gordon, the new M.P. for Chelsea and Kensington, is the youngest son of the late Mr. Alexander Gordon, solicitor, of Old Broad-street, London, and of Wandsworth-common, Surrey, by Harriett, daughter of the late Mr. Hastings Elwyn, of Bath. He was born in the year 1818, and married, in 1852, Frances, second daughter of the late Mr. John H. Puget, of Totteridge Park, Hertfordshire. He was educated for the law, was admitted a solicitor in 1840, and at his father's death succeeded to an extensive English, Scotch, and colonial practice in the City of London. The portrait is from a photograph by Mr. A. Bassano.

NEW MEMBERS.

Mr. Philip Twells, of Chase-side House, Enfield, Middlesex, who has been elected M.P. for the city of London, is the youngest son of the late Mr. John Twells, of Darby House, Sunbury, Middlesex, by Mary, daughter of Mr. Joseph Line, of Alum Rock, Warwickshire. He was born in the year 1808, and was educated, under Dr. Russell, at the Charterhouse, and

LIFE-BOAT SERVICES.

A meeting of the Royal National Life-Boat Institution was held at its house, John-street, Adelphi, on Thursday week—Mr. T. Chapman in the chair. Mr. Richard Lewis, the secretary, having read the minutes of the previous meeting, the committee expressed their deep sympathy with the relatives of four poor men who perished from the Stonehaven life-boat last Friday. She had gone out to the help of the barque Grace Darling, of Blyth, which had a signal of distress flying, but which, on the approach of the life-boat, she unaccountably took down. The ship was ultimately lost some miles northwards, and fourteen of her crew perished, one man only being saved. The committee also voted £250 in aid of the local subscription now being raised on behalf of the men's families, besides granting £3 to each man who went off in the boat on that occasion. When we consider the fearfully dangerous character of these gallant life-boat services, and are reminded that upwards of 10,000 persons go afloat in these boats every year, it cannot but be cause for congratulation that the loss of life is so small from the boats, over a year having elapsed since the last fatal accident, while in twenty-two years there have only been fourteen such casualties, with the loss altogether of thirty-four lives. The silver medal of the institution was voted to Captain C. Gray Jones, R.N., who has recently been appointed one of its assistant inspectors of life-boats, in acknowledgment of his gallant services in the Newcastle life-boat when she saved, under very dangerous circumstances, four out of five of the crew of the schooner Rose, of Youghal, which was wrecked in Dundrum Bay, during a southerly gale and in a heavy sea, on the 26th ult. The silver medal of the society was presented to Mr. James Hill, coxswain of the same life-boat, in acknowledgment of long and brave services in the boat, and particularly on the occasion in question. Double payment (£9) was made to the crew of the life-boat in this case. Other rewards, to the amount of £120, were granted to the crews of different life-boats for services during the past month, when the boats had saved altogether forty-six lives, and had contributed to the rescue of three vessels from destruction. A reward of £5 was granted to four men for putting off from Groomsport, Ireland, and saving two other men, whose boat had capsized in a westerly gale on Jan. 18. Payments to the amount of £1150 were ordered to be made on different life-boat establishments. Various contributions and legacies to the society were announced. A new life-boat establishment was ordered to be formed at Longhope, in the Orkney Islands. Dickinson Edliston, Esq., of West Boyd, had presented the cost of the same to the institution; and J. G. Modie Heddle, Esq., the landed proprietor of the district, had liberally given the site of the boat-house, besides promising £20 a year for three years towards the support of the new life-boat station.

ROYAL DEVONSHIRE SERGE, made of selected and elastic Staple Wools, in the required and fashionable colours. No article woven for Ladies' Dresses equals this in general utility. It makes a warm garment without being heavy, and can be relied upon for durability. It does not cockle, and can be washed as a piece of flannel or brushed as a piece of cloth. Prices, 1s. 11d. to 2s. 6d. per yard. It is most serviceable for children, for whom a lower quality, also all wool, is made in Navy Blue only, at 1s. 6d. per yard. Books of Patterns will be sent on application to SPEARMAN & SPEARMAN, Devonshire Serge Factory, Plymouth. This address is sufficient, the firm being well known in the West of England.—N.B. Good wear is positively guaranteed. The Navy Blue is Indigo dye; sea water will not hurt it. It is the best material made for Yachting and Sea-life Wear.

ARRIVAL OF THE VICTORIA AND ALBERT YACHT AT GRAVESEND.

RECEPTION AT GRAVESEND.

Their Royal Highnesses the newly-married pair, Prince Alfred of Great Britain, Duke of Edinburgh, and his bride, her Imperial Highness the Grand Duchess Marie Alexandrovna of Russia, came to their home in England on Saturday last. It was March 7, the same day of the same month that witnessed, eleven years ago, the arrival of Princess Alexandra of Denmark to be wedded to the Prince of Wales. As upon that memorable occasion in 1863, the landing-place was the loyal town of Gravesend. Preparations for the convenient and festive reception of the Duke and Duchess of Edinburgh had been completed in good time. The weather, in spite of a grey mist on the river, which cleared off most opportunely at the moment of landing, was very pleasant for the time of year. All passed off well at Gravesend, and later at Windsor, where the illustrious happy couple were met by the Queen, their beloved and loving mother, with an affectionate embrace, and with joy in which the whole of the English people are permitted to share.

The Royal yacht Victoria and Albert, commanded by the Prince of Leiningen, brought the Duke and Duchess of Edinburgh from Antwerp. They had left Brussels on the Friday morning, and embarked at two o'clock the same afternoon. It was some minutes after half-past eight on Saturday morning when the Victoria and Albert, closely followed by the Vivid and the Belgian Government steamer Leopold II., was seen entering the Reach of Gravesend. At that time and throughout the day the Duncan, 30 guns, Captain G. Watson, bearing the flag of Vice-Admiral Hastings, Commander-in-Chief at the Nore, lay at anchor in the middle of the river, below the Terrace Pier. A short distance on the other side of the pier lay the Audacious, ironclad, 14 guns, Captain H. D. Hickley, and a little further on was the Penelope, twin-screw corvette, 11 guns, Captain O. Wake. Near the men-of-war were the tenders Wildfire and Arrow. The instant the Royal yacht came in sight a salute was fired from the guns at Tilbury Fort and from those on board the ships of war. The Duncan, the Audacious, and the Penelope manned yards and dressed, the Cross of St. Andrew being run up with the Cross of St. George and the Union Jack. The tenders also displayed an abundance of streamers and pennants. Having steamed slowly up to a point exactly opposite the Terrace Pier, the Victoria and Albert was secured to her moorings by nine o'clock. She had both the English and the Russian flags flying from her masthead.

The hour fixed for the landing was eleven o'clock. By half-past ten the Terrace Pier, the steps and landing-stage (decorated by Messrs. Deffries for the occasion), were lined with privileged spectators. Among these were the Earl and Countess of Darnley, the Bishop of Rochester, Admiral Hastings, the officers of the 10th Regiment from Chatham, and several members of the Russian Embassy, who were in full uniform. Owing to the illness of the Countess de Brunnow, his Excellency the Russian Minister could not attend, but General A. Gorloff, Military Agent, Vice-Admiral J. Likhatchof, Captain N. Kopitoff, Naval Attaché, M. Davydow, First Secretary, and M. Bartholomew, of the Embassy, were in attendance; also Mr. J. W. Biggs, the Consular Agent for Russia, and the Rev. Eugenio Popoff, of the Russian Chapel, Welbeck-street. Soon after Prince Arthur, attended by Major Pickard and Lieutenant Buchanan, arrived from London, and, driving down to the pier with Earl Sydney, Lord Lieutenant of the county of Kent, was received by the Mayor of Gravesend, Mr. W. Lake. His Royal Highness wore the uniform of the Rifle Brigade, with the ribbon of the Garter. Lord Alfred Paget and Colonel Lynedoch Gardiner had also come down, and were rowed to the Victoria and Albert. Immediately on his arrival Prince Arthur, with his suite, was taken to the Royal yacht in one of her boats.

The Duke and Duchess of Edinburgh had in the mean time shown themselves on the deck of the Royal yacht, and had bowed in acknowledgment of the greeting which saluted them. Five minutes before eleven they again appeared from the saloon or cabin, and descended the gangway of the Victoria and Albert. His Royal Highness wore his uniform as a Captain in the Royal Navy and the ribbon of the Garter. The Duchess wore a blue dress, a white cloak, and a white bonnet with fern trimming. Her parasol was white lined with pink. As they descended the ladder the crew of the barge in which they were to cross to the pier raised their oars aloft, and accompanied this salute with three hearty cheers, which were taken up by the sailors manning the yards of the ships of war and by the crews of the merchant-vessels and the numerous pleasure-steamers and small boats around the Royal yacht. Conspicuous among these steamers by the number of spectators who crowded their decks were the Petrel, the Princess Alice, and the Alexandra. The Petrel had a band of musicians on board, and, in the intervals between the thunder of great guns which fired a salute, the Russian National Anthem greeted the Grand Duchess.

The landing-stage and pier presented a splendid appearance as the Royal barge was rowed towards it. They were faced with rich draperies of scarlet cloth hung with gold lace, and conspicuous along the front of the roofing of the piers was the word "Welcome!" in letters of gold braid. A covered way, which, like the stage itself, was carpeted in scarlet, led up to a platform, from which, at right angles, was another flight of steps to a second platform overlooking the river. From this platform the pier itself was approached by a third series of stairs under a triumphal arch, with the inscription, in gold, "Kent welcomes her Earl and his Bride." On the landing-stage Vice-Admiral Hastings and Major-General Erskine, commanding at Chatham, surrounded by their respective staffs, were waiting to receive the Duke and Duchess.

Arrived at the head of the last flight of steps, the Duke and Duchess were met by the Mayor and his daughter, Miss Beatrice Lake, Mr. Standish O'Grady, the Recorder, the Town Clerk, and the Bishop of Rochester. Miss Beatrice Lake had the honour of presenting her Imperial Highness with a beautiful bouquet, composed of lilies of the valley, white camellias, sprays of spirea, and maidenhair fern, held in a beautifully-wrought gold handle. The design of the latter is Hymen's torch set with pearls, the arms of Gravesend on one side and those of Kent on the other side; acorns, oak-leaves, and the rose, shamrock, and thistle were chased upon the holder, on which was the Duchess's monogram, with the words—"Presented by the Ladies of Gravesend to the Duchess of Edinburgh, March 7, 1874." The flowers were supplied by the Clarence Nursery at Gravesend. The bouquet was surrounded with a beautiful garland of Honiton lace, designed and manufactured expressly for this occasion by Mrs. Treadwin, of the Cathedral Yard, Exeter.

Another word must be said of the abundant decorations of the pier. Countless flags were hung on the roof and at each side of the building, so as to hide from the most observant eyes the gas-piping and the iron girders; hanging baskets of flowers depended from the centre, and the lamps were wreathed with red and white camellias and an edging of green leaves. By such arrangements the passage of their Royal Highnesses along the Terrace Pier to the ground outside—where the 7th Hussars, who were to act as escort under Major Harbord's command, and a detachment of Royal Marines, were drawn up awaiting the coming of the Duke and Duchess—was rendered an exceedingly pleasant sight.

They were followed along the pier by a brilliant company, to which were now added the members of the suites who had accompanied the Royal couple from St. Petersburg. Amongst these were easily recognised Colonel the Hon. W. J. Colville, controller and treasurer to the Duke of Edinburgh; Captain Arthur Balfour Haig, R.E., equerry to the Duke; and the other English officers and Court officials who have been attending his Royal Highness during his marriage visit to the Russian capital. Some Russians, besides those whose names have been already given, mingled in that crowd of uniforms and gay dresses—amongst them Prince Bariatsky and M. Ozerow, in attendance upon the Duchess of Edinburgh—whilst in the press of distinguished persons who came next were Earl Sydney, Viscount Holmesdale, the Earl and Countess of Darnley, the Bishop of Rochester, Captain Bedford Pim, M.P., Major Rickard and Lieutenant Buchanan (in attendance upon Prince Arthur), Lord Alfred Paget and Colonel H. Lynedoch Gardiner (in attendance upon the Duke and Duchess of Edinburgh). The Recorder, the Town Clerk, and the members of the local committee had pushed to the front or entrance-end of the pier. Here was to take place the presentation of the following address:—

"TO THEIR ROYAL HIGHNESSES THE DUKE AND DUCHESS OF EDINBURGH."

"May it please your Royal Highnesses,—We, the Mayor, aldermen, and burgesses of the borough of Gravesend, desire most respectfully to tender to your Royal Highnesses our sincere congratulations upon your marriage, fraught as the event is with happy omens of lasting peace and prosperous intercourse between two great nations, and to offer to the daughter of the Emperor of All the Russias, the bride of one of our beloved Princes, a hearty welcome, which, given here on the threshold of England, will be repeated with national fervour throughout the length and breadth of the land. As inhabitants of this ancient maritime borough we are grateful that the happy fortune of locality has been the means of securing for us the honour of addressing to your Royal Highnesses these first words of congratulation and welcome, and of affording us another opportunity of testifying our loyalty and devotion to our beloved Queen and the Royal family. We pray that to the happiness of your union may be added the gift of long life and manifold blessings from the Giver of all Good."

As previously intimated, the address was not read, but simply presented by the Recorder, who took advantage of the brief halt afforded to address a few words of welcome to their Royal Highnesses, which the Duke graciously acknowledged. No time was, however, lost in speech-making, and after receiving the address the Duke and Duchess, accompanied by Prince Arthur and Earl Sydney, entered the first of the five Royal carriages in waiting, and, the Mayor's carriage leading the way, drove slowly off towards the South-Eastern railway station; the fine band of the 1st Administrative Brigade of the 2nd Kent Artillery, which was stationed near the first of the triumphal arches close to the pier, playing M. Riviere's arrangement of the "Anglo-Russian March," the first part of which consists of a few bars of "God Bless our Sailor Prince" and the second part of the Russian National Anthem.

The procession of carriages was followed by the 7th Hussars, the Royal Marines, and Royal Artillery, who had been stationed in front of the Terrace Pier. From this spot to the railway station the Royal pair passed under triumphal arches with Russian words of welcome on one side and the English on the other—for instance, "Welcome!" "Long may you live!" "Welcome to England!" "Happy may you be!" "The Lord preserve and bless you!" "May you live in our hearts!" "Wishing you every happiness!" "Long life and happiness attend you!" Other inscriptions equally appropriate appeared on every house and above every "grand stand" along the line of route. Near the Terrace Pier all the houses were draped with crimson and gold cloth. At the Pier-road began the series of Venetian masts which, with one interruption between that and Berkeley-crescent, were continued at intervals all along the route. Here seats were arranged according to the rating of the inhabitants, and here was the first of the triumphal arches, draped with heavy bullion fringe, 12 in. long, and folding into curtains, relieved by massive gold cords and tassels. Trophies, beautifully painted by heraldic artists, were ranged at each side of the arch, with the names of the Royal couple, the motto "May they be happy!" and the "A.M." monogram in the centre, round which was twined the blue ribbon of the Order of the Garter. The principal building in Harmer-street, the Institute, had its four pillars wrapped in yellow and black, the Russian colours, with the arms of Russia and England.

The Royal couple were heartily cheered on their way from the Thames to the railway station. The whole distance was kept by the Royal Artillery, Marines, Engineers, and the Kentish Artillery and rifle volunteers—these last numbering between 1200 and 1400, under the command of Colonel Annealey, of the second battalion 10th Regiment; whilst about forty boys from the Chichester training-ship, and an equal number from the Royal Naval School at Greenwich, stood between the troops. Passing under the arch near St. James's Church, the procession had but a very short distance to traverse ere it reached the railway station. At the entrance to this was another arch, much lighter in appearance than either of the others. Here their Royal Highnesses arrived at a quarter past eleven. The station was decorated within and without; the room through which the Duke and Duchess passed was like a small conservatory, crowded with large flowering plants, amongst which were some very fine scarlet azaleas, the contributions of the Earl of Darnley, Lord High Steward of Gravesend, Sir J. Lubbock, and other gentlemen.

The special train which was in waiting consisted of a very handsome saloon carriage, which has been constructed for the Great Western Railway Company, six first-class carriages, engine, and brake. It was in charge of Mr. Edward Watkin, son of Sir Edward Watkin, chairman of the South-Eastern Railway Company. In waiting to receive the Royal party were Sir E. Watkin, Mr. Cockburn, traffic manager, Mr. Shaw, manager, and Mr. Brady, chief engineer; several other ladies and gentlemen, including a number of officers, being on the platform. Calling the Mayor to him, the Duke thanked his Worship for the reception which had been given to the Duchess and himself, his Royal Highness adding, "I am glad to see Gravesend once more, and I am grateful to you all for the welcome which you have given me. I never saw Gravesend look so well before." Her Royal Highness the Duchess of Edinburgh, who speaks English with fluency, also thanked the Mayor for the reception accorded to them. In the saloon-carriage, which contained a handsome bouquet, the Duke and Duchess received the congratulations of the members of the Russian Diplomatic Corps, with whom her Imperial Highness conversed cheerfully for several minutes; and then the boys from the Royal Naval School at Greenwich and the cadets from the Chichester training-ship passed by two before their Royal Highnesses. At half-past eleven precisely the Royal train left for Windsor, amidst great cheering—the Duke and Duchess, with Prince Arthur, repeatedly acknowledging the salutations of the spectators. A cheer from the Naval School boys and the cadets was the farewell greeting to the Royal pair.

RECEPTION AT WINDSOR.

The arrival of their Royal Highnesses at Windsor, punctually at one o'clock, was a very interesting scene. The Queen's station of the London and South-Western Railway had been carpeted and decorated. The Mayor and Corporation of Windsor and the directors and head officers of the South-Western and Great Western Railways were in attendance. The 79th Highlanders formed a guard of honour outside. At half-past twelve some members of the Court began to arrive; among these were the Duke of Cambridge and Prince and Princess Christian, with Count Gleichen. The Queen, with the Prince and Princess of Wales, arrived from the Castle a very few minutes before the train entered the station. Her Majesty wore a white miniver jacket with black spots, a black bonnet in the trimming of which was some sprinkling of white, and carried a grey parasol, which was not out of season that day, so bright was the sunshine. The Princess of Wales wore a Russian sable over a green dress, with a green feather in her bonnet. Princesses Christian and Beatrice were similarly attired, but the latter wearing a light-blue bonnet. Princess Louise was in mourning for the Dowager Duchess of Argyll. The Prince of Wales wore the uniform of a general officer. Prince Leopold was in Highland dress.

The train came into the station amid the cheers of the company, and her Majesty stepped from the waiting-room to the platform. Close behind her stood the Prince and Princess of Wales, Prince and Princess Christian, Princess Louise, Princess Beatrice, Prince Leopold, the Duke of Cambridge, and the two eldest boys of the Prince of Wales. The train was skilfully driven, so that the door of the chief saloon carriage came to a stop opposite the door of the Royal waiting-room. It had hardly halted before the Duke of Edinburgh jumped hurriedly out, embraced his mother, and turned to assist his young wife. No sooner had the Grand Duchess set foot on the platform than a glad smile lighted up the features of the Queen, who advanced to meet her, took her in both arms before she could make any courtesy or formal greeting, and kissed her repeatedly on both cheeks with the warmest affection. This embrace was returned with equal warmth of feeling. When the Queen had thus welcomed her daughter the Prince and Princess of Wales kissed the Grand Duchess. They had lately parted from her in Russia. But Princess Helena, Princess Louise, and Princess Beatrice were sisters now seen for the first time. It was their turn now to salute the Grand Duchess. Prince Leopold took the like privilege, and then the Grand Duchess, stooping down, gave a hearty embrace to her husband's nephews, Prince Albert Victor and Prince George, who held up their cheeks to be kissed, with a childlike wonder and simplicity. Other greetings were exchanged with other members of the Royal family. The Royal cortège, without much loss of time, was marshalled for the return to the castle. There were eight carriages, each drawn by four horses. In the first carriage sat the Queen, having the young bride on her left, and opposite her the Duke of Edinburgh. Next came the Prince and Princess of Wales, Princess Christian, and Prince Arthur in Rifle uniform, who had travelled from Gravesend in the Royal train. Princess Louise, Princess Beatrice, Prince Leopold, and the Duke of Cambridge were in the third carriage; in the fourth, the Duchess of Wellington (Mistress of the Robes), Princess Wiasemsky (Lady in Waiting to the Grand Duchess), Prince Christian, and the Marquis of Lorne. The other carriages contained the members of the Royal suites, among whom were Prince Vladimir Bariatsky (Lord in Waiting to the Grand Duchess), with General Count Ozeroff, Aide-de-Camp, and M. Kaloschina, Private Secretary to her Imperial Highness. Prince Edward of Saxe-Weimar rode on horseback.

The eight Royal carriages, escorted by a detachment of the 2nd Life Guards, passed the guard of honour of the 79th Highlanders at the station, and proceeded slowly up the streets of Windsor, which were lined by the Grenadier Guards, the 79th, and the Berkshire volunteers, which last-named corps mustered nearly 700 strong, under the command of Colonel Loyd-Lindsay and Sir Paul Hunter. The streets were profusely decorated, and displayed many Russian flags. On the wall of that building, a part of the Castle which was occupied by the choristers of St. George's Chapel, was a huge yellow banner, inscribed with the music and words of the Russian National Hymn. The carriages passed through Thames-street, and instead of turning up Castle-hill, which would have been the shortest way, the route was extended along High-street, past the Townhall, and so to the Queen's entrance at the top of the Long Walk. Here the band of the 2nd Life Guards was stationed, and the alope up to the castle from the iron gates leading to the Long Walk was kept by a detachment of the same regiment. The strains of the Russian National Anthem were heard once more. A battery of the Royal Horse Artillery fired a Royal salute as the procession entered the park. The carriages passed up the alope to the south front of the Castle. Outside George IV.'s gateway, and on each side of it, the Eton boys were gathered, and they gave the Grand Duchess three hearty cheers as she entered the gateway of the Royal castle.

Passing under the gateway while the guns in the Long Walk were still firing the Royal salute, the carriages turned to the left, and went round the gravelled quadrangle to the Queen's entrance. This great square of well-kept gravel, walled round on every side by grey walls and towers, is one of the most imposing features of the Castle. At the Queen's entrance the great officers of the household and others waited to receive her Majesty—the gentlemen, wearing levée dress, being on the right; and the ladies, in morning indoor dress, on the left. The gentlemen comprised the Marquis of Hertford, the new Lord Chamberlain; the Earl of Beauchamp, the new Lord Steward; Sir John Cowell, Master of the Household; Sir T. Biddulph, Keeper of the Privy Purse; Viscount Torrington, Lord in Waiting; the Hon. Mortimer West, Groom in Waiting; also the Dean of Westminster and the Dean of Windsor. The ladies were the Marchioness of Ely, Lady in Waiting to the Queen; Lady Caroline Barrington, Lady in Waiting to the Princess of Wales; Lady Augusta Stanley and Lady Frances Baillie, the Hon. Horatia Stophord, the Hon. Emily Pitt, and the Hon. Emily Lascelles, Maids of Honour.

The carriages stopped at the Queen's entrance. The Duke of Edinburgh alighted and handed the Queen and the Duchess of Edinburgh from the carriage. Her Majesty, doing the honours of her Castle, gave her hand to her new daughter, and, preceded by the Lord Chamberlain and Lord Steward, her Majesty, the Duchess, the Duke, the Prince and Princess of Wales, and the other members of the Royal family, followed by the suite, ascended the staircase to the corridor. Here the household were severally presented by the Queen to the Duchess of Edinburgh. Their Royal Highnesses were then conducted to their apartments. The Prince and Princess of Wales had rooms in the York Tower; the Duke and Duchess of Edinburgh were in the Lancaster Tower, with a view of the Long Walk from the windows. Prince Arthur's quarters were in the Victoria Tower, those of Princess Louise and Lord Lorne in the Augusta Tower. The Duke of Cambridge also slept in the Castle; so did the Danish Minister and Madame Bulow, the Dean of Westminster and Lady Augusta Stanley, the Duke and Duchess of Abercorn, the Duchess of Sutherland, the Earl and Countess of Derby, the German Ambassador, and the Belgian and Saxon Ministers.

In the evening the town of Windsor was brilliantly illuminated. The principal objects of attraction were the South-Western Railway station and the Townhall. The Eton boys hung out Chinese lanterns from every window. At eight o'clock there was a display of fireworks in a field at Clewer, a short distance from St. Mark's School. This being over, a monster bonfire was lighted. It comprised some thousands of faggots, with tar and paraffin barrels, and continued to burn for some hours, lighting up the country for miles around. The fireworks and bonfire were provided by Mr. Richardson-Gardner, M.P. for the borough.

ROYAL INSTITUTION LECTURES.

VEGETABLE GROWTH.

Professor W. C. Williamson, F.R.S., began his second lecture on Cryptogamic vegetation, on Thursday week, by adverting to the latter part of the previous lecture, in which he described cell-division taking place equally in all directions, producing cell masses, as in large fruits and in many fungi. He then took as the type of another growth the nostoc, in which the protoplasm of each cell is subjected to successive cleavages, all made in the vertical direction and parallel to one another; hence the result is a moniliform group of small protoplasms arranged in a single linear series, like beads on a string. This form of cleavage gives rise to linear growth, such as is seen in all cellular hairs of plants, and in all twig-like and tall reed-like structures, in which the tendency to longitudinal growth exceeds lateral ones. The genus Gonium was selected as the third type. There the cleavage of the protoplasm is always in the vertical direction, but each successive fission is made ultimately at right angles to the preceding one; hence the single protoplasm is first divided into two, then into four, next into eight, and then into sixteen. The clusters of cells being all arranged in one plane and spreading out equally in every direction, at the same time displaying a frequent tendency to arrange themselves in clusters of four, as is well seen in ulva linza and many other sea-weeds. This is the group which produces all thin leaflike expansions. Volvox globator was next examined. Here the first cell-division is a vertical one, followed by a second, also vertical, but at right angles to the last, producing four protoplasms. The next cleavage being a horizontal one, we obtain eight protoplasms, arranged in two parallel layers. These being soon separated by an intervening fluid, a cavity is formed, which continues to increase. All subsequent cell-division being vertical to the surface of the organism, the horizontal one not being repeated, we obtain a hollow sphere, composed of a single superficial layer of cells, illustrating all those spherical structures, such as secreting cavities and fruit capsules, in which cellular tissue incloses a hollow cavity. Professor Williamson then described the desmidea, unicellular algae, with an hour-glass construction in the centre of each, giving them a bilateral symmetrical form. The union of the protoplasmic contents of two such cells was shown to produce large spores which give birth to young desmids; and a second mode of reproduction was described in which each half of the plant simultaneously develops a small bud, that grows until it equals in size the corresponding half of the parent plant, which now becomes divided along the middle line, thus producing two desmids where but one previously existed.

SUPPRESSION OF THE SLAVE TRADE ON THE WHITE NILE.

Sir Samuel White Baker, F.R.S., began his discourse at the Friday evening meeting on the 6th inst. with comments on the gradual suppression of the slave trade by European Powers, the recent extinction of slavery in the United States of America, and the encouragement of the traffic by the Mohammedan Powers, slaves being necessarily required by a sensual and an indolent people. In support of this statement he referred to the recently published work of Dr. Schweinfurth, "The Heart of Africa." Proceeding to the subject of his discourse, he said that the slave trade is encouraged by the governors of Egyptian provinces not only on account of the tolls they receive to permit it, in spite of its prohibition by the Khedive, but also because they believe it to have been authorised by Mohammed. The difficulties, however, attending its total suppression are not insurmountable; and this great end will eventually be attained, chiefly by European influence. If the Khedive were to replace the present corrupt Egyptian officials by honest and able Europeans throughout the Soudan and the Central African provinces he would not only save the country from utter ruin, but would stamp out the slave trade. Sir Samuel then described the evil consequences of over-taxation and misgovernment in fertile flourishing districts, witnessed by himself in 1870, in his journey from Berber to Khartoum. The Governor of the Soudan left his territory to the care of God, and increased the taxes. In one year he sent to the Khedive £100,000; but the next year the peasantry were totally ruined. Many abandoned the country and many took up the slave trade. At Khartoum Sir Samuel found a Government expedition intrusted to the command of a well-known slave-hunter, and he learnt that the Soudan Government, for about £15,000 a year, licensed persons who were nominally traders, but really brigands, to pillage, massacre, and enslave as much of Central Africa as they could overrun. He then read the text of the orders he himself had received from the Khedive, dated May 19, 1869, decreeing the organisation of "an expedition to subject to our authority the countries situate to the south of Gondokoro, to suppress the slave trade, to introduce a system of regular commerce, to open to navigation the great lakes of the Equator, and to establish a chain of military stations and commercial depôts distant at intervals of three days' journey throughout Central Africa, accepting Gondokoro as the base of operations." The supreme command is confided to Sir Samuel White Baker for four years." Sir Samuel said that the Khedive, unfortunately, differs from his subjects. He is far from a fanatic, being intelligent and experienced; but his active energy is always working against a passive resistance. The natural advantages of the country are very great, and enormous advantages would accrue from the encouragement of industry and commerce, and the establishment of railway communication, the electric telegraph, and the other accompaniments of civilisation. The people also possess intelligence, honesty, and other good qualities. In reference to the character of the Egyptian officials, he stated that, although he had himself suppressed the slave trade, yet he found afterwards that the Governor of Fashoda was receiving toll for the passage of slaves; but he added that the Sultan of Darfur, a fanatical Mohammedan and a slave-dealer, had recently been defeated in an attack upon the Egyptian frontier, and that, should this lead to his territories being conquered by the Khedive, a most fatal blow would thereby be given to the Central African slave trade. In conclusion, in reference to his recent expedition, Sir Samuel said that, though he had been the active instrument, great credit and honour are due to the Khedive of Egypt, as the first Mohammedan who has dared to strike at the root of this great abomination. Among the illustrations of the lecture was a map of Africa in relief by Mr. H. F. Brion, containing Sir Samuel Baker's corrections. George Busk, Esq., F.R.S., the treasurer and vice-president, was in the chair.

MOHAMMEDANISM AND CHRISTIANITY.

Mr. Bosworth Smith began his fourth and last lecture, on Saturday last, by some remarks on the Mohammedan ideas of a future life; the ordinary misconceptions of Christians respecting it; the way in which, in all religions, the circumstances of this life naturally influence the idea of the other; the eternal reality that it was to Mohammed himself, although no one can suppose that it supplied the motive by which he and his followers were inspired. It was, he remarked, another misconception that Islam was so successful because it was so sensual; as if any religion could owe its permanent success to its bad morality! Mohammed dealt with existing institutions, much as Moses had dealt before him. He did not make the manners of Arabia, and was too wise to think he could unmake or remake them all at once. He strictly limited polygamy and mitigated its worst evils. Polygamy was no more a part of Islam than slavery was a part of Christianity; they had simply coexisted. Mohammed could not abolish slavery, but he proscribed the slave trade and raised the condition of the slaves themselves to something like that of domestic servants. The orphan and the poor were the subject of his peculiar care; nor did he neglect the lower animals. What legislation has of late years tried to do ineffectually here in that respect had been long done in the East by the Prophet of Arabia. By forbidding gambling and intoxicating drinks, Mohammed anticipated the vacillating efforts of the European governments of the nineteenth century. Could it not, then, be said that Mohammed had done something of Christ's work, even if he had revered Christ less than, in fact, he did? Passing, then, to what he called the most important question of the lectures, Mr. Bosworth Smith maintained that Islam ought not to be despised or ignored by Christians. It was, at all events, an approach to Christianity. It was strictly monotheistic; its heroes were also those of Jews and Christians; it was in its essence a spiritual religion, allowing no priestcraft and no idolatry; finally, it looks back upon Christ with reverence only less than that of the truest Christians. If it were asked, why, then, did Mohammed reject Christianity, three reasons might be given:— Mohammed's imperfect knowledge of Christ; his dislike of certain dogmas, in which, rather than in a holy life, he was driven to believe that Christianity consisted; and the failure of such Christianity as he knew to overthrow idolatry in Arabia. The lecturer quoted fully from the Koran in support of these views. Then, turning to the question whether Islam had kept back the East, as it was often said, by hindering the spread of Christianity, he pointed out that Christianity had moved westward almost immediately after its birth, and it had never taken real hold of the East. The Christianity of the East in Mohammed's time was incurably corrupt. Islam had been a grand forward movement originally, and had been a higher life to untold millions since. It ill became Christians to complain of Islam for doing the good which they had failed to do. Islam was the religion of the pastoral or semi-pastoral world, and was not suited for countries of a wholly different nature. The lecturer illustrated his view by referring to the aspects of Islam in different countries, such as Spain, Africa, Turkey, Persia, and India. The contrast, however, between Christianity and Islam is most striking. In morality, in intellectual progress, in the method of drawing near to God, in the ideal life of all, the difference is vast and incommensurable. It must be remembered that the East itself is unprogressive, and that all religions are liable to corruption, and stand in need of revival. Islam is not incapable either of revival or of reform, as shown by the Wahabite movement in Arabia and in India, and by what is going on now to the east of Anatolia. It is an important question how far the introduction of Western manners can improve Eastern countries as regards, for instance, the form of government, polygamy, and slavery. The lives of such men as Livingstone are the best methods of introducing such civilisation and Christianity as the East can receive. Islam has yielded something, and might yield more, to both, if misconceptions were removed. Christians have something to learn from Mohammedanism, even as it is. Islam has still a mission in the world, and may be modified, even if it cannot be supplanted, by Christianity. Mr. Bosworth Smith concluded by a general review of Mohammed's character and by assigning to him the place which he conceived might be fairly claimed for him in universal history. (We are informed that this interesting course of lectures will be published shortly by Messrs. Smith and Elder.)

WEIGHT AND PRESSURE OF THE ATMOSPHERE.

Professor Tyndall, in beginning his fourth lecture on Tuesday last, said that the history of physical science furnishes ample illustration, not only of the variation of minds of different individuals as regards the investigation of nature, but also differences in the same individual as regards the power of grasping different ideas of nature. Goethe, with his endowments, might have become a great biologist, but he had no power to grasp the stricter physical sciences. He never could be made to understand Newton; and his work on colours proves that he misunderstood him. . . . Aristotle, also, lacked the firm grasp of the physical investigator; yet, so prodigious were his achievements in collecting and classifying all the knowledge of his time, that, even in physics, where he had no right to authority, natural or acquired, he was looked upon as finished and infallible; and, in consequence, verbal emptiness, wearing the air of wisdom, satisfied the world for more than two thousand years. . . . In Archimedes we have a strong contrast to Aristotle; yet it was not till the time of Galileo that the truths enunciated by him were re-enunciated. The Professor then gave additional experimental illustrations of the Archimedean principle. Some dry sewing-needles, dropped one by one into water, floated, and the water all round was shown to be depressed. This depression, which is due to surface repulsion, must be added to the size of the needles if we wish to know the quantity of water displaced. When this is done, the weight of the needles is equal to that of the displaced water. After proving this by other examples, remarks were made on the walking of insects on water, the floating of ice, and similar phenomena. The Professor then proceeded to the study of the gaseous form of matter, commencing with air. After referring to Galileo's jeering the Aristotelian notion that "Nature abhorred a vacuum," by saying that she did so only up to 32 ft., when the Florentine gardeners could pump water no higher, Professor Tyndall illustrated Torricelli's idea, that the force which lifts the water in the pump is the pressure of the air on the water outside the pump; and therefore a column of 32 ft. or 33 ft. of water balances the atmosphere. Torricelli, moreover, concluded that, with a heavier liquid than water, a column of less height would be supported—which he proved by means of mercury, which is thirteen times heavier than water. This view was further corroborated by the experiments of Pascal, who found, by taking the tube up a church spire and causing it to be carried up a mountain, that the column of mercury gradually diminished in height as the elevation to which the tube was raised increased. Professor Tyndall then, by a series of experiments, proved that the air has weight; and also explained the construction and action of the air-pump, the Magdeburg hemispheres, the boys' leather suckers, and other interesting examples of atmospheric pressure. Finally, he noticed the adhesion of two of Sir Joseph Whitworth's perfectly true planes placed upon each other, which he demonstrated to be due to molecular attraction, and not to atmospheric pressure, since the adhesion continued in a vacuum.

At the next Friday evening meeting, March 20, Dr. W. B. Carpenter, F.R.S., Registrar of the University of London, will give a discourse on the Temperature of the Atlantic.

FINE ARTS.

An exhibition of drawings and sketches by William Simpson, who has gone round the world as Special Correspondent of the Illustrated London News, will open to the public, at Burlington Gallery, 191, Piccadilly, on Monday next, the 16th. Many of the sketches are in black and white, and are the original material for the illustrations which have appeared in this paper of the Imperial Marriage at Peking, and other Engravings of China and Japan, as well as of the Modoc war on the frontiers of California.

The private view of the exhibition of the Society of Lady Artists takes place to-day (Saturday), at the new gallery of the society, 48, Great Marlborough-street. The exhibition will open to the public on Monday next.

The report of the Artists' General Benevolent Institution for last year has been issued. The income of the year amounted to £2736, and the sum of £1970 was distributed among ninety-eight applicants. The annual dinner is to take place on May 9. Sir Henry James will preside.

The annual exhibition in connection with the Manchester Academy of Fine Arts is open. The exhibition is said to be of more than average merit.

A portrait of the late Lord Derby, in his robes as Chancellor of the University of Oxford, by Mr. Desanges, has been purchased by subscription for presentation to some public gallery.

Mr. Barlow's engraving, after Mr. Millais's testimonial portrait, of Sir James Paget is ready for distribution.

Mr. George Ellis, of St. John's-wood, has presented a collection of sixty-five engraved portraits of historical and artistic interest to the Guildhall Library.

Mr. Field Talfourd, the portrait and landscape painter, in oil, water colours, and crayons, died suddenly on the 5th inst. He was the younger brother of Mr. Justice Talfourd, and was born in 1815.

At a special general meeting of the Royal Institute of British architects, on Monday evening last, the recommendation of the council that, subject to her Majesty's sanction, the Royal gold medal of 1873-4 be awarded to Mr. John Ruskin, M.A., the Slade Professor of Fine Art at the University of Oxford, was adopted.

The Athenæum is "able to state that the Council of the Royal Academy have had the subject of architectural drawings for their exhibition before them, and have decided for the future, as far as possible, to give a preference to those drawings which are evidently the actual productions of the architects who exhibit them. It has also been decided that geometrical elevations and detail drawings of interest are admissible." Such steps as these on the part of the Academy should tend to render the architectural portion of the exhibition at once more interesting, genuine, and instructive. At the same time, it is the ideas, not the autographic rendering, which should be the first consideration. Some architects have a very taking and picturesque knack of setting out with pen or pencil entirely stale and even worthless ideas.

Our readers are aware that by an order of the Court of Chancery the whole of the large stock of engravings after the works of Turner left by the painter have had to be sold. In pursuance of this order the fourth portion was sold at Messrs. Christie, Manson, and Wood's on four days of last week. It comprised "Ancient Carthage; the embarkation of Regulus," engraved by D. Wilson, 1840. Eight artist's proofs fetched from £11 to £12 10s. each. The "Ancient Italy," engraved by Willmore. Four artist's proofs realised from £9 to £13 each. The "Modern Italy," engraved by W. Müller, 1840. The artist's proof of this sold for £13 10s. "Heidelberg," engraved by T. A. Prior, 1846. Several unfinished proofs brought from £8 to £12. "Oxford," engraved by E. Goodall; "Venice," engraved by W. Müller, 1837, a touch proof of which fetched £8 5s.; "Mercury and Adonis," engraved by Willmore. The trial proof of the last sold for £12, and no less than fifty proofs before letters fetched from £6 to £10 each. Besides these there were a great number of impressions of "The Field of Waterloo," engraved by Lewis; "The Deluge," engraved by Quillet; "Fishing-Boats off Calais," engraved by Davison; and "Boccaccio: the Bird-cage," engraved by Quillet.

Two fine portraits by Rubens, representing members of the French family of Beaufort, have been added to the Brussels Museum.

The report of the last Autumn Exhibition at Liverpool sets forth that the number of admissions by payment was 31,679, besides 534 season tickets. The number of works exhibited was 1057. The sales amounted to £7402 17s. 6d.; £780 10s. being expended by the Corporation in pictures for the permanent Gallery of Art now in course of formation. The total receipts amounted to £1566 1s. 3d., leaving a profit of £466 1s.

In announcing, last week, the munificent gift to the town of Barnard Castle made by Mr. John Bowes, of Streatlam Castle, Durham, of his house, park, and collections at Barnard Castle, we erroneously included in the gift the fine collection of Japanese art-objects exhibited last year at the Liverpool Art-Club. The almost matchless collection of Japanese enamels, lacquer, bronzes, and porcelain to which we alluded has been formed by Mr. James L. Bowes, of Streatlam Tower, Liverpool, and still remains in that gentleman's possession.

Mr. Forbes Robertson, who (in place of the actor of the original cast) is playing Chastelard to Mrs. Rousby's Mary Queen of Scots at the Princess's, and whose spirited and pleasing impersonation of the young lover is winning greater favour for Mr. Wills's drama than was at first accorded to it, is likewise a very promising pupil in the painting school of the Royal Academy. He is the son of a well-known art-critic.

An institution called the Austrian Athenæum is established at Vienna to serve as a permanent memorial of the late International Exhibition in that capital. The Athenæum is founded for the instruction of mechanics and working men, after the plan of the Conservatoire des Arts et Métiers in Paris. Large numbers of articles left by exhibitors at the Exposition have been transported thither, together with a quantity of models and other instructive appliances, and a library of 3412 volumes.

STREWING FLOWERS BEFORE THE DUKE AND DUCHESS OF EDINBURGH AT GRAVESEND.

THE BURNING FROM A SKETCH

THE QUEEN MEETING THE DUKE AND DUCHESS OF EDINBURGH AT WINDSOR RAILWAY STATION.

THE MAGAZINES.

The Cornhill makes up a very pleasant number. There is much homely rustic pathos in "Far from the Madding Crowd;" and the dainty prettiness of some passages of the new tale, "A Rose in June," is worthy of the title. The chief interest, however, attaches to a new member of the charming group of semi-political stories of modern French society, which have long formed so agreeable a feature in this magazine. The subject is this time Bonapartism, so long the butt of the author's satire, but now, in its adversity, exhibited on the only poetical side it offers, the invincible fidelity of a veteran officer contrasted with the fickleness of courtiers. The little tale is as lively in incident as rich in feeling. Dr. Johnson's is not the character to lend itself readily to a new theory, and the able essay on the great lexicographer is inevitably little more than a repetition of accepted conclusions. A more liberal treatment of household dependants, especially as regards intellectual culture, is powerfully advocated by a well-known writer, easily identified by the initials; while another essayist extols the present by comparison with "the unpleasant past," and contends that the England of to-day is more comfortably off than ever before. It may be feared that the present is, nevertheless, unpleasant enough to large classes of the community. "Feng-Shui" is an account of a curious Chinese superstition, an eccentric sort of natural philosophy based on an imaginary conformity between terrestrial and celestial things.

Macmillan is by no means interesting this month. "Castle Daly," indeed, maintains its character as a racy Irish tale; and Mendelssohn's letters to Hiller are very pleasant, though too technically musical for general readers. The other contributions, however, either relate to subjects of minor importance or prejudice an important theme by heaviness of treatment; the latter is especially the case with an attack on the system of competitive examinations at the Universities—which, coming from Mr. Sedley Taylor, is probably as weighty in one sense as it is certainly heavy in another.

Blackwood commences a new fiction of admirable promise, "Alice Lorraine." The opening, introducing the chief personages at the important moment of consulting the prophecy of an astrologer, appears imitated from the similar scene in "Guy Mannering," but is hardly less provocative of curiosity. "Disorder in Dreamland" and "The Two Valentines" are successfully continued; a notice of Lord Stanhope's history of Queen Anne's reign displays abundant knowledge; and it would be unreasonable to quarrel with Blackwood's natural exultation at the most recent transactions of Queen Victoria's. The concluding part of "The Two Speransky" tells the story of the exiled and recalled Minister's daughter, with a specimen of her power as a novelist, which seems to have principally consisted in pathos.

Fraser, in a leading article in "The Turn of the Tide," accounts for the recent Liberal defeat on the ordinary hypothesis of a general indisposition to further organic change. Current events lend considerable interest to a paper on the multifarious employments of Indian civilians. "Stone Monuments of Sardinia" discusses the mysterious purpose of the nuraghe or prehistoric towers found over the island, which are explained as places of refuge in time of war. The tall, slender towers of Pembrokeshire churches might have been added to the examples adduced in support of this view. "The Teutonic and the Celtic Epic" is an elaborate comparison between the Tain Bo Cuailgne, an ancient Irish poem as yet unpublished, and the "Nibelungen Lied." The superiority of the German poem in all essential particulars is most marked. An essay on the German lyrical poetry of the Middle Ages in its relation to the contest between the Pope and the Emperor shows that the minneingers, like all poets and prophets in all countries and ages, had their full share of antipathy to the sacerdotal spirit.

The Fortnightly is hardly so interesting as usual. The most important article is one by Mr. F. Harrison on the recent elections, which he construes as indicating desertion of the Liberal party by the bulk of the middle class. This is certainly to some extent correct, and the effect must sooner or later be a great increase in the political activity and influence of the working classes. Mr. F. W. Newman's political essay, as usual with him, is more valuable for the inspiring influence of its lofty moral tone than for its practical suggestiveness; and the grievance which Mr. A. H. Bealy has discovered in the Scotch game laws, though no doubt a real one, is as yet mainly of local interest. Mr. Morley has imbibed the eloquence of the author under his review; his notice of Victor Hugo's "Ninety-three" is a remarkably fine piece of writing.

The Contemporary is replete with varied interest. Sir Henry Thompson replies to Dr. Holland's strictures on his proposal for the cremation of corpses, and explains its modus operandi. It has already, he states, been tried with perfect success on the bodies of large animals. Mr. Fitzjames Stephen, in a paper entitled "Caesarism and Ultramontanism," politely explains to Archbishop Manning why the State must decline to take cognizance of his pretensions to spiritual dominion. The contrast between the hard, matter-of-fact logic of the lawyer and the poetical mysticism of the priest is very entertaining. The prospects of the Catholic Church are hopefully discussed by Mr. St. George Mivart, whose position, however, we can hardly understand, as he rests his hopes for the future of his Church on a condition of mutual toleration condemned by that body itself. Professor Huxley's masterly Aberdeen address is here presented in a permanent form; while in another part of the Review the speaker is summoned by Dr. Bastian to show cause why evolutionists should not be held logically bound to embrace the doctrine of spontaneous generation also. Mr. Holyoake's essay on the elections contains a powerful rebuke of a section of the Liberal party for its ingratitude to Mr. Gladstone.

In Scribner's Monthly we have to note a beautifully-illustrated description of the romantic mountain districts of North Carolina, a full account of the recent "Crédit Mobilier" scandal, and a pretty poem by R. H. Stoddard.

The Transatlantic contains its usual copious selection from the leading American periodicals. One of the most interesting papers, from the Tribune, is an account of the recent remarkable geological explorations in the Far West, which have thrown great light on the fauna, flora, and physical constitution of the North American continent during the tertiary period. At this time the centre of the country was occupied by a chain of lakes, and the climate was much milder than at present. A review of Bagehot on the English Constitution, from the North American, powerfully calls attention to the unsystematic and hand-to-mouth character of American legislation as one of the principal dangers of the future.

Old and New is varied and entertaining, but contains nothing of special note, except Mr. Trollope's new fiction, which is published simultaneously with its appearance in England.

"Patricia Kemball" is continued with much spirit in Temple Bar. A family bereavement, consigning the heroine to the charge of an uncongenial guardian, introduces a change of scene, and thus leads up to a very graphic description of an English watering-place of the ordinary class. "The Cycle of Lullaby Song," having conducted our national poetry from infancy to its old age, in the eighteenth century, winds up with the cheerful assurance that the subsequent outburst in Byron's era must be regarded as a re-birth. The "Pervigilium Veneris" is very prettily translated.

The scenery of the two sections of the present instalment of Mr. Francillon's "Olympia," in the Gentleman's Magazine, is strongly contrasted—the first part being laid in English woodlands, the second in Buenos Ayres. Both are admirably sketched, and the style is very highly finished. Mr. Hepworth Dixon, in a vigorous article on the conflict between Pope and Emperor, apparently enunciates the questionable proposition that right is necessarily on the side of might, but afterwards discovers that might agrees with right in siding with the Emperor. This proposition would be almost more distasteful than the former to the conductors of the Month, who seem to have never mastered the legal maxim respecting "coming into court with clean hands." It is really too ridiculous for an institution which denounces the claim of a nation like Italy to self-government to quarrel with restrictions imposed upon her own. The Tichborne case imparts additional interest to Mr. Walton's paper on "Stonyhurst Life," which will be found pleasant reading.

Tinsley relies principally on its trio of novels, of which Mr. M'Carthy's "Linley Rochford" is the most remarkable. The Argosy preserves its well-marked individuality. "Waiting for the Cars" is an especially good story. In London Society we have to notice Mr. Wilson's parallel of Rachel and Macready, Mr. O'Shaughnessy's graceful "Angora," and the fullest English criticism on the younger Dumas we have yet seen, from the pen of Mr. Keningale Cook. Mr. Sala is, as usual, the chief contributor to Belgravia. Mrs. Craik's novel and the record of the Challenger's cruise continue prominent among the attractions of Good Words, which also commences two series of papers of excellent promise—Professor Balfour Stewart on solar research and Mr. Allardyce on the natives of Calcutta—and has a charming little poem, "A Street Idyll," by O. Brooke.

We have also to acknowledge the Victoria Magazine, the Monthly Packet, the St. James's Magazine, Cassell's Magazine, Once a Week, and the Irish Monthly.

THE ROYAL NAVY WEDDING GIFT.

Of the marriage gifts presented this week to her Royal Highness the Duchess of Edinburgh, none will be more costly and beautiful than that given by her husband's comrades in a gallant and patriotic service, the officers of the Royal Navy and Royal Marines. It is a magnificent set of gold plate, manufactured by Messrs. Williams and Hill (late Catchpole), of Oxford-street. There are sixty pieces, forming a complete dessert service for twenty-four persons, which includes a centrepiece and épergne, four seven-light candelabra, a loving-cup, a pair of claret-pitchers, a pair of sugar-vases, two large oval fruit-stands and four round, twelve salt-cellars, with salt-spoons, and other articles. The épergne is a tripod, raised upon a hexagonal plateau, which bears the following inscription:—"Presented to H.I.H. the Grand Duchess Marie Alexandrovna of Russia, on her marriage with Captain his Royal Highness the Duke of Edinburgh, R.N., K.G., by the officers of the Royal Navy and Royal Marines." The épergne is three feet high. At the base are the Royal and Imperial arms of England and Russia, with the monogram "A.A." and a crown. The friezes are all different. Grotesque masks, a figure of Neptune, and another of a water-nymph adorn this part of the work. The vase, which is intended to contain a fruit-trophy or a bouquet, is divided into panels, on which are various masks in relief; three winged dragons form the supports. Not less elaborate in design are the seven-light candelabra, on which are a number of minute figures, consisting of animals and other subjects; three goats' heads, or "masks," appearing under the figures of the Seasons, which form the apex. Each capital is wreathed with flowers and doves; on the capitals of the pillars are fruits and flowers, amongst which are golden toads; the stems of the pillars are adorned with cherubs and beetles; fruits, flowers, and masks predominate at the base. The claret-pitchers, while they are copies of Cellini's works, are of the well-known Hebe form, and have for handles a Bacchante and the infant Bacchus. The loving-cup is of appropriate design and finely modelled; it bears the Royal arms and various marine emblems.

The Hon. George Wentworth Fitzwilliam, of Milton House, Northamptonshire, died on the 4th inst., at his seat near Peterborough, from the effects of a fall while hunting. This much-lamented gentleman, master of the Fitzwilliam hounds, was born May 3, 1817, the third son of Charles William, fifth Earl Fitzwilliam, K.G., by Mary, his wife, daughter of Thomas, first Lord Dundas. He married, March 18, 1865, Alice Louisa, daughter of the late Major-General the Hon. George Anson, and leaves issue one son and two daughters.

LIEUTENANT EYRE.

Arthur Hardolph Eyre, Lieutenant 90th Foot, who volunteered for the African war and has met a gallant soldier's death in Ashantee, was born in 1851, the only son of the late Lieutenant-General Sir William Eyre, K.C.B., one of the most distinguished of the Kaffir and Crimean officers, by Georgiana, his wife, daughter of the Hon. J. Bridgman Simpson, and was grandson of Vice-Admiral Sir George Eyre, K.C.B., K.C.M.G., a younger brother of the late Anthony Hardolph Eyre, Esq., of Grove, Notts, M.P. for that county. Lieutenant Eyre, described by Colonel Evelyn Wood, V.C., as "the bravest boy he ever saw," was killed in the action on the river Dah, on Feb. 4, true to the heroism he inherited.

MR. WYNNE-FINCH.

Charles Wynne-Finch, Esq., of Voelas, in the county of Denbigh, and Cefn Amwlch, in the county of Carnarvon, formerly M.P. for Carnarvon, died at 4, Rue de Solferino, Paris, on the 3rd inst. He was born June 14, 1815, the eldest son of the late Charles Wynne Griffith Wynne, Esq., of Voelas, by Sarah, his wife, daughter of the Rev. Henry Hildyard, of Stokesley, in the county of York, and was grandson of the Hon. Charles Finch (second son of Heneage, third Earl of Aylesford), who married Jane Wynne, heiress of the great Cambrian family of Wynne of Voelas (sprung from Marchweithian, Lord of Ys Aled, founder of the eleventh noble tribe of North Wales and Powys), and assumed her surname and arms. The late Mr. Wynne Finch married, first, 1840, Laura Susan, daughter of Richard Pollen, Esq., of Rodbourne, Wilts; and, secondly, 1863, Jamesina Joyce Ellen, widow of H. Styleman Le Strange, Esq., of Hunstanton, and daughter of John Stewart, Esq., of Belladrum. By the former (who died in 1851) he leaves three sons.

Sir Stafford Northcote was, on Tuesday, officially gazetted Chancellor of the Exchequer; the Earl of Bradford, Master of the Horse; Mr. Stephen Cave, Judge-Advocate-General; and Mr. George Millar, Solicitor-General for Scotland.

Mr. James Falshaw, C.E., was, on Tuesday, unanimously elected Lord Provost of Edinburgh, in the room of Mr. James Cowan, who had resigned the office on becoming one of the members for the city.

The Mayor of Wrexham entertained 3000 school children, on Tuesday, in honour of the marriage of the Duke and Duchess of Edinburgh, and the day was observed as a general holiday in the town.

An Archaeological and Architectural Association has recently been formed at Reading, for the county of Berks, and the first meeting was held on Tuesday night, when a lecture on Reading Abbey was delivered by the Rev. L. G. Maine. Several leading county gentlemen are members of the society.

The Metropolitan Board of Works, in view of the public entry of the Duke and Duchess of Edinburgh into London, issued circulars to the district surveyors instructing them to carefully inspect all balconies, parapets, and temporary erections in their jurisdiction.

The Earl of Glasgow appeals for subscriptions and donations to the Eastbourne Convalescent Hospital, to enable the committee to clear off the debt and complete the chapel and new wards. About £3000 is required for these purposes. During the year ending last October 463 patients were received, and 200 applicants were obliged to wait admission for want of space.

The Lord Mayor has issued invitations to a banquet to be given in the Egyptian Hall of the Mansion House, on Friday, the 20th inst., to the President of the Board of Trade; Mr. Sampson Lloyd, M.P., chairman of the Associated Chambers of Commerce; and the chairmen and delegates of the various chambers of commerce and chambers of agriculture in the United Kingdom.

At the annual meeting of the members of the United Service Institution, last Saturday night, Admiral Sir Alexander Milne, who was in the chair, announced that a gold medal was to be granted annually for the best essay on a naval or military subject, and that the subject for next year's essay was "The best mode of providing recruits from the reserve forces for the British Army, taking into consideration its various duties in times of peace and war."

FLORILINE.

For the TEETH and BREATH.

Is the best liquid dentifrice in the world; it thoroughly cleanses partially decayed teeth from all parasites or living "animalcules," leaving them pearly white, imparting a delightful fragrance to the breath. Price 2s. 6d. per bottle. The Fragrant Floriline removes instantly all odours arising from a foul stomach or tobacco smoke.

For children and adults whose teeth show marks of decay its advantages are paramount. The "Floriline" should be thoroughly brushed into all the cavities; no one need fear using it too often or too much at a time. Among the ingredients being soda, honey, spirits of wine, borax, and extracts from sweet herbs and plants, it forms not only the very best dentifrice for cleansing ever discovered, but one that is perfectly delicious to the taste and as harmless as sugar. The taste is so pleasing that, instead of taking up the toothbrush with dislike, as is often the case, children will on no account omit to use the "Floriline" regularly each morning if only left to their own choice. Children cannot be taught the use of the toothbrush too young; early neglect invariably produces premature decay of the teeth. "Floriline" is prepared only by HENRY C. GALLUP, 498, Oxford-street, London; and sold by all Chemists and Perfumers throughout the world at 2s. 6d. per bottle. "Floriline" Powder, put up in large glass jars, price 1s.

FLORILINE.

For the TEETH and BREATH.

Would you preserve your pearly teeth
In all their beauty now,
And keep them perfect as they are,
And White as Alpine snow?
If so, use "Gallup's Dentifrice,"
It is the Toilet's Queen;
And ladies all with one accord
Use "FRAGRANT FLORILINE."

What gives to beauty its great charm,
And its main feature, too?
Why, pearly teeth of perfect shape,
And snowy in their hue.
And what preserves them in that state,
And keeps them pure and clean?
Why, Gallup's famous "Dentifrice,"
The "FRAGRANT FLORILINE."

Discoloration it arrests,
And animalcules too,
It keeps the teeth a snowy white,
The gums a rosy hue;
The breath it makes both fresh and sweet,
The mouth so nice and clean;
And hence it makes both young and old

FLORILINE.

For the TEETH and BREATH.

It may, or may not, be generally known that microscopic examinations have proved that animal or vegetable parasites gather, unobserved by the naked eye, upon the teeth and gums of at least one person in every ten; any individual may easily satisfy himself in this matter by placing a powerful microscope over a partially decayed tooth, when the living animalcules will be found to resemble a partially decayed tooth more than anything else we can compare it to. We may also state that the Fragrant Floriline is the only remedy discovered able perfectly to free the teeth and gums from these parasites without the slightest injury to the teeth or the most tender gums.

Read this—From the "Weekly Times," March 26, 1871—"There are so many who obtain all their celebrity from are so constantly and extensively advertised, that it makes it necessary when anything new and good is introduced to the public that special attention should be called to it. The most delightful and effective toilet article for cleansing and beautifying the teeth that we have seen is a long experience have ever used is the new Fragrant Floriline. It is quite a pleasure to use it, and its properties of imparting a fragrance to the breath and giving a pearly whiteness to the teeth make it still more valuable. Of all the numerous remedies for cleaning the teeth which from time to time have been fashionable and popular, nothing to be compared with the Floriline has hitherto been produced, whether considered as a beautifier or a valuable cleanser and preserver of the teeth and gums.

The Fragrant Floriline is put up in elegant toilet cases, and sold by all Perfumers and Dealers in Toilet Articles in the Kingdom, at 2s. 6d. per bottle.

Prepared by HENRY C. GALLUP, 498, Oxford-street.

FLORILINE.

For the TEETH and BREATH.

Its constant use prevents the Teeth
From tarnish or decay;
All animalcules, too, it drives
Permanently away.
It cleanses every tainted place,
However long it's been,
And purifies the human mouth,
Does "FRAGRANT FLORILINE."

This pure and matchless Dentifrice
Surpasses all the rest;
It is acknowledged on all hands
As infinitely better than any Ould from the choicest, sweetest Flowers,
In distant lands now seen,
They give a most delicious charm
To "FRAGRANT FLORILINE."

One trial of this liquid gem
Will prove its wondrous powers;
The mouth will feel as fresh and sweet
As Spring's delightful showers.
It beautifies your teeth at once,
Discoloured though they've been;
For nothing answers half so well
As "FRAGRANT FLORILINE."

FLORILINE.

For the TEETH and BREATH.

"Floriline"—The most eminent Chemists of the day admit that Floriline will produce snowy teeth and fragrant breath where nothing else will. While mineral tooth preparations injure the enamel of the teeth, this wonderful vegetable liquid preserves and beautifies them. Symptoms of decay, and all discolorations of every sort, disappear by magic; and by its delightful use the mouth becomes as fragrant and sweet as a font of flowers; so that, in fact, when it has once been used, either by the young or the old, they will never discontinue it, but, as the "Christian World" truly says, "Those who once begin to use it will certainly never willingly give it up."

Another great authority says:—"The Floriline is a vegetable dentifrice of the purest quality; it is perfectly harmless in its use—beneficial, but not injurious. It imparts to the teeth a pearly and most beautiful whiteness, gives a delightful fragrance to the breath, and no discovery having the same purpose in view has hitherto approached it in interest or success."

From the "Young Ladies' Journal"—"An agreeable dentifrice is always a luxury. As one of the most agreeable may be reckoned Floriline. It cleanses the teeth and imparts a pleasant odour to the breath. It has been analysed by several eminent professors of chemistry, and they concur in their testimony to its usefulness. We are frequently asked to recommend a dentifrice to our readers; therefore we cannot do better than advise them to try the Fragrant Floriline."

Put up in elegant toilet cases, and sold by all Perfumers and Dealers in Toilet Articles in the Kingdom, at 2s. 6d. per bottle.

FLORILINE.

For the TEETH and BREATH.

Preservation of nature's charms,
It never fails to please;
It makes the mouth as fresh and sweet
As summer's balmy breeze;
It makes the teeth as white as pearls,
In all their beauty seen;
And thus it is that all apply
The "FRAGRANT FLORILINE!"

The breath it makes as sweet as flowers
Just washed in morning's dew;
The gums it cleanses pure and clean,
Their tint it does renew.
It makes the mouth a font of sweets,
Well worthy of each theme;
And all admire the magic powers
Of "FRAGRANT FLORILINE!"

Secretions of a baneful kind,
And animalcules too,
All fly before its potent power—
It cleanses through and through.
This Dentifrice of peerless worth
In every household seen,
And why? Because it purges all

FLORILINE.

For the TEETH and BREATH.

The "Christian World" of March 17, 1871, says, with respect to Floriline:—"Floriline bids fair to become a household word in England, and one of peculiarly pleasant meaning. It would be difficult to conceive a more efficacious and agreeable preparation for the teeth. Those who once begin to use it will certainly never willingly give it up."

Mr. Russell, the celebrated dentist, 14, York-place, Portman-square, London, writes:—"I have tried your Floriline, and find it not only a great assistance in my practice in cleansing the teeth and sweetening the breath, but it gives entire satisfaction. I recommend it to all my patients, and I believe hundreds of them would never visit a dentist would be much benefited by the use of your Floriline."

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON, SATURDAY, MARCH 21, 1874.

Monday last was the eighteenth anniversary of Prince Louis Napoleon's birthday. On that day he passed out of his state of tutelage and entered upon his majority. If the vacant throne of France had been placed, either by the disposition of political parties, or by the turn of events, within range of his own choice, he might on that day have mounted its steps and taken his seat thereupon without any legal disqualification. The occasion was naturally turned to account by the Imperialists of France for making an imposing demonstration. For some time past preparations have been in progress for the due celebration of the day. From all parts of France persons representative of all grades of society, and more particularly those of official rank during the reign of the late Emperor, deemed that they could best testify their respect for the memory of Napoleon III., and most emphatically express their adherence to the cause of the Empire in connection with the Prince Imperial, by making a kind of pilgrimage to Camden House and paying their homage of loyalty to him on the day of his coming of age. Accordingly, the assemblage assumed proportions of some considerable magnificence, both in regard to the rank and to the numbers of those who joined it. The programme to which they conformed their proceedings was simple enough, but it answered its purpose. It constituted, in theory, a recognition by France of the claims inherited by the son of the late Emperor to her devotion, and it elicited from him a declaration that whenever the nation might desire his presence and his service they would be freely placed at its disposal.

The conduct of the young Prince during his residence in this country, so far as it has been permitted to come under the notice of Englishmen, has been such as could hardly fail of awakening their sympathy and winning their respectful esteem. He has taken his place in what is to him a community of foreigners with that reticence of manners, and that entire regard for law, which show that he appreciates the hospitality extended to him. Unobtrusive, quiet, studious, in feeling and in behaviour a thorough gentleman, he has devoted himself with laudable industry to the acquisition of those attainments which would be deemed by his fellow-countrymen best adapted to the supreme position to which he aspires. So far as materials for judgment are before us, he has not attempted to embarrass the English Government by straining the liberty conferred upon him as a visitor in launching any conspiracy against the existing order of things in France. Of course there has been no secret in regard to his pretensions and his hopes. The rights of the Napoleonic dynasty centre in him. It would be unnatural if he were to be insensible to the grandeur of his position. But, under the advice of his friends, he has wisely made his own prospects in regard to the throne dependent upon the suffrages of the French people. He will do nothing to disturb existing law and order in the country which he hopes one day to govern. He is not about to thrust himself prematurely upon the will of France. He demands, however, on her behalf that she should have a fair opportunity of making her wishes known by means of a plébiscite; and, whenever that method of collecting the opinions of the people shall be resorted to, he confidently anticipates that the name of Napoleon will receive an overwhelming majority of the suffrages of the people.

It is hazardous to predict what may or may not come to pass in France. The history of the last half century has brought under review such frequent, and we may add violent, alternations of popular feeling in that country that we may well be cautious of pronouncing any change impossible. If we had not been thus warned we certainly should have been inclined to regard a reconstruction of the Empire as one of the least likely events which the future could produce. The surrender at Sedan seemed at the time to have utterly and for ever destroyed all those illusions which Frenchmen had cherished in connection with the Second Empire. That terrible catastrophe laid bare to their view the hidden springs from which the life of the Imperial Government had been derived. There was no natural, honest, or enduring vitality in it. Its official mechanism, complicated as it seemed, served but to answer the purposes of selfishness and corruption. The system had puffed up the vainglory of the nation until nothing appeared to be beyond reach of its fancied capabilities. The Franco-German War, into which the Government had plunged—mainly, it was suspected, with a view to the furtherance of dynastic objects—rudely disclosed to the nation the hollowness of its official system, when it was too late to remedy the evil. All France at that time reprobated the Empire as an untrustworthy pretence. "Nous sommes trahis!" was the universal cry. Imperialism scarcely durst let its voice be heard. The National Assembly at Bordeaux almost unanimously pronounced its condemnation. Ostensibly, it has even now but a slender following. Republicanism of some shade or other triumphs over it in every election in which their respective claims are brought into competition; and the probability seems to be that, if the ruling authorities at Versailles were to arrange for taking a plebiscite to-morrow, the Prince Imperial would find his services declined.

And yet the ceremonial of Monday last may peradventure foreshadow a momentous fact. Time and events may possibly obliterate from the memory of Frenchmen the miseries inflicted upon their country by two expositions of Imperial regime. Certainly, such a result would appear to sober-minded politicians to be among the last to be expected. But, if anything can prepare the way for it, the fatuous proceedings of the present French Government are not unlikely to do so. France desires above all things a quiet and prolonged breathing time, and there is no saying what her people will not put up with rather than be caught in another revolutionary cyclone. But the disfranchisement of not less than a third of the electoral body may be expected to test with great severity the forbearance of the people, and may even, if carried into effect, after all miscarry as to the chief intention it is meant to subserve. But who can tell what effect these impolitic projects may have upon the popular temper? And, inasmuch as the name of Napoleon is closely associated with universal suffrage, who will be bold enough to say that the attempt of the Monarchical party to tamper with the latter may not, by contrast, shed a glare of attraction upon the former? The hopeless dreams of one party are sometimes turned into realities by the inconceivable follies of another.

THE ASHANTEE WAR—SKETCHES BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST.

ARRIVAL OF STORES.

A NIGHT ALARM.

THE RETURN FROM COOMASSIE: CROSSING A RIVER.—FROM A SKETCH BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST.

THE ASHANTEE WAR.

Our news of the termination of this most successful military enterprise is now complete. Sir Garnet Wolseley, who was received with a festive triumph on his return to Cape Coast Castle, has sent a last batch of the subordinate commanding officers' despatches to the Secretary of State for War. The troops have returned to England and have been met with the popular welcome and deserved praises they might fairly expect. The Tamar troop-ship, with the 23rd Royal Welsh Fusiliers, the Royal Artillery, and Royal Marine Artillery, arrived at Portsmouth at three o'clock in the morning on Thursday last. The Sarmatian, with the 42nd Highlanders, and the Himalaya, with the Rifle Brigade, were daily expected. Our Special Artist, Mr. Melton Prior, arrived in London this week. In a very few days we shall publish, apart from the ordinary weekly issue of this Journal, an ILLUSTRATED NARRATIVE OF THE ASHANTEE WAR, expressly written for the occasion, and furnished with a large number of the ENGRAVINGS, from our Special Artist's SKETCHES, which have appeared during the autumn and winter months. Meantime, a few more are presented in this week's paper, and we shall give others of equal interest with the least possible delay. A Portrait of Major-General Sir Garnet Wolseley is in preparation for our next.

The subjects of five Illustrations in this Number of our Journal are the following incidents witnessed and sketched by our Special Artist—the 42nd Highlanders fighting at the battle of Amoafu, on Jan. 31; the scene in the city of Coomassie, on Feb. 6, when the streets were cleared by the Naval Brigade, previously to setting the town on fire; the troops crossing the river Ordah, which was dangerously swollen by the rains, on their first day's return march from Coomassie; and two minor incidents—namely, a night alarm in the camp, and the reception of a train of carriers with army stores.

With reference to the gallant behaviour of the 42nd Highlanders (Black Watch) at the battle of Amoafu, with the 23rd (Welsh Fusiliers) and Rait's field artillery, comprising the foremost column of attack, under command of Brigadier-General Sir Archibald Alison, C.B., we quote the following account by an eye-witness:—

"The 42nd and the eighty men of the 23rd Regiment, now up with us, were under Sir Archibald, and to them was intrusted the task of forcing the enemy's position in the direct front. As the Ashantee tactics are always the same, and consist of a trap to draw on the enemy in front while they push on one or both his flanks through the dense bush, preparations had been made for this. Half the Naval Brigade and Russell's regiment were to clear and protect the left, while the other half of the Naval Brigade and Wood's regiment guarded the right. The Rifle Brigade was retained as a reserve in the General's own hands. Rait's two guns, under his own orders, were with Sir Archibald, and a rocket was with each of the flanking parties. These arrangements, however, were some time in developing themselves, because of the slow progress which alone can be made in moving out from a narrow path. The first line of Sir Archibald Alison's column in front was sent out in skirmishing order through the bush, and had soon to be supported by the second, and not long after by another company. The Engineer labourers moving with them cut down the bush partially to aid their advance. The resistance offered to them by the Ashantees, completely concealed in the bush, and knowing the ground perfectly, was even at the first considerable; but it was not till a marshy piece of ground about 800 yards from Insafu was reached that the really serious opposition was experienced. By this time five companies were already skirmishing, the slugs were dropping thick and fast, and there was a moment or two when the men's nerves were certainly in a very ticklish condition. There is something very unpleasant about shots that come suddenly out, sometimes singly, sometimes in loud and continually repeated bursts, from places that a moment before gave no indication of human life; but when, in addition to this, the ground became so marshy and slippery that in the movement forward every step served to disclose the position of the men to the perfectly-concealed foe, the situation was trying. Fortunately, the enemy were pitching in slugs, and not bullets, or scarcely a man of the Black Watch would have lived to tell the tale. As it was, there were few of the officers who did not receive a scratch. Major Baird was seriously wounded whilst in active command of the regiment; and, although few of the officers' wounds were of a disabling character, several were by no means pleasant. Major Macpherson, among the number, was hit in several places. The greater part of the 105 wounded men of the regiment were struck during the pause and delay, whilst it seemed impossible to subdue the fire of the Ashantees, and equally impossible to advance over the marshy ground and through the dense bush with such a rush as was necessary to make them give way. It was at this critical moment that Captain Rait's gun—there was no room for two—came into action on the direct line of advance. The shells, fired at that short distance with deadly effect, soon forced the enemy to clear the road in the front, and as they gave way upon their own left upon the road the 42nd pushed them on from that point along the whole line, and they began to yield. About fifty yards or more farther up, Rait's guns again came into action against the enemy, who had at once taken up a fresh position, as the bush prevented the Black Watch from forming quickly. Again the enemy perforce gave way before the shells along the road; again the 42nd took instant advantage of it, and the enemy rolled back. The men were now in such high spirits that the terrors of the bush were no more. Sir Archibald saw that the moment had now come. He ordered the pibroch to sound. Down altogether, with a ringing cheer, went the splendid regiment under his orders, straight at the concealed foe. No enemy could have withstood such a charge when the opportunity for delivering it had fairly come. Away bolted every Ashantee in front of them, away down one hill and up another, on which stood the village of Amoafu itself. Along the road Rait's little guns pelted after the enemy as often as he tried to turn. Up the hill the guns went hardly less quickly than the flying enemy, though each had to be carried on by the Houssas and placed again for action. By twenty minutes past eleven the village was in our hands, and Rait had put telling shells after the retreating enemy as he was racing along the broad expanse of ground which had formed a portion of the Ashantee camp."

The return march from Coomassie was a most critical operation, for the country is intersected with rivers, which were hourly rising and threatening to become impassable from the tremendous and continuous storms of rain beginning on the 5th, the day after Coomassie was entered by our troops. It was this emergency that caused the hasty departure of Sir Garnet on the 6th from the Ashantee capital; all the more because it was coupled with the apprehension of sickness among them from the malaria that is always engendered by the commencement of the rainy season in a tropical climate. The General observes, in his despatch of the 7th from Agemmmu:—"This return march was not made without difficulty. The streams and rivers had become so swollen, from the effect of the tornadoes of the last few days, that the shallow swamps had become waist-deep. The water in the river Ordah had yesterday submerged the bridge constructed on the night of the 3rd inst., and was still rising when the troops passed the river. But the convoys were all taken over in safety; and the men of the Rifle Brigade and 42nd Regiment, before whose arrival the bridge had commenced to give way, undressed, passed their clothes over the heads of natives, and themselves forded the stream, in one part fully 5 ft. deep."

In addition to these events of the campaign through the Ashantee country, one or two sketches made by our Artist in the neighbourhood of Cape Coast Castle find place in our Paper this week. The Sweet River is well known to all who have visited the Gold Coast. It is a few miles out along the road between Cape Coast Castle and Elmina.

FOREIGN AND COLONIAL NEWS.

FRANCE.

Thursday, March 19.

The coming of age of the Prince Imperial, on Monday last, appears to have excited far more attention in England than in France, where the event passed by almost unnoticed. Simply in Corsica a solitary band paraded the streets of Bastia waving tricolour flags, singing "Partant pour la Syrie," and shouting "Vive Napoléon!" One of the Paris Republican papers spitefully attributes the little notice taken of the event over here to the circumstance of the entire Imperialist party having crossed the Channel on a pilgrimage to Chislehurst. The Figaro less ill-naturedly remarks that a few thousand Imperialists carrying addresses signed by a few hundred thousand others of their way of thinking to the Prince at Chislehurst will not suffice to restore the Empire. Generally speaking, the Prince's address has been rather severely criticised by the Paris journals, several of them even pointing out certain palpable faults of style as proof positive that M. Rouher had no hand in it, and that it must have been entirely the Prince's own composition.

Queen Victoria's letter to Marshal MacMahon notifying the marriage of the Duke and Duchess of Edinburgh is duly recorded in the journals.

The Duc de Broglie and his colleagues have experienced another embarrassing check. The powers of the present municipal councils expire on April 30 next, and to prevent any fresh elections, which would inevitably lead to the forced resignation of the numerous "administrative commissions" now installed in different parts of the country, and would, moreover, furnish the electors with a grand opportunity for expressing their dissatisfaction of the present arbitrary régime, the Cabinet has presented a bill for prolonging the nominal duration of the municipal councils until Dec. 31. This measure is brought forward under the specious pretext of allowing time for enacting a new law upon municipal elections; but the truth is that the Duc de Broglie has no desire to change the present state of things. One third of the municipal councils are suspended, administrative commissions occupy their place, the Mayors chosen by the electors have been removed, and Government nominees now guarantee "moral order" throughout the country.

The majority of the Committee appointed to examine the bill are, however, opposed to it on the ground that it encroaches upon the rights of the electors in maintaining the present municipal councillors in office; while, to add to the discomfiture of the Government, the Committee have chosen two ex-Republican Mayors—M. Rameau and M. Tassin—as their president and secretary. This defeat of the Government has naturally caused some sensation; still it is impossible to say which way the Assembly will vote when the question comes on for debate. The Republicans had a majority in the Committee on the project for prolonging Marshal MacMahon's powers, but were defeated when the matter was brought on for discussion. The debate which took place in the Assembly yesterday will, however, throw some light upon the future votes of the Chamber. The Assembly was crowded, M. Thiers being present. M. Challemel-Lacour explained the interpellation of the Left relative to the Duc de Broglie's circular on the nomination of Mayors. He discussed the terms of the bill prolonging Marshal MacMahon's powers, the statements made from time to time by the Ministers, and the speech of Marshal MacMahon, and he affirmed that the country desired the definitive establishment of the Republic. His speech was frequently cheered by the Left. The Duc de Broglie replied, saying that the Septennat had been confided to Marshal MacMahon in such a manner that he could not be dispossessed, the object of the prolongation of his power being to secure France seven years of stability. M. Cazenove de Pradines, a Legitimist deputy, made a statement respecting the Septennat, viewed from a Monarchical standpoint. The Duc de Broglie said the Government did not accept any responsibility for the previous speaker's opinions. M. Buffet then read two orders of the day presented respectively by the Extreme Left and Left Centre, blaming the Government for the want of harmony between its words and its acts. After some short explanations from M. Lacaze, of the Left Centre, and M. Brisson, of the Extreme Left, the Assembly, by 380 votes against 318, adopted the order of the day pure and simple, which had priority, giving the Government a majority of 62.

The deficit in the Budget now amounts only to the bagatelle of twenty millions of francs, but where they will be found it is difficult to say. After M. Puyser-Quertier had carried his amendment establishing the excise system at the sugar-refineries from July 1, 1875, he brought forward a second proposition rendering it partially applicable at once. This the Chamber rejected by 456 votes against 113, after an animated debate, in which several members of the Government took part. The surtax upon salt, proposed by MM. de Broglie and Magne and seconded by the Budget Committee, then came on for discussion; but it was most vehemently opposed on all sides, and eventually negatived by 410 votes to 270.

With regard to the new electoral law, laid upon the table of the Assembly a few days ago, the Duc de Broglie has informed the Committee of Thirty that he accepts the reporters' proposals in the main, and will only ask for one or two unimportant alterations when the bill comes on for discussion. At a recent meeting of the Committee a member proposed to disfranchise the colonies, citing the example of England in support of his suggestion; whereupon M. Laboulaye at once silenced him by observing that Great Britain lost her American colonies through not allowing them to be represented in the British Parliament.

Count de Kératry and other deputies from Brittany are agitating for M. Gambetta's prosecution on the ground that he is responsible for the deaths of the unfortunate Mobiles who perished from cold and neglect at the camp of Conlie during the late war. Numerous petitions having been sent to the Assembly on the subject, a Committee has been appointed to inquire into the matter.

M. Emile Ollivier has published the address he was to have read to the Academy in a brochure, preceded by a singularly bitter preface, in which he relates the various incidents to which his proposed reception gave rise. He was present at Tuesday's sitting of the Academy.

"La Jeunesse de Louis XIV.," one of the best of Alexander Dumas père's historical dramas, has been produced with tolerable success at the Odéon, M. Alexander Dumas fils having previously revised and, indeed, considerably modified the play.

Madame Lenoir Josseland, who died here recently, has left 10,000,000f. for the purpose of building a hospital, to be named after her late husband. M. Josseland on his death left his wife a magnificent collection of miniatures, snuffboxes, and other costly objects of art, of the estimated value of 800,000f., being the collection of thirty years. According to her late husband's wishes, Madame Josseland has left all these articles to the State.

Notwithstanding Count Moltke's impressive plea for a large standing army, the Military Committee of the Reichstag has rejected the clause of the Army Bill fixing the peace standard at 401,000 men. The clause was supported by only four votes. An amendment was moved for making the permanent peace strength 385,000 men, but that also failed to win the favour of the Committee. Finally, the National Liberal members suggested to the Government 360,000 men as a sufficient number to hold under arms. The system of annual voting, and of two years' service, were, however, condemned by the Committee, and a scheme for strengthening the cadres was adopted. On these latter points the Government obtained signal victories.

In Monday's sitting of the German Parliament the House began the debate on the second reading of the Press Bill, the first five clauses of which were adopted as brought forward by the Committee.

ITALY.

The Senate and the Chamber of Deputies, on Monday, enthusiastically adopted a congratulatory address to the King, which is to be presented to his Majesty on the 23rd inst., the anniversary of his accession to the throne. The directions given by the Pope for the celebration by the Church of the jubilee of King Victor Emmanuel's twenty-five years' reign are that his Majesty, being by the grace of God King of Sardinia, Piedmont, and Liguria, and by regular treaties of cession King of Lombardy and Venetia, the jubilee is to be celebrated in all the churches of these provinces, and "Te Deums" are to be chanted. In the churches of the rest of Italy, where the King is considered by the Pope as a temporary, illegitimate master, no Church celebration of the jubilee is to take place.

Signor Minghetti has introduced his triple Budget into the Chamber of Deputies with the usual proviso that his retention of office depends on its acceptance. His estimated deficit for 1873 of 133,000,000 lire overshoot the mark by 35,000,000. In the current year he reckons on a deficit of 123,000,000—ten millions less than his preliminary estimate. For next year his preliminary estimates show a deficit of 79,000,000 lire. The Treasury balances are said to suffice for current requirements, and it is not proposed to issue more paper money.

A correspondent of the Standard telegraphs from Naples that the wall crater of Vesuvius has disappeared, and that there are no longer any eruptive phenomena.

AUSTRO-HUNGARY.

In the Lower House of the Austrian Reichsrath, on Monday, the first Ecclesiastical Bill was read the third time and passed without alteration; and on Wednesday the bill relating to the contributions which are to be made to Church funds from the property of benefices passed the second reading. An amendment was added, in virtue of which incomes set apart for the help of the sick are exempted.

The Pope has written a letter to the Bishops strongly condemning the bills, and declaring that their object is to bring the Church into subjection to the arbitrary power of the State. In a letter which the Pope has written to the Emperor, his Majesty is adjured to prevent the measures from becoming law.

In return, the reigning Duke of Brunswick recognises the town of Geneva as the universal legatee of Duke Charles. By this arrangement all lawsuits will be avoided.

THE INDIAN FAMINE.

The following telegram from the Viceroy, Calcutta, dated the 14th inst., addressed to the Secretary of State for India, has been received for publication:—"Official reports from Durbungh received, dated March 7, state that many of the lowest castes are suffering from actual famine. Three deaths from starvation had occurred, two being children in arms and one a man of sixty. Local arrangements for supply and distribution of food were imperfect. Sir G. Campbell is on the spot, and reports by telegraph to-day that arrangements are completing, but till further reports are received I shall feel much anxiety about Durbungh sub-division—population, 868,000. Arrangements in progress for assuring daily visitation of each village by a subordinate officer. In Mudhoobunee sub-division—population, 69,000—people are reported to be much straitened, and large numbers employed on relief works, but no cases of actual starvation. Sir G. Campbell has visited Seetamree sub-division—population, 718,000—and reports by telegraph that he is satisfied that famine is being met there. Large transport contract for supplying Northern and Western Tirhoot and Chumparun from Patna working very well. Contract for supplying Eastern Tirhoot from Barh is not working satisfactorily, but last accounts show decided improvement. Railway from Barh to Durbungh progressing rapidly. Reports from other districts satisfactory, especially from Bhaulpore. Wherever distress has arisen it has been relieved. No deaths have occurred. I hope and believe that partial failure in Eastern Tirhoot will speedily be remedied."

The Calcutta correspondent of the Times, in a telegram dated Sunday, says:—"Sir R. Temple finds Western Dinagore very bad. Government rice is now sold at 12lb. for a shilling. Transport is expeditious. Banda and Jahnsi are distressed."

A Reuter's telegram from Calcutta, dated Tuesday, gives a numerical estimate of the distress existing in the famine districts. At Tirhoot the applicants at the relief works have increased in ten days from 20,000 to 100,000, and in Rungpore they have multiplied to 400,000. The only deaths reported from actual starvation were in Tirhoot.

At the meeting of the executive committee of the Bengal Famine Relief Fund, held on Monday at the Mansion House, it was announced that upwards of £50,000 had been received, and it was decided to send £15,000, making £45,000 in all, to Mr. Schallch, the chairman of the Calcutta committee. The Lord Mayor said he had telegraphed to Mr. Schallch to the effect that the subscriptions would possibly be increased in England if the public knew how their money was being and would be spent, and had received from Mr. Schallch the following reply:—"The season of suffering will be from April to September. The Government undertakes to save life. Nevertheless, private charity is much required. The Government pays the cost of establishments and doubles private subscriptions. The whole funds are devoted to charitable relief. The labour and cooking tests are not insisted on. The Government is straining every effort, and private charity ought not to stand aloof." The Lord Mayor, after speaking of the steps taken at Salford, Bradford, Leeds, Glasgow, and other places to raise subscriptions, said that the Marquis of Salisbury, whom he saw last week, and who had contributed £500, had expressed hearty sympathy with the fund, believing that it would increase the good and kindly feelings now existing between the people of England and India. Mr. Disraeli had also sent them a handsome subscription, showing that he likewise sympathised with their efforts to relieve the distress. His Lordship added that Lord Salisbury feared that the famine would last until November next. Lord Lawrence said the information he had received from India agreed very much with that which had appeared in the newspapers. The distress was gradually extending and becoming more and more serious and grave.

A meeting was held in the Manchester Townhall, on Wednesday, to express sympathy with the sufferers by the famine in Bengal and to take measures for opening a subscription in aid of the Relief Fund. The meeting was called by the Mayor on a requisition presented to him by some of the citizens of Manchester, who were dissatisfied with the resolutions adopted at the meeting held a fortnight ago in the Mayor's Parlour. The Mayor (Mr. A. Watkin) presided, and among the speakers were Mr. Hugh Mason, Mr. Hugh Birley, M.P., and Mr. Jacob Bright. Mr. Hugh Mason, in moving that a subscription be opened, stated his conviction that the working men of Lancashire, who were grateful for what India had done during the cotton famine, were eager to join in the movement, and were only waiting for the signal. The resolution was unanimously adopted, and a committee was appointed to organise a subscription. About £2000 was subscribed during the meeting.

Mr. Lawrence Hall, a wealthy cotton-spinner, who owns extensive mills at Black-lane, one of the extremities of the town of Radcliffe, near Manchester, has offered £3000 towards the erection of an episcopal church for the locality, on condition that an additional £1000 be raised by the end of the present year. The Hon. Wilbraham Egerton, M.P., was on Tuesday elected chairman of the executive council of the Church Defence Institution, in the room of Mr. Cecil Raikes, M.P., who had resigned. The committee have also granted £355 towards building twenty-four school or mission churches; but in every case there has been much regret felt at the smallness of the sum voted, through the inadequacy of funds.

Mr. Edwards was placed in the first class by the mathematical moderators in 1871, and by the classical moderators in 1872. He also obtained a first class in the final mathematical school in Michaelmas Term, 1873. The Ireland Scholarship has been awarded to Mr. Henry Francis Tatum, Scholar of Balliol. The Vice-Chancellor's Court has had before it the case of Dr. Hayman, against whose notice of motion that the governing body of Rugby School, their servants and agents, should be restrained from dismissing the plaintiff from his office of head master, and from electing any person in his stead, a demurrer is put in by the defendants. The learned counsel having concluded their arguments on Thursday, the Vice-Chancellor said he could not, of course, decide such an important case at the time, and if it were not for the extraordinary circumstances attending it, he should desire considerably more time for consideration. However, the resolution to remove Dr. Hayman would take effect on April 7 next; and, as the Court of Chancery rose for Easter on Tuesday week, if the judgment was delayed it would be impossible for the parties to take the opinion of the Court above, if they so desired it. He should, therefore, deal with the matter to the best of his ability, and give judgment on Saturday (this day).

The Rev. Canon Espin, Chancellor of the diocese of Chester, and late Warden of Queen's College, Birmingham, has been presented with a cheque, address, and a drawing-room time-piece and vases for Mrs. Espin, by the Earl of Lichfield, on behalf of the past and present students of the institution, as a token of their appreciation of the manner in which he had for twenty years performed the duties of Professor of Pastoral Theology, and for eight years those of Warden of the college.

At a meeting of the Parliamentary committee elected by the Trades Union Congress, held on Tuesday, the following resolutions were unanimously adopted:—"That this committee deprecate the reference of the questions as to the Criminal Law Amendment Act, the Masters and Servants Act, the laws of conspiracy, and other questions relating to workmen, to a Royal Commission. Further, the committee is of opinion that the time has arrived for immediate legislation."

Sir Stafford Northcote received three fiscal deputations in succession on Wednesday. The first was from the Associated Chambers of Commerce, with reference to the repeal of the income tax. Having heard lengthy explanations from the Mayor of Hull and several Scotch delegates, the Chancellor of the Exchequer remarked that the speakers fought shy of a substitutionary tax. The whole question, he said, was being very carefully considered by the Government. Sir S. Northcote's second deputation was commissioned also by the Chambers of Commerce. It memorialised for a transfer of the cost of maintaining lighthouses, buoys, and beacons from local to Imperial funds. He undertook to communicate on the subject with Sir Charles Adderley. Inhabited house duty was the theme of the third deputation, introduced by Sir Charles Russell, and ably led by Mr. Alderman Lawrence. In reply, Sir Stafford Northcote admitted the cogency of the objections taken to the duty, but declined to answer off-hand on a question which had so many fiscal ramifications.

At a meeting of the Royal Humane Society, held on Tuesday, at the offices, Trafalgar-square—Mr. Hawes in the chair—several cases of saving life in various parts of the world were brought under the cognizance of the society and rewarded. A remarkable instance of courage and determination on the part of William Osborne, a boy twelve years of age, was rewarded by the presentation of the silver medallion of the society, which was unanimously voted by the committee. The circumstances were briefly these. Some lads were bathing near the flood-gates in King's Meadow, Chelmsford, when one of them, about fifteen years of age, who could not swim, got out of his depth in the flood-gate hole. Seeing his danger, a lad named Westrop went to his assistance; but the other threw his arms around him, and both were in imminent danger of being drowned, when Osborne ran to the spot, and dived in just as the two lads had sunk for the third time. Osborne himself was now in great danger in consequence of both lads convulsively clinging about him; but he succeeded in freeing himself from their grasp, and with great difficulty brought them to the surface and took one to land, the other being taken out of the water by a man who, hearing cries, had run to the spot. The society voted its bronze medallion to young Westrop, who had first gone to the assistance of the other boy. Some other rewards were voted for similar acts of gallantry.

THE ASHANTEE WAR: THE 42ND HIGHLANDERS IN THE FRONT.—FROM A SKETCH BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST.

THE ROYAL ENTRY INTO LONDON: THE PROCESSION PASSING DOWN REGENT-STREET.

PARLIAMENT.

The new Parliament met on Thursday for the dispatch of business, and was opened by Royal Commission.

The members of the House of Commons began to assemble shortly after one o'clock, and at about two o'clock, on the summons of the Black Rod, the Speaker, attended by a number of members, proceeded to the House of Lords.

The Lords Commissioners being in their places, the Lord Chancellor proceeded to read

THE ROYAL MESSAGE.

MY LORDS AND GENTLEMEN,—

I recur to your advice at the earliest period permitted by the arrangements consequent on the retirement of the late Administration.

My relations with all foreign Powers continue to be most friendly. I shall not fail to exercise the influence arising from these cordial relations for the maintenance of European peace, and the faithful observance of international obligations.

The marriage of my son, the Duke of Edinburgh, with the Grand Duchess Marie Alexandrovna of Russia, is at once a source of happiness to myself and a pledge of friendship between two great Empires.

The war with the King of Ashantee has terminated in the capture and destruction of his capital, and in negotiations which, I trust, may lead to a more satisfactory condition of affairs than has hitherto prevailed on the West Coast of Africa.

The courage, discipline, and endurance displayed by my forces, both of the land and sea service, together with the energy and skill evinced in the conduct of the expedition, have brilliantly maintained, under the most trying circumstances, the traditional reputation of the British arms.

I deeply regret that the drought of last summer has affected the most populous provinces of my Indian Empire, and has produced extreme scarcity, in some parts amounting to actual famine, over an area inhabited by many millions. I have directed the Governor-General of India to spare no cost in striving to mitigate this terrible calamity.

GENTLEMEN OF THE HOUSE OF COMMONS,—

The Estimates for the expenditure of the coming financial year will be forthwith submitted to you.

MY LORDS AND GENTLEMEN,—

The delay and expense attending the transfer of land in England have long been felt to be a reproach to our system of law, and a serious obstacle to dealings in real property. This subject has, in former Sessions, occupied the attention of Parliament, and I trust that the measures which will now be submitted for your consideration will be found calculated to remove much of the evil of which complaint has been made.

You will probably be of opinion that the rearrangement of the Judicature, and the blending of the administration of law and equity, which were effected for England by the enactment of last Session, ought, on the same principles, to be extended to Ireland, and you will be asked to devote some part of your time to the accomplishment of this object.

The greater part of these changes would be inapplicable to the tribunals of Scotland; but you will be invited, as to that part of my kingdom, to consider the most satisfactory mode of bringing the procedure upon appeals into harmony with recent legislation, and, among other measures relating to her special interests, a bill for amending the law relating to land rights and for facilitating the transfer of land will be laid before you.

Serious differences have arisen and remonstrances been made by large classes of the community as to the working of the recent Act of Parliament affecting the relationship of master and servant—the Act of 1871—which deals with offences connected with trade, and of the law of conspiracy, more especially as connected with these offences. On these subjects I am desirous that, before attempting any fresh legislation, you should be in possession of all material facts, and of the precise questions in controversy; and for this purpose I have issued a Royal Commission to inquire into the state and working of the present law, with a view to its early amendment if it should be found necessary.

A bill will be introduced dealing with such parts of the Acts regulating the sale of intoxicating liquors as have given rise to complaints which appear to deserve the interference of Parliament.

Your attention will also be directed to the laws affecting friendly and provident societies.

All these matters will require your grave consideration, and I pray that the Almighty may guide your deliberations for the welfare of my realm.

The Address in answer to the Royal Message was moved in the House of Lords by the Marquis of Lothian and seconded by the Earl of Cadogan; and in the House of Commons the Address was moved by Sir William Stirling Maxwell and seconded by Mr. Callender.

The House of Commons resumed at four, when the swearing-in of members was proceeded with. Mr. Gladstone entered the House at half-past four, and was cheered by the Opposition; and Mr. Disraeli, who entered the House at a quarter to five o'clock, was loudly cheered by his party. The Speaker read a long letter which he had received from the Lord Chief Justice of the Court of Queen's Bench notifying that Mr. Whalley, a member of the late House of Commons, had been committed for contempt of court and fined £250, a fine which was subsequently paid. On the motion of Mr. Hart Dyke, a new writ was ordered to be issued for North Lancashire, in the place of Colonel Wilson-Patten, now Baron Winmarleigh. A new writ was also ordered for the Falkirk Burghs, in the place of Mr. Ramsay, who at the time of his election was disqualified in consequence of holding shares in a Government contract.

Mr. McCullagh-Torrens urged the necessity of increased exertions to meet the famine in India, and concluded by moving, by way of amendment, a paragraph conveying to her Majesty the desire and assurance of this House to consider any measure calculated to mitigate the present distress of the people of India and to avert the calamity that threatens that part of our Empire.

Mr. Gladstone said he should be most willing to give his support to any action on the part of Parliament that would tend to alleviate the existing unfortunate state of things in India. He then referred to the recent marriage of the Duke of Edinburgh and the Imperial Princess of Russia as one of the most auspicious alliances that had ever been formed by a Royal family of England. Adverting to the Ashantee war, he congratulated the House and the country upon the successful termination of hostilities, which was at one time surrounded with difficulties of a most appalling and dangerous character. He then proceeded to justify his own conduct in advising her Majesty to dissolve Parliament, and, seeing the result of that measure, in resigning office. In taking that course he recognised the right of the country to be governed according to its expressed desires and wishes, and not according to the numerical Parliamentary majority which the Minister at the time might have possessed.

Mr. Disraeli then made a brief speech, in which he expressed his satisfaction at the unanimity that prevailed in respect to the Royal Speech and the Address.

Mr. McCullagh-Torrens having withdrawn his amendment, the Address was agreed to.

MR. GLADSTONE AND THE LIBERAL LEADERSHIP.

The usual circulars to the Liberal members of both Houses of Parliament reminding them of the opening of the Session for the dispatch of business on the 19th were issued. They were signed by Earl Granville and Mr. Gladstone. The following letter by Mr. Gladstone to the noble Earl has been published:—

11, Carlton House-terrace, March 12.

My dear Granville,—I have issued a circular to members of Parliament of the Liberal party on the occasion of the opening of Parliamentary business. But I feel it to be necessary that, while discharging this duty, I should explain what a circular could not convey with regard to my individual position at the present time. I need not apologise for addressing these explanations to you. Independently of other reasons for so troubling you, it is enough to observe that you have very long represented the Liberal party, and have also acted on behalf of the late Government, from its commencement to its close, in the House of Lords. For a variety of reasons personal to myself I could not contemplate any unlimited extension of active political service; and I am anxious that it should be clearly understood by those friends with whom I have acted in the direction of affairs that at my age I must reserve my entire freedom to divest myself of all the responsibilities of leadership at no distant time. The need of rest will prevent me from giving more than occasional attendance in the House of Commons during the present Session. I should be desirous, shortly before the commencement of the Session of 1875, to consider whether there would be advantage in my placing my services for a time at the disposal of the Liberal party, or whether I should then claim exemption from the duties I have hitherto discharged. If, however, there should be reasonable ground for believing that, instead of the course which I have sketched, it would be preferable, in the view of the party generally, for me to assume at once the place of an independent member, I should willingly adopt the latter alternative. But I shall retain all that desire which I have hitherto felt for the welfare of the party; and if the gentlemen composing it should think fit either to choose a leader or to make a provision ad interim, with a view to the convenience of the present year, the person designated would, of course, command from me any assistance which he might find occasion to seek and which it might be in my power to render.—Believe me, my dear Granville, always sincerely yours,

W. E. GLADSTONE.

THE RE-ELECTIONS.

Four unopposed re-elections consequent upon the appointment of the new Ministry took place yesterday week, namely:—Lord Sandon, Vice-President of the Council, was returned for Liverpool; Attorney-General for Huntingdon; Lord Henry Lennox, First Commissioner of Works, for Chichester; and Mr. Cave, Judge-Advocate-General, for Shoreham.

Six more members of the Government were re-elected, without opposition, on Saturday:—Sir Richard Baggallay, Solicitor-General, for Mid-Surrey; Mr. Selator-Booth, President of the Local Government Board, for North Hants; the Lord Advocate of Scotland, for the Universities of Glasgow and Aberdeen; Mr. Rowland Winn, one of the Lords of the Treasury, for North Lincolnshire; Sir James Elphinstone, also a Lord of the Treasury, for Portsmouth; and Mr. Gathorne Hardy, Secretary of State for War, for Oxford University.

The re-elections on Monday were the following:—Dr. Ball, Attorney-General for Ireland, for the University of Dublin; Sir Michael Hicks Beach, Chief Secretary for Ireland, for East Gloucestershire; Lord Henry Somerset, Controller of her Majesty's Household, for Monmouthshire; Sir C. B. Adderley, President of the Board of Trade, for North Staffordshire; Earl Percy, Treasurer of the Royal Household, for the northern division of Northumberland; Mr. Ward Hunt, First Lord of the Admiralty, for the northern division of Northamptonshire.

Mr. Disraeli, the Premier, was on Tuesday re-elected, without opposition, for Buckinghamshire, Mr. Tally having withdrawn; Sir Stafford Northcote, Chancellor of the Exchequer, for North Devon; and Mr. Donald Cameron, of Lochiel, for the county of Inverness, upon his appointment as a Groom in Waiting to the Queen. There was a contest at Eye, but Lord Barrington, Vice-Chamberlain of the Royal Household, was returned by a considerable majority over Mr. Easton, the Liberal candidate.

In Mr. Disraeli's address to the electors of Buckinghamshire asking for re-election on his appointment as First Lord of the Treasury the right hon. gentleman stated that, in forming a Ministry, he had recommended to the Queen "a body of gentlemen who will uphold the institutions of the country and defend the rights of every class of her Majesty's subjects."

Mr. A. Cross, Home Secretary, was on Wednesday re-elected, without opposition, for South-West Lancashire; and Sir Massey Lopes, Civil Lord of the Admiralty, for South Devon. The result of the Dublin county election on Wednesday was officially declared the next day. Colonel Taylor (Conservative) was re-elected by 2122 votes against 1161 given for Mr. Parnell (Home Ruler).

Viscount Mahon was on Thursday re-elected, unopposed, for East Suffolk.

The election for the city of Oxford, consequent upon the elevation of Mr. Cardwell to the Peerage, took place on Monday, when Mr. Hall, the Conservative candidate, polled 2534 votes; and Mr. Lewis, who stood in the Liberal interest, 2032. The majority for Mr. Hall was thus 462.

In the obituary notice of Captain Huyshe, published in our last Number, it was stated that Captain Huyshe was son of the late General Huyshe, C.B. This was a mistake, General Huyshe being, we are glad to learn, still alive.

Colonel Wilson-Patten's peerage was gazetted on Tuesday night. His title is Baron Winmarleigh, of Winmarleigh, in the county palatine of Lancaster. The Gazette also announces that Mr. John Smale, Chief Justice of the colony of Hong-Kong, has been knighted, and that the Right Hon. R. A. Cross has been appointed an Ecclesiastical Commissioner for England. The following colonial appointments are gazetted:—Sir William Grey, K.C.S.I., to be Governor of Jamaica; Mr. James Robert Longden, C.M.G., to be Governor of British Guiana; Mr. William Wellington Cairns, C.M.G., to be Governor of Trinidad; Mr. Francis Snowden, to be Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Hong-Kong; Mr. George Philippo to be Senior Puisne Judge, and Mr. Theodore Thomas Ford to be Junior Puisne Judge, of the Supreme Court of the Straits Settlements; and Mr. G. H. Barne to be Attorney-General for Jamaica.

NATIONAL SPORTS.

After all the open weather we have enjoyed this winter the management of the Croydon meeting were peculiarly unfortunate in being compelled to postpone their great race owing to the frost and snow. It was, however, brought off on Friday week, and, under the circumstances, proved a success, though the attendance was naturally smaller than on previous occasions. A field of nine contested the United Kingdom Steeplechase, to which £500 was added. Messenger (10 st. 12 lb.), General (11 st. 2 lb.), and Hautboy (11 st. 3 lb.) fell, and the issue was left to Montfort (11 st. 3 lb.) and Silvermere (11 st. 5 lb.), the former of whom won by a head, after a very punishing finish. The winner is a French horse, the property of Count S. Sauvour; and Mr. Brayley has had the unparalleled luck of running second with Silvermere for the chief event at Croydon no less than five times in the last three years. Defence (12 st. 7 lb.) ran exceedingly well under his heavy weight, as he finished only three lengths from the winner.

The Bristol Steeplechase meeting commenced on Tuesday last, but, as the Bristol Royal Steeplechase, to which, for the first time in the history of cross-country events, £1000 is added, has not been decided at the time of writing, we shall defer our remarks till next week.

The sale of the late Mr. Hilton's stud at Albert-gate, on Monday last, will always be memorable, from the fact that Sir Richard Sutton, of Lord Lyon celebrity, gave 2600 gu., the largest price ever paid for a brood mare, for Nemesis. We cannot help thinking that this sum is far more than she is worth, for she has produced nothing of any note except Vengereuse, and we doubt if even that speedy filly is of the same class as La Courneuse.

Lord Spencer has consented to resume his Mastership of the Pytchley Hounds, broken off for a time by his appointment to the Lord Lieutenancy of Ireland.

The Bothal Club Meeting, which is about the last important coursing fixture until next autumn, was brought off on Tuesday and Wednesday last, after two postponements on account of frost. Hares proved fairly plentiful, and some capital trials took place. The Longhirst and Bentinck Stakes each received their full complement of thirty-two, and were divided respectively between Vale Royal and Prodigal and British Flag and Dick Turpin. Gallant Poe, who, it will be remembered, recently won the Waterloo Plate, was put out by Conqueror in a most unlucky trial in the first round of the Bentinck Stakes; but her owner is reported to have refused £250 for her in the course of the meeting.

We fancy that the Oxford and Cambridge boat-race has not excited nearly so much interest as usual this year, which is probably owing to the fact that the success of the "light blues" is once more regarded as almost a certainty. The eight have now been at Putney for nearly a fortnight, and have given the greatest satisfaction to the legion of critics, amateur and professional, who day by day through the towing-path. They have done a fast trial over the course, and the only fear is that they may be a little over-trained by next Saturday. The Oxford men have had a series of misfortunes to contend against. For one reason or another, there has been a change in the members or seats of the crew nearly every day for the last fortnight, and for this reason they did not appear at Putney till Wednesday last. The impression produced by their first appearance on London water was far more favourable than had been anticipated. Their stroke, J. P. Way, is certainly a very light man for that important position; but there is a great deal of power behind him; and, should the crew go on well to the day, they may make a pretty good fight of it, though it is too much to anticipate their actual success. We append the names and weights of both:—

The inter-University sports will take place at Lillie Bridge on Thursday next, on the day following the competitions for the Marquis of Queensberry's cups for sparring and the bicycle championship. From the sports which have taken place at both Universities it is probable that most of the performances will not be so good as usual, though G. A. Templer and E. J. Davies are likely once more to do good service for Cambridge.

The Oxford University cue has fallen to E. A. Wanklyn, Christ Church, who showed great superiority to all his opponents, and won every game with consummate ease.

At five o'clock this (Saturday) afternoon the final heats in the great billiard tournament will be played at the Guildhall Tavern, Gresham-street. We shall comment fully on the play next week.

The Eastern Telegraph Company's direct Vigo Lisbon cable was repaired on Wednesday morning, thus restoring communication with Egypt, India, and the East.

Mr. H. M. Stanley, in a letter to the Daily News respecting the death of Dr. Livingstone, says that a copious record of his discoveries, extending over a period of six years, which Mr. Stanley brought to England in August, 1872, is safe in the hands of Miss Agnes Livingstone. This record begins from the day Dr. Livingstone left Zanzibar, in December, 1866, and extends to March 13, 1872. It embraces his discoveries from the mouth of the Rovuma River on the east coast of Africa to the Nyassa Lake, those made from the Nyassa Lake in the new lands west of Nyassa, in the districts of the Ma-Zitu, the Bobias, Bobemba, the Wa Marungu-Cazembe Rua, Manyema-Waguhah, up to Ujiji, where he arrived on Oct. 23, 1871. It also contains his discoveries made while he journeyed with Mr. Stanley from about the middle of November, 1871, to Feb. 16, 1872, when they arrived at Unyanyembe.

St. Patrick's Day (Tuesday) passed over quietly in the large towns of Ireland. The festival was celebrated by the Irish residents in London and elsewhere with the usual religious and patriotic observances.—The ninety-first anniversary of the Benevolent Society of St. Patrick was celebrated at Willis's Rooms, when about eighty gentlemen sat down to dinner. In the absence of the Marquis of Londonderry the chair was filled by the Earl of Courtown. In the course of the evening subscriptions were announced to the amount of £658, including a donation of 100 guineas from the Queen. In pursuance of annual custom, an excellent dinner was served to the children at the schools in the course of the day.—Archbishop Manning, in a pastoral on the observance of St. Patrick's Day, exhorted his people not to set foot in a public-house for three days. For each day's abstinence he promised them an indulgence of forty days. The charges of drunkenness and disorderly conduct at the police courts on Wednesday morning arising out of the celebration of St. Patrick's Day were much fewer in number than in former years.—A Home Rule Ball was given in Edinburgh, and there was also some oratory in relation to Irish political questions.

LAW AND POLICE.

Mr. Dickens, the foreman of the jury in the Tichborne trial, to remove an impression which he says is prevalent throughout the country, that the jury were remunerated at the rate of two guineas per day, sends to the Times a correspondence which has passed between the jury and the Lords of the Treasury. From this it appears that the Treasury decline to make any larger payment than the sum of 300 guineas to each jurymen, which "my Lords" do not think can be regarded as "an illiberal compensation for the time and labour bestowed."

The Benchers of Gray's Inn have resolved that it is incumbent upon them to institute an inquiry into Dr. Kenaly's conduct during the late Tichborne trial, and have appointed a committee to report upon the charges which, in their opinion, the learned counsel should be called upon to answer. As a sequel to this action of the Benchers of Gray's Inn, Mr. Whalley announces that he has a rod in pickle for Mr. Hawkins. It is his intention to lay a charge against the senior counsel for the prosecution before the Benchers of the Middle Temple.

The rank of Queen's Counsel has been conferred on Mr. E. H. Pember, Mr. G. P. Bidder, of the Parliamentary Bar; Mr. F. A. Philbrick, Mr. F. A. Inderwick, and Mr. P. C. Gates.

Mr. James Haslam, cattle-dealer, Bolton, brought an action, which was tried at the Manchester Assizes on Tuesday, against the Lancashire and Yorkshire Railway Company for damages for personal injuries which he sustained in a collision at Windor Bridge, Salford. The jury awarded him £1500.

Father O'Keeffe has reopened the campaign against the Bishop of Ossory. He now sues the Bishop for slander. The ground of action is a letter written by Dr. Moran to a member of Parliament saying that the nomination which Father O'Keeffe forwarded to the Board of Education was a forgery. Damages are laid at £6000.

James Brown, described as an eating-house keeper, of Sutton-street, Shadwell, was brought up on remand at Bow-street, last Saturday, charged with having committed perjury in the trial at bar of the Tichborne claimant. Mr. Poland, who conducted the prosecution on behalf of the Treasury, called several witnesses in support of the accusation against Brown. Amongst these was Captain Oates, who repeated the evidence which he gave in the Court of Queen's Bench on May 23 last, when he described the circumstances under which Roger Tichborne went on board the Bella at Rio, in April, 1854. Captain Robert Hoskins was also examined, and another remand was granted, the prisoner declaring that neither of these witnesses was alluded to by him in the testimony upon which the present charge is based.—On Thursday Brown was committed for trial, bail being accepted for his appearance, two sureties in £500 each.

For unlawfully acting as a cabdriver, Sir Capel Fitzgerald was, on Tuesday, fined 40s. by Mr. Newton, the Marlborough-street magistrate, and was advised to avoid such conduct.

In a case of milk adulteration which was before the magistrate at Southwark the person summoned said that he bought his milk of a man named Warner, and that Warner admitted that his wife watered the milk for "the half-penny customers." Mr. Benson thereupon adjourned the case, and ordered Warner to be summoned. Warner admitted the charge, and was fined 30s. and 12s. 6d. costs. The other man was fined 10s.

On Saturday, at Worship-street, a young man twenty years of age, described as the son of a gentleman, was convicted of cruelty to a cat. The magistrate sent him to prison for fourteen days, not giving him the alternative of paying a fine.

In a case of smuggling heard at the Southwark Police Court on Saturday a penalty of £100 was imposed, with the alternative of six months' imprisonment.

Gerald Maurice Burn, one of the boys who recently fought a duel at Lincoln, was tried, on Tuesday, at the Lincoln Assizes for shooting with intent to do grievous bodily harm. It was stated that the pistol which was used was one of those ordinarily sold at toyshops for sixpence, and had a cork with a string attached to it, and was meant to be used with caps, only as a pop-gun. The brother of Seagrave, the injured boy, said that before the duel took place he saw Burn making bullets in a mould. He had seen him use the pistol before, firing it at a post. He hit the post. He said (the witness added), as to my brother not accepting the challenge, that "he was a coward and showed a cowardly spirit." He said "He would give him another chance for his honour." In cross-examination, Seagrave said that in a duel which took place a week before the one in question the "gentleman who cleared his honour was ten years old. We had all been 'acting to be men.' We had a trial. A boy called Norris was judge. Burn was counsel. We tried a prisoner. He had refused to sell something and was tried for it. Burn was for the prosecution. Some one made a caricature of the judge and Burn stuck it up somewhere, and it was pulled down by Seagrave, and that was the cause of the quarrel." The jury returned a verdict of "Not guilty."

At the Bucks Assizes, yesterday week, Rebecca Lively was convicted of arson, and sentenced to five years' penal servitude.

CHAPPELL and CO.'S PEOPLE'S HARMONIUMS. Solid dark Oak Case, by Alexander. Five POPE GUINNEA. This Harmonium has been designed to meet the demand made for a small instrument of good quality of tone, at a price within the reach of all. By the aid of newly-invented machinery, Messrs. Alexander have been enabled to make this a marvel of cheapness, elegance, and good quality of tone. It will be found invaluable for small class-room, cottage, or library—ChapPELL and Co., 50, New Bond-street; and of all Music-sellers in the Kingdom.

ALEXANDRE'S SCHOOL HARMONIUM. In solid plain Oak Case, four octaves, 5 ga. Very strong and powerful in tone.—CHAPPELL and Co., 50, New Bond-street.

THE ALEXANDRE NEW SEVEN-GUINNEA ORGAN HARMONIUM. Solid Oak Case Five Octaves, and Two Footboards.

The ever-increasing musical culture in all classes of society has created a demand for free reed instruments of a superior quality to those hitherto manufactured.

The instruments now offered to the public will be found distinct from all that have hitherto been considered objectionable as regards tone. This has been obtained by using a larger and thicker tongue, and a new system of voicing, which render the quality rich and organ-like.

Another advantage in the new system is the increased strength of the reeds, and diminished liability to go out of tune by forcing the bellows.

The new system is applied to all the large instruments with still greater effect, and without extra cost.

ALEXANDRE'S TWELVE-GUINNEA ORGAN HARMONIUM. With two rows of keys, four feet and eight inches tall. Upper row 4 octaves from tenor; lower row, 8 octaves, 7 to 2. The combined keyboards have a compass of 4 octaves. Suitable for the practice of Organ Music. The cheapest double-row ever made.—CHAPPELL and Co., 50, New Bond-street.

ALEXANDRE'S NEW ORGAN MODEL. Two Rows of Keys: Knee-Pedal to Swells for upper row; five stops; four feet, eight inches tall, and six inches wide (sub-base), adapted for Church or Drawing-Room. THE ROYAL ENTRY INTO LONDON.

The state entry of her Majesty the Queen and their Royal Highnesses the Duke and Grand Duchess of Edinburgh into London on Thursday week is the subject of several of our illustrations. It was an event which all ranks and classes of her Majesty's liege people regarded with such affectionate interest as they have always felt in the domestic happiness of the Royal family, now increased by the welcome presence of an amiable and illustrious lady, the newly-married wife of our Sailor Prince.

The weather, let it be called English or Russian, was certainly not so agreeable, on that day of her reception in the metropolis, as on the preceding Saturday, a bright and balmy spring morning, when the young Duchess landed at Gravesend, with her husband, and travelled at once to Windsor. It was a rough, harsh, inclement wintry day. The Queen and her sons and daughters, before starting from home, had a foretaste of this day's bad weather in the snow falling heavily at Windsor. By ten o'clock the park and grounds about the Castle were covered with an inch of snow, and the route to the Great Western Railway station, though gaily decorated, looked the reverse of inviting. The town was embellished with flags, and the railway station was adorned with flowers and bunting. In the High-street most of the houses were decorated, balconies were draped, and flags and heraldic shields and flowers were exhibited everywhere. The Royal special train was ready at Windsor for the journey to Paddington; Messrs. Grierson, Higgins, Kirtley, and Robinson being in charge. The exterior of the Queen's room at the Windsor railway station was decorated with choice plants. Accommodation had been provided for the Eton boys to see the departure of the Royal party.

Her Majesty, the Duke and Duchess of Edinburgh, Prince Leopold, and Princess Beatrice, attended by Colonel Ponsonby, Lord A. Paget, and suite, left Windsor at eleven o'clock, with an escort of Scots Greys, driving in close carriages down High-street to the Great Western station, where the Royal party were received by a guard of honour of the first battalion Grenadier Guards, under Colonel Legh. The band of the Scots Greys was present. The Queen was met on the platform by Sir D. Gooch, M.P. (chairman), Mr. J. Grierson, Mr. S. Higgins, and Mr. Robinson. The Royal party passed over the carpet strewn with daisies and bouquets to the saloon, where a basket of roses, ferns, and other flowers had been placed by Lady Gooch. The band played a Russian air on their arrival. The Queen and Royal party left in a special train at 11.5 The train was drawn by the engine "Queen," gaily decorated with English and Russian colours, with the initials "A. M." in flowers on the top. Mr. H. Kirtley drove the engine.

The train containing the Royal party arrived at the Paddington terminus at twenty minutes to twelve. Throughout the route to Buckingham Palace no prettier scene could be found than its commencement at the railway station; and there was no heartier welcome than was given by the occupants of the crowded platform as the train drew up. It is not easy to make a bare, unsymmetrical building of iron and glass like the Great Western Railway station an object of attraction; but those who had carried out the decorations had gone as far in that direction as was possible. The train, consisting of narrow-gauge carriages, one being a new saloon-carriage, built especially for the use of her Majesty, was brought in the station so that the Royal saloon drew up right in the centre of the arrival platform. On each side of the open space across which her Majesty, the Duke and Duchess of Edinburgh,

CAPTAIN SARTORIUS, OF THE ASHANTES EXPEDITION.

Prince Leopold, and Princess Beatrice passed to their carriages in the covered roadway, were seats for about 600 people, on chairs and benches raised one above the other, and covered with red drapery. The platform along the length occupied by the train was covered with crimson cloth, the space between the stands being carpeted. The long arch covering the platform was a mass of bunting of all kinds, the centre being hung with flags of all nations, and the girders supporting the arch being almost hid with small groups of banners. At the intersection of the arches other rows of long flags and banners depended. A background to the road by which the carriages departed was formed by immense flags, which served to hide the wall of the station. There were branches of evergreens hanging from the pillars, and in baskets from the girders. The guard of honour was composed of the 6th Dragoon Guards (Carabiniers), who lined the roadway, and who presented arms as the Royal party alighted. Sir Daniel Gooch and Mr. Saunders were on the platform to receive the occupants of the train. They, amid loud cheers, entered the carriages with their suite, and in a few minutes left the station.

The Queen, with the Duke and Duchess and the other Royal personages, entered carriages at Paddington, and drove steadily down Edgware-road, Oxford-street, Regent-street, Waterloo-place, past Charing-cross, through the Horse Guards, along the Mall, to Buckingham Palace, the route being lined with troops.

There was a large concourse of people opposite the Great Western Hotel and Praed-street station and in the adjacent approaches, in spite of the weather, which had been as bad as could be well imagined during the early part of the morning. The streets in Paddington over which the procession would pass had been swept and scraped by groups of scavengers, and gravel put down to make them safe for the transit of the troops and carriages. The streets outside the station were kept by a few horse soldiers, and in London-street, the thoroughfare immediately opposite the station, each pavement was lined by Royal Engineers, backed by policemen. There was nothing noticeable in this part of the route in the way of decoration. A few of the shopkeepers had extemporised balconies in front of their houses, and some flags were extended across the streets. Nor did Oxford and Cambridge Terraces—the next part of the route leading from London-street to Edgware-road—put forth anything but a few decorations of the most ordinary and commonplace description. But everywhere were to be found numbers of people cheering lustily in spite of the snow which fell during the first part of the route. The gardens in front of the houses were, in most cases, filled with stands, many of them uncovered to the air. The road was kept at this part of the route by the 10th Foot, which corps extended down to Marylebone-road. It was at this junction with Edgware-road that the first of the noticeable decorations commenced. Venetian masts were placed at close intervals, coloured yellow and white, with cords suspended from the top of each containing little flags and banners. There were many mottoes placed on the drapery and amid the evergreens with which several of the houses were ornamented. Some of these were in Russian; most were in English, but all signified a cordial welcome to the Russian Duchess. At the corner of Hyde Park-terrace was one of the best decorated houses on the route. Between this and the Marble Arch were many other Venetian masts, some of the tallest imaginable, and from them across the road were strings of artificial flowers. The Marble Arch was reached by a quarter past twelve o'clock, and by this time the snow had ceased to fall. A great number of people were at this part, and even the top of the arch itself was crowded.

Oxford-street appeared to have expended a good deal of its enthusiasm in its decorative efforts. The open space of Regent-circus was thickly peopled, and the cheering tremendous. The establishments of Messrs. Jay and Madame Louise were splendidly adorned; but Regent-street seemed anxious to atone for its unfinished condition by its hearty reception of the Royal visitors, the windows being closely packed. Enthusiasm, however, may be said to have reached its climax when the Royal carriage came opposite No. 74, where a balcony filled with children decked in the colours of the two nations threw bouquets into the roadway, and from the windows of the house the same pretty and significant missives were sent in profusion. This appeared to please and slightly to surprise the fair young bride, who repeatedly smiled and bowed her acknowledgments.

A ray of sunshine burst forth as the cheering indicated the near approach of the cortège to Pall-mall, and the Royal carriage was stopped for a moment to the westward of the Crimean monument, to which the particular attention of the Duchess was called. The Guards' band, stationed to the east of the monument, struck up the National Anthem, which was followed by the Russian National Anthem, and the procession passed on amidst enthusiastic cheering. In front of the Nelson monument about 350 boys of the Duke of York's School were stationed with their band, and a large number of boys in naval uniform. During the progress down Charing-cross the enthusiasm was great and the cheering general. In front of the Admiralty a large number of bluejackets, armed with carbines and cutlasses, were stationed. Their duty in keeping the crowd within bounds was very light, but they saluted the Royal party, and their salute was graciously returned. The scene at the Horse Guards was very imposing, and the entrance to the Park being narrow, the crowds had an opportunity afforded them of staring at the Royal party, of which they did not fail to avail themselves. The cheering under the arch was echoed and re-echoed, and was taken up by the crowds who lined the road on each side of the carriage drive. At the Duke of York steps an immense assemblage had gathered, and expressions of loyal greeting were very hearty. A running volley of cheers accompanied the cortège to the gates of the palace, inside which 400 of the boys from the Chichester and other ships were stationed. At the gate itself the throng was very dense, and sent forth cheer upon cheer for some time after the Royal party were fairly within the palace. They kindly showed themselves for one moment at a balcony in front.

Besides the abundant street and house decorations for the display of that morning, there was, along the whole line of route, and especially in Regent-street and Pall-mall, an extensive preparation of devices for illumination, the full beauty of which was not apparent until the darkness of the evening had set in. Many of the devices of the clubhouses and public offices are those that were used on the evening of the marriage at St. Petersburg. There was a torchlight procession on the Thames Embankment, in which the medical students of the chief London hospitals bore the greatest part.

CAPTAIN SARTORIUS.

The exploit of this gallant officer was one of the closing acts of the late campaign in the land of the Ashantees. It was mentioned in Sir Garnet Wolseley's telegraphic despatches to our Government received last week. Captain Sartorius, with only an escort of twenty men detached from the force under the command of Captain Glover, R.N., east of Coomassie, marched to that city, and through its smoking ruins, without meeting an enemy. He joined Sir Garnet Wolseley at Fomannah on the 12th ult. It seems probable that the rumour of his bold approach, mistaken for that of Captain Glover's entire force, completed the intimidation of the enemy, already disheartened by Sir Garnet Wolseley's victories over them and by the destruction of their capital. We give a portrait of Captain Reginald Sartorius, of the 6th Bengal Cavalry. He is the second son of Sir George Rose Sartorius, K.C.B., Admiral of the Fleet. He went out to India as a cadet in January, 1858, and was shortly afterwards attached to the 13th Light Infantry, under Lord Mark Kerr. It was not long before he saw active service; for, on April 6 in the same year, he was at the siege of Azinghur. The company to which he belonged, which was commanded by Captain Jones, was in charge of baggage and ammunition, when it was ordered to the rear to help the rearguard, which was hotly attacked. At the very outset Captain Jones was shot dead, and Sartorius led on the company and dislodged the enemy, killing several with his own hand, and among them the man who had shot his Captain. After this he was entirely surrounded, when some cavalry came to his assistance. The Major in command, seeing the danger of the situation, was at a loss for means of communication with the Colonel, who was in front, attacking a strong village. Sartorius volunteered to carry any message if the Major would lend him his horse, his own horse having been shot. The Major did so, and Sartorius dashed through the enemy, who fired at him all the way along. One ball took off the top of his helmet, another stunned and bruised his ankle; but he succeeded in delivering his message to the Colonel, and returned with another company, with the assistance of which the baggage and ammunition were safely brought up, under a heavy fire. In a letter to Sir George Sartorius, Lord Mark Kerr spoke in most favourable terms of his son, especially commenting upon his coolness on the occasion of this daring feat. On the same day Sartorius volunteered to head a storming party against a number of rebels who were firing from a loopholed mosque; but this Lord Mark Kerr refused to sanction, as he considered it would be certain destruction. It was no small gratification to this young officer when, at the close of the battle, the Colonel publicly complimented him upon the courage and coolness he had shown throughout the day. Sartorius subsequently saw much fighting, the more important engagements at which he was present being as follow:—At Hurreah, Sept. 19, 1858; at Domeragunge, Nov. 28, 1858; at Tulsepoore, Dec. 26, 1858; and at Botwál, in April, 1859. His one great ambition from the commencement of his service has been to merit the decoration of the Victoria Cross, so highly prized by all, but bestowed upon so few. To this end he, later on, joined both the expeditions to Bhootan, where he again came in contact with the enemy. He also volunteered for the Abyssinian campaign, but was not successful in his application. His turn has come at last.

The Great Western Railway Company has presented the widow of the guard Hoskins, who was killed in the West Drayton collision, with £300.

Lord Leconfield has given £2500 to the sustentation fund of the Limerick diocese. This is only part of a sum of £20,000 which his Lordship has devoted to the Church of Ireland.

A testimonial, consisting of some valuable plate, with a purse of 100g., has been presented to Mr. Harris, who for thirty-seven years has been the steward of the Oxford Union.

COFFEE CALCALLEE'S UMBRELLA.

The Ashantee war has yielded a trophy of Sir Garnet Wolseley's victorious arms in the state umbrella of his Majesty King Coffee Calcallee. This article was brought to England, a fortnight ago, by Lieutenant the Hon. H. Wood, 10th Hussars, aide-de-camp to Sir Garnet Wolseley. It was presented to her Majesty the Queen by Lieutenant Wood, at Windsor Castle, on Tuesday week. An illustration of this characteristic ornamental appurtenance of Ashantee Royalty is here engraved. Our readers do not require to be told that the umbrella is not for use, to keep off rain or sunshine, though shelter against both is needful in a tropical clime; but that it is an emblem of pomp and dignity, held over the King's head on all ceremonial occasions. Its material is velvet, partly dark crimson, partly black, with gold trimmings. The size is about 7 ft. in diameter. The umbrella has a number of appendages, out of leather and cloth, with square and round knobs. These are fetish charms, to ensure the good luck of the Royal owner. A lion's claw, fastened to the ribs of the umbrella, inside and outside, is likewise a kind of charm or talisman. The umbrella was taken at Coomassie on Feb. 4, when our troops entered that city.

MUSIC.

THE OPERA SEASON.

The event of the week has been the opening of Her Majesty's Opera on Tuesday, when "Semiramide" was given, cast as on previous occasions at the same establishment. Again the fine declamation of Mdlle. Titiens (as Semiramide), the exquisite voice and polished style of Madame Trebelli-Bettini (as Arsace), and the florid vocalisation of Signor Agnesi (as Assur) were the prominent features of the performance; other characters having been efficiently represented (as heretofore) by Signori Rinaldini, Campobello, and Casaboni. The principal singers and Sir Michael Costa, the conductor, were warmly greeted by the audience. Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales and the Duke and Duchess of Edinburgh attended the performance of the opera, which is to be repeated this evening. Of Mr. Mapleson's arrangements and engagements for the season just commenced we gave an outline a fortnight ago. The first fulfilment of his promises was to take place on Thursday, when Mdlle. Lodi's debut was announced as Amina in "La Sonnambula."

A fortnight hence we shall have to speak of the commencement of Mr. Gye's new season of the Royal Italian Opera, which will open on Tuesday week.

The Crystal Palace concert of Saturday last included a performance of Schubert's elaborate and beautiful ottet for solo string and wind instruments, the parts for the former executed by all the orchestral players of that class and the wind instruments occasionally doubled, in the same manner as that which has more than once been adopted at these concerts in the performance of Beethoven's septet, the practice having originated many years ago at the Paris Conservatoire. The admirable skill of the executants is thus put to an extreme test, but the work necessarily loses much of its intended grace and delicacy with so large an extension of the score beyond the composer's design. In Saturday's performance the work was curtailed by the omission of the andante, with variations, and the minuet and trio, it being even then of the full ordinary dimensions of an orchestral symphony. Miss Anna Williams sang, with much effect, Mendelssohn's elaborate concert-aria, "Infelice;" Miss Sterling gave, with fine expression, two German lieder—one by Rubinstein, the other by Liszt; and Mr. W. Castle displayed his agreeable quality of voice and smooth cantabile in the air, from "St. Paul," "Be thou faithful" (with violoncello obbligato by Mr. Reed). Other pieces by these singers, Weber's overture to "Euryanthe," and that by Sir W. Sterndale Bennett, entitled "The Wood Nymph," completed the selection.

The fourth concert of the British Orchestral Society, on Thursday week, included performances of Mendelssohn's "Scotch" symphony, Spohr's "Dramatic" concerto (finely played by our excellent violinist, Mr. Carrodus), Mozart's overture to "Die Zauberflöte," that to Mr. G. A. Macfarren's oratorio "St. John the Baptist," and a new manuscript concert-overture, by Mr. Gadsby, entitled "The Witches' Frolic"—a spirited piece of orchestral writing, which was very favourably received. Vocal pieces were contributed by Miss Georgina Maudsley and Mr. Bentham; and Mr. Mount conducted, as usual. At the fifth concert (and last but one of the second season), on Thursday next, a new symphony by Mr. G. A. Macfarren is to be performed for the first time.

The fifth concert of the second season of the Wagner Society took place yesterday (Friday) week, when the selection from the composer's stage works consisted of the chorus of the Me-sengers of Peace ("Rienzi"), the overture and choral song "Wachet auf" (Die Meistersinger von Nürnberg), Lohengrin's arrival and Farewell to the Swan, Prayer before the combat, and Lohengrin's victory ("Lohengrin"). The opera first drawn from is Wagner's earliest dramatic production of any magnitude, and is now scarcely recognised by him. Its somewhat feeble eclecticism stands in remarkable contrast to the strong individuality and marked power of his subsequent operas, the music selected from which derived increased effect at the concert referred to by comparison with the commencing piece of the series. The chorale and the scene of Lohengrin's arrival were encored. The tenor solo of Lohengrin was sung by Mr. Lane, he and Madame Corani having rendered the incidental passages in the extract from "Rienzi." The concert began with Beethoven's overture to "King Stephen," which was followed by the same composer's choral fantasia, with Mr. Walter Bache's skilful execution of the pianoforte part; and this preliminary portion of the programme was completed by two lieder by Liszt and Rubinstein, which were finely sung by Miss Sterling, these selections from Wagner's operas having been preceded by his "Huldigungs Marsch," composed in celebration of the accession of the present King of Bavaria to the throne. Besides the singers mentioned, Miss Helene Arnim and Messrs. Devon, Ainsworth, and Wharton aided in the concerted music.

Herr Joachim's unrivalled playing, as leading and solo violinist, continues to be a prominent attraction at the Monday Popular Concerts. This week he was heard in the great (posthumous) quartet of Beethoven (op. 131) in B flat, the thirteenth in the grand series of these works; in Haydn's in D (from op. 64), and in a sonata of Tartini. Mr. Dannreuther made his second appearance here this season, and gave a fine reading of Beethoven's solo pianoforte sonata in A flat (op. 110). Miss Edith Wynne was the vocalist, and Sir Julius Benedict conducted.

St. Patrick's Day was celebrated musically by Irish ballad concerts (morning and evening) at St. James's Hall.

The last London Ballad Concert of the season took place on Wednesday evening, with a programme of the usual varied and popular character; and on the same evening Mr. Coenen gave the third (and last) of his chamber concerts, the programme of which comprised a string quartet by Gernsheim, a sonata for piano and violin by Bargiel, and Rubinstein's quintet for pianoforte, flute, clarinet, horn, and bassoon.

Of the first performance in London of Mr. Arthur Sullivan's oratorio, "The Light of the World" (by the Royal Albert Hall Choral Society, on Thursday), and of Mr. G. A. Macfarren's "St. John the Baptist" (by the Sacred Harmonic Society, on the following evening), we must speak next week.

The second private concert of the Royal Albert Hall Amateur Orchestral Society (twice postponed) is to take place this (Saturday) evening, when the selection of music will include Beethoven's first symphony, his overture to "Prometheus," Nicolai's to "The Merry Wives of Windsor," and Auber's to "Les Diamans de la Couronne," besides other pieces, instrumental and vocal.

Next week's music will include the commencement (on Wednesday evening) of the sixty-second season of the Philharmonic Society.

This year's musical festivals—the Handel celebration at the Crystal Palace and the meeting of the three choirs of Hereford, Worcester, and Gloucester at the last-named place—both recurring in their regular triennial order—are to be supplemented by a festival at Leeds, which it has just been decided to hold in the ensuing autumn.

THEATRES.

THE QUEEN'S.

Mr. Charles Reade has produced a new and original pastoral drama, which on the score of merit demands a special notice. It is in two acts, and is called "Rachel the Reaper." The piece is as simple as if it were an idyll by Geiser, and quite as pathetic. The tone of the dialogue is throughout chaste, but eloquent with feeling and moral sentiment. The scene represents the exterior of a farm in Berkshire, owned by Old Hawthorn (Mr. S. Artaud). It is harvest-time, and the reapers have been materially helped by the labours of a venerable corporal, eighty years of age, named Patrick (Mr. T. Mead), who was present at the battle of Waterloo, and his grand-daughter, Rachel (Miss Rose Evans). This young lady is the heroine of the piece, and has been wronged by Richard Hickman (a bigamist), who has traced her to the farm, and seeks to ruin her character; but his villainy is exposed, and Rachel at last finds a good husband in Robert Hawthorn, the farmer's son (Mr. C. Kelly). This is the whole of the plot, but it is sufficient to furnish many striking situations, and afford room for much characteristic portraiture. Among the latter is that of the widow Mayfield (Miss Bessie Edwards), who would fain marry again with young Hawthorn, and is compelled to be content with another, who, nevertheless, will make her a good husband. Prominent among these characters is the grand old Corporal of Mr. T. Mead, who, thrown into a reverie by the excess of passion, personates the Duke of Wellington, and shouts the famous command of "Up, boys, and at them!" Rachel is most gracefully as well as forcibly sustained by Miss Evans; and Miss Edwards gives full and clever expression to the various moods and humours of the capricious and coquettish widow. This last character redounds to the credit of Mr. Reade as a distinct and powerful portrait, which none but a skilled dramatist could have painted. We have no doubt that this little drama will take a firm hold of the boards, and render still more acceptable the larger venture of "The Wandering Heir."

THE COURT.

A new drama has been produced here, entitled "Ready-Money Mortiboy," a story adapted by Messrs. Walter Maurice and James Rice, with considerable skill. It is in four acts. Mr. Clifford Cooper sustains the part of old Mortiboy; the miser, who, in the beginning of the play, is visited by his son, Dick Mortiboy (Mr. G. Rignold), returned from his travels. The profligate youth had been twelve years absent, but now pretends that he is wealthy, and thus extorts a welcome from his selfish parent. He has a partner in his frauds, Alcide Lafleur (Mr. E. Bruce). But old Mortiboy has a servant, Polly Treaser, who recognises Dick as her husband, but is induced by him to keep silent. Alcide, however, grows impatient, and Dick consents that the villain shall rob his father. Meantime, in order to evade the legacy duty, the latter makes a deed of gift to his son, such confidence had he inspired. Dick is now disposed to desert Polly, and open a new account of love with Grace Heathcote, a young lady who, with her mother, is interested in his wealth. Besides, a private-inquiry agent had discovered that Polly was previously married. Dick, however, is refused by Grace, and has to surrender her to a Frank Mellichamp (Mr. H. Crosse). He then encounters Alcide Lafleur, who shoots him in the back. This conclusion is scarcely satisfactory, and of the other incidents much that is favourable can scarcely be predicated; but the acting is throughout good. The piece is capably mounted, with scenery by Mr. Walter Hann.

ROYAL INSTITUTION LECTURES.

DEVELOPMENT OF DIATOMS, ALGÆ, AND LICHENS.

Professor W. C. Williamson, F.R.S., began his third lecture on Cryptogamic Vegetation, on Thursday week, by describing the structure of the diatomaceæ, a family of microscopic plants found in fresh and salt water, the cells of which (termed frustules) have walls containing silica. The surfaces of these cell-walls, of various shapes, exhibit beautiful minute markings, each species having its own, within the space of the two-hundredth of an inch, thus affording most interesting objects for the microscope. The cell contains protoplasm of various colours, some of which is said to contain iron. The Professor stated that he had no doubt of the diatoms belonging to the vegetable kingdom, although the cause of their very interesting varied movements is at present unknown. He then entered upon the consideration of the algae, a class which includes the seaweeds and various forms of simple cellular structure met with abundantly in ditches, ponds, and other accumulations of water. After describing how some of these fresh-water forms may be obtained from the green slime of ponds, and alluding to their beautiful appearance under the microscope, the Professor dilated on the great variety and beauty of the sea-weeds, and the marked peculiarities of their organisation and reproduction. The latter part of the lecture was devoted to lichens, so well known as dry incrusting bodies growing upon the bark of trees, stones, or other bodies, and abounding on rocks and in mountainous districts. Their various shades of colour are well exhibited by the lichen geographicus, so named from its resemblance to a map. In the simplest kind of lichens the frond consists of microscopic branched filaments, which present globular cells (gonidia) filled with green matter, analogous to the buds of flowering plants. The interesting manner in which lichens are multiplied was fully described and elucidated by diagrams. Lichens are specially distinguished by the shape of the case, which protects their pores during winter, the germs retaining their vitality till they obtain conditions favourable to vegetation. The Professor finally described the sporangium, the thick walled structure immediately inclosing the spores of the Cryptogamia. It contains small round cells, with spirals closely packed. When warmth comes the cells expand, the spirals are lengthened, the walls burst, and the seed is scattered abroad. Though millions are thus dispersed, the Professor said that there is no ground for believing that the number of plants is greater now than it was at the beginning of the world.

CHEMISTRY OF SMELTING IRON IN BLAST-FURNACES.

Dr. C. R. Alder-Wright, Lecturer on Chemistry in St. Mary's Hospital Medical School, at the Friday evening meeting on the 13th inst., after briefly describing the general construction of the blast-furnace, stated that the chemical changes taking place in the body of the furnace are far from being so simple as is usually supposed. The ordinary explanation is that the carbon oxide formed by the burning of the fuel at the tuyere acts on the oxide of iron, taking away its oxygen and forming carbon dioxide (carbonic acid). But this simple change is complicated by several others, five different sets of reactions actually taking place simultaneously—viz., A, reactions whereby the higher oxides of iron are reduced successively to lower oxides and to metal by means of carbon oxide, which is itself oxidised to carbon dioxide; B, reactions the converse of A, whereby metallic iron and its lower oxides are oxidised by the action of carbon dioxide, which is itself reduced to carbon oxide; C, reactions whereby iron and lower oxides act on carbon oxide, forming higher oxides of iron and setting free carbon; D, reactions whereby the carbon thus deposited by actions C reacts on higher oxides of iron, forming successively lower oxides and metallic iron, the carbon itself being oxidised to carbon dioxide; E, a reaction whereby the carbon dioxide formed in some of the previous reactions reacts on carbon, both being converted into carbon oxide. Dr. Wright fully described and illustrated by experiments each of these classes of reactions, and referred to recent researches of Mr. I. Lowthian Bell, M.P. (with whom he had co-operated in the inquiry), on various points connected with the subject. He also commented on some general principles of chemical dynamics involved in these reactions, especially noticing the action of hydrogen on oxide of iron forming steam and metallic iron, and the action of steam on metallic iron forming oxide of iron and setting free hydrogen. As the heat produced by the union of a given quantity of oxygen with iron, hydrogen, and carbonic oxide is nearly the same at 500 degrees, there is only a minute amount of heat evolution or heat absorption in each of these four cases, which thus constitute two pairs of inverse reactions. The nitrogen of the blast under certain circumstances exerts an important influence on the iron-smelting process. When the materials employed in the furnace contain potassium and sodium, the cyanides of these metals are formed in the hottest part of the furnace. These cyanides reduce the last portions of the oxide of iron to metal, becoming themselves converted into cyanates, which are apparently split up by the high prevailing temperature evolving nitrogen. These changes afford an explanation of an apparently abnormal constitution of the gases of the furnace in the lower parts, as compared with that at higher levels. The production of cyanides was illustrated by means of a small model blast furnace fed with charcoal containing potassium carbonate. Dr. Wright stated that the alkali-metal compounds which have done duty once in the form of cyanides are carried up mechanically by the gases, and to a certain extent deposited as a kind of sublimate on the materials in the upper part of the furnace. They are thus brought down again, and used over again. In this way the total amount of alkali-metals present in the furnace often becomes very large, sometimes as great as one quarter of the pig iron made, through the small amounts brought in daily accumulating. The actions in the furnace are of such a character that it is impossible to convert more than about one third of the carbon used as fuel into carbon dioxide, the rest necessarily escaping as carbonic oxide. It thus results that the blast furnace is a very wasteful instrument, inasmuch as far more fuel is required to smelt iron in consequence of this circumstance than would be requisite in a more perfect arrangement, where all the fuel could be burnt to carbon dioxide. Sir Frederick Pollock, Bart., was in the chair.

POLITICAL HISTORY OF EPHEBUS.

Mr. Charles T. Newton, M.A., Keeper of Greek and Roman Antiquities in the British Museum, gave the first of a course of three lectures, on Mr. Wood's Discoveries at Ephesus, on Saturday last. He began by reminding his audience that the Temple of Diana at Ephesus was one of the seven wonders of the ancient world, of which wonders the only other extant relics are the Pyramids and the remains of the Mausoleum. Ephesus was a city of peculiar historical interest, as having been the first place where the preaching of Christianity met with strong opposition from Paganism, and having been very important under the Roman Empire, and, for centuries before, originally one of the twelve States of the Ionian Confederacy. After explaining the topography of Ephesus, by means of a map showing the positions of Mount Pion and Corossus, the Temple of Diana, the fortifications, and the principal buildings of the city, Mr. Newton stated that the reputed founder of the Greek colony of Ephesus was Androklos, one of the sons of Codrus, the last King of Athens, and the date of his landing B.C. 1044. According to local tradition, the worship of Artemis or Diana was much earlier, as she was an Asiatic, not a Greek, deity; and all through history her priests had Asiatic rather than Hellenic sympathies, siding with the Lydian and Persian dynasties in succession. The colony grew by accession of emigrants, till checked by the development of the power of the Lydian monarchs, whose policy it was to attack the Ionian cities one by one. Croesus nearly took Ephesus, but the city was saved by being attached by a rope to the Temple of Diana—in other words, by being solemnly dedicated to the goddess. Croesus modified the constitution, but was all the time on friendly relations with the priests; and, according to Herodotus, he dedicated most of the columns and golden bulls in the temple. After being conquered by Cyrus, Ephesus joined the other Ionian cities in the revolt against Darius, but soon submitted; and was on such good terms with the Persians that Xerxes left his children there after his expedition to Greece. The city paid tribute to Athens during its supremacy, but afterwards went over to Sparta; and Lysander took up his quarters there, finding much barbarism, due to Persian influence. From this time till the invasion of Alexander the Great, Ephesus sided with the Spartans and Athenians as they severally prevailed. Lysimachus made great political changes, forcing the Ephesians to leave the vicinity of the temple where they had dwelt since the time of Croesus, and he concentrated them within larger lines of fortifications, giving the new city the name of his wife, Arsinoë. Ephesus successively passed into the possession of the Ptolemies and the Seleucids, and, after the defeat of Antiochus the Great by the Romans, was by them given to the kings of Pergamus. At the death of the last of these, Attalus III., it became the capital of the Roman province of Asia, and, under the Emperors, had the proud title of "the metropolis and first city of Asia." Ephesus was destroyed, and the temple sacked and plundered, by the Goths, A.D. 262. With this event the ancient history of the city, extending over 1300 years, may be considered to close. It was rebuilt by the Emperor Justinian, and remained part of the Byzantine empire till taken by the Seljukian Turks, one of whom, Saroukhan, reigned as Emir at Magnesia at the beginning of the fourteenth century. In the course of Mr. Wood's excavations a large treasure of Saroukhan's coins and those of contemporary Latin States was discovered at Ephesus. The place was afterwards taken by the Turks, and Sultan Selim built a fine mosque; but at the end of the seventeenth century the town had utterly decayed, a few miserable hovels at the village of Aiasoluh being all that marked this celebrated site. The next lecture will be devoted to the history of the temple and worship of Diana.

PRESSURE AND ELASTICITY OF AIR.

Professor Tyndall, D.C.L., F.R.S., began his fifth lecture, on Tuesday last, by observing that a scientific principle stored within the mind is like a key which unlocks innumerable doors; and so a thousand facts can be referred to the simple principle that the air possesses weight and that the atmosphere exerts pressure. Supposing a barometric tube to be a square inch in area, and the mercury standing in it at thirty inches, thirty cubic metres of mercury would be supported. As two cubic inches of mercury weigh one pound, thirty would weigh fifteen pounds. A pressure of fifteen pounds on every square inch is therefore exerted by the atmosphere, and this amount of pressure is technically termed "an atmosphere." This was illustrated by a series of experiments, clearly proving that the column of mercury rises when the atmospheric pressure is increased and falls when the pressure is diminished. The principle of the "Cartesian diver" was also explained. The Professor then proceeded to the consideration of what Robert Boyle termed "the spring of the air," referring especially to the illustrious philosopher's "New Experiments, Physico-mechanical," forty-three in number, made with a pneumatic engine, which showed him to possess perfectly distinct notions as to the condition of the lower strata of the atmosphere. He saw them clearly pressed upon by the upper strata, and he compared the air particles to corpuscular springs, which offer a certain resistance to compression, and which cause the air to expand when it is relieved from pressure. He also made numerous observations on the variation in the height of the mercurial column, and on the influence of pressure on the boiling-point of liquids; and on Dec. 20, 1659, he proved, placing his watch in the receiver of his air-pump, that sound cannot pass through the vacuum, thus anticipating the discovery commonly attributed to Hawksbee (in 1705). After making some important experiments upon animals, Boyle expressed his gratitude to his Creator for having made the air so admirably subservient to animal life and enjoyment. Professor Tyndall then showed how Boyle's law is verified by Mariotte's tube, and referred to tables setting forth the results of Boyle's investigations. The practical applications of compressed air which were exhibited and explained included the air-gun, the pump, the fire-engine, and the hydraulic ram, illustrated by diagrams and models. The Professor also noticed a large sensitive barometer, constructed by Mr. Jordan, in which water is replaced by a liquid less subject to evaporation.

On Friday evening next the discourse will be given by Professor A. Ramsay, F.R.S., Director of the Geological Survey of Great Britain, on the Physical History of the Rhine.

Major-General Vaughan delivered an address at the Royal United Service Institution, yesterday week, on the Retreat of the Ten Thousand—a Military Study for all Time. The lecturer traced the retreat of Xenophon from point to point, and maintained that the real lesson which was to be learnt from it was that, if soldiers would only be true to themselves, they might hope to emerge victorious from every trial.

At a special court of Common Council, held at Guildhall on Monday, a resolution was passed, in accordance with the report of a special committee, recommending that a piece of plate of the value of 3000 guineas be presented by the Corporation to the Duke and Duchess of Edinburgh. At a meeting of the Metropolitan Board of Works, yesterday week, an address of congratulation was voted to her Majesty on the occasion of the Duke of Edinburgh's marriage. It was also resolved that an address to the Duke and Duchess should be presented.

At the annual meeting of the Associated Chambers of Commerce, on Tuesday, it was stated that there are now forty-nine chambers in affiliation. In the report allusion was made to the principal commercial events of the year—the Plimsoll commission and the negotiations relative to the French treaty. It was resolved that the subject of the bankruptcy laws be referred to a select committee, and that the Government be memorialised to initiate an inquiry into the working of the Bank Charter Act, either by Royal Commission or by a Select Committee of the House of Commons. A motion in favour of repealing the income tax was also adopted.

CURIOUS WILLS.

WILL OF MAJOR-GENERAL CLAUDE MARTIN, OF THE BENGA CIVIL SERVICE: DIED 1800.

(Contributed by the Author of "Flemish Interiors," &c.)

One of the most singular wills on record is, perhaps, that of Major-General Claude Martin, of the Bengal Civil Service, who was born at Lyons, in January, 1735, and whose life offers a series of contingencies of so fortunate a character that, although he came into the world as the son of a cooper, he died distinguished by high military rank, in a palace (Constantia House) he had himself built on the banks of the Goumtie, and possessor of a fortune of ten or twelve millions.

Claude Martin left his native place at an early age and went to India, where he entered the army as a private soldier—first in the French ranks, and afterwards, by the course of events, passed into the Company's service. After a number of adventures he attained the grade of Major-General, and died on Sept. 10, 1800.

His will is not only, as we have said, singular, but it is a very scarce document, only a few copies having been struck off for collectors, in the year 1803, at Lyons, where the original is deposited, the testator having bequeathed to that city a legacy of 250,000 sicca-rupees, or about £31,250. It was written in English—very illiterate English; but, having to be administered in France, it was rendered into French by the authorised legal translators, MM. Martinet and Stephano. The English stands on one side of the page, the French version on the other, and, as in the original, several words, and even whole lines, are written in pencil, these have been printed in red. The whole forms a thin quarto volume, and is entitled THE LAST WILL AND TESTAMENT OF MAJOR-GENERAL CL. MARTIN. There are 155 pages, eighty-three of these being occupied with the preliminary clauses of the will, and seventy-two with the tables detailing the description of the property and the sums constituting the fortune of the testator.

The preamble is extremely original in its compilation, and contains a great deal of rambling religious belief of a very heterodox character, though the testator admits he was born a Catholic, and had never formally abandoned this faith or assumed or any other, though he allows that he has "not been very strict in conforming to the various ceremonies and ordinances it prescribes."

Article 1 is very lengthy, and relates to his domestics, male and female, to whom he gives their liberty, with the exception of a certain number specially named as recipients of certain legacies, but who are to continue slaves in the service and during the lives of five women, respectively named Boulonne or Lisa, Sally, Maria (surnamed Barkebibe), and Kariman. To these, by other special clauses, he leaves specified sums of money; as also to a girl named Pana, to another named Gomany, and to a third named Animam. From the terms in which he speaks of all his domestics, we infer that his treatment of them was humane and considerate in the extreme.

This article, which is very prolix, is followed by thirty-three others, nineteen of which consist of minute directions as to legacies left to these and other female slaves, for whom he provides most liberally.

By article 20 he leaves 40,000 sicca-rupees to his uncle, Louis Martin, and a similar sum to another uncle, named Peter. To his three aunts he leaves 30,000 sicca rupees each, without any deduction, and smaller legacies to several more distant relatives.

Art. 21 relates to the disposition of his jewels and pieces of stuff of various descriptions and values.

Art. 22 contains a most curious exposition of his religious sentiments, which appear to have been altogether idiosyncratic. Unfortunately, it is too verbose to admit of quotation.

Art. 23 deals with the sum of 150,000 rupees to be distributed to the poor in various parts of India.

Art. 24 appropriates the sum of 200,000 sicca-rupees to the foundation of a school in Calcutta; and

Art. 25 disposes of a similar sum for the establishment of a school at Lyons, both to be called LA MARTINIERE, and to bear over the principal entrance an inscription as follows:—"Instituted by Major-General Martin, born January, 1735, at Lyons, who died the . . . of . . . and was buried at . . ."

To this he adds the sum of 250,000 sicca-rupees, to be invested so that the interest may supply a certain number of dowries to form the marriage portion, each year, of the best-conducted of the girls.

He gives 4000 sicca-rupees for the liberation of prisoners detained for debt in Calcutta, and 40,000 for the same purpose at Lyons.

Art. 26 contains some supplementary directions to one or two of the preceding, and mentions additional bequests of large amount to before-named legatees.

Art. 27 indicates such of his landed and house property as is to be sold.

Art. 28 gives 5000 sicca-rupees to the magistrates of Calcutta to pay the debts of poor soldiers, and 1000 rupees for the liberation of prisoners for debt.

Art. 29 specifies several widows to whom pensions are to be accorded.

Art. 30. "When I die I require that my body shall be salted, soaked in spirits of wine, or embalmed; afterwards it shall be deposited in a lead coffin, made from sheets of lead from my godown. This lead coffin to be inclosed in an outer coffin of sissoc-wood of two inches thick, and deposited in the vault of my house at Lackpara, called Constantia. The tomb to be raised two feet from the ground, covered with a marble slab inscribed with my name, and a dome to be built over it—MAJOR-GENERAL MARTIN, born at Lyons, January, 1735; arrived in India as soldier in the ranks, and died at . . ., &c. Pray for his soul."

Art. 31 gives minute directions as to the construction of his monument, and the sums to be expended on it.

Art. 33 orders the conversion of his house at Lackpara into a college for the instruction of the English language and the Christian religion; also for giving hospitality to strangers visiting Lucknow, but who are not to remain more than two months at a time.

Art. 34 appoints executors, and names large legacies to them, with a few additional pensions; sums up the whole amount disposed of as reaching the incredibly large sum of 330,680,000 rupees; and even after that mentions a possible surplus of £100,000, of which he directs the disposal in various charities.

A meeting of the council of the College of Preceptors was held on Saturday last, when the diploma of licentiate was presented to Miss M. C. Boyle, and that of associate to Miss A. M. Boyce.

Lord Salisbury had an agreeable reply for the deputation of the Manchester Chamber of Commerce, which waited upon him last Saturday, to advocate the introduction of commercial men into the Council of India. His Lordship not only acknowledged that the proposition was right in the abstract, but promised his best endeavour to satisfy the wish of the deputation.

THE FAMINE IN BENGAL: GRAIN-BOATS ON THE GANGES.

THE FAMINE IN BENGAL.

Our Illustration of native boats with grain on the Ganges has a certain interest connected with the present deplorable state of that populous country. The Ganges reaches the sea, like the Nile, by a number of mouths, and, flowing through Bengal, it will give a means of sending relief to many parts of the district by means of these boats. The boats are made of wood, but all the superstructure is of bamboo and matting, which, being light, is well adapted for the purpose. What strikes one on first going up the Hooghly or the Ganges is the torn condition of the sails of the native boats, and "Why don't they mend them?" is the natural question. The answer to this would most likely be something about "is moolk ke dustoor," or custom of the country. Custom is a tyrant everywhere, but in India it holds a sort of imperial sway. In fact, famines, and many evils there, are to a certain extent owing to this evil power. The natives are helplessly under its sway, and its influence on them has a tendency to paralyse the good intentions of the Government. It requires a mutiny or terrible famine in India to get quit of some ridiculous habit or caste usage. One may often hear the English Government officials, after a calamity of this kind, congratulating themselves that some wretched "dustoor," or custom, which had long stood in the way, has been at length got rid of.

NEW BOOKS.

A book to keep by one and to dip into occasionally for entertainment, and, sooth to say, for instruction, and hints, and suggestions, and aids to memory and the like is Our English Surnames, their Sources and Significations, by Charles Wareing Bardsley, M.A. (Chatto and Windus). The time and labour expended upon such a compilation, for, after all, it is hardly more than a compilation, must have been enormous, and one can only hope that public appreciation may be such as to satisfy the compiler. Something of the same sort has more than once before been published; but nothing, if memory may be trusted, remarkable for the same minute elaboration. The podgy volume contains quite an embarrassment of riches, so far as its particular subject is concerned. It were ungrateful not to make mention here of Mr. Mark Antony Lower's researches, from which everybody who has had occasion to become acquainted with them must have derived both pleasure and profit, and to which Mr. Bardsley acknowledges himself to have been largely indebted; but the present work, so far as one can speak from remembrance, seems to bear towards Mr. Lower's works much the same relation that a body dressed and laid out bears to the same body stripped stark for anatomical investigation. Not but what the dress can be removed and the anatomical investigation proceeded with all the same. The author devotes one chapter to a consideration of "patronymic surnames," one chapter to a consideration of "local surnames," one chapter to a consideration of "surnames of office," two chapters to a consideration of "surnames of occupation," derived partly from occupations of the country and partly from occupations of the town, and one chapter to a consideration of nicknames. Besides all this, there is a general preface; there is an introductory chapter; there is an appendix to the two chapters referring to occupations; there is a "preface to index;" and, lastly, there is an index, the fulness of which may be surmised from the fact that it occupies eighty-one pages out of five hundred and seventy-three. Some of our more aristocratic surnames will be looked for vainly in the index, and a reason why may be given in the body of the work; if so, it has been overlooked, but may be easily divined, seeing that the origin of such names is either self-apparent or to be found explained in books of peerage, baronetage, and landed gentry. Such a work as Mr. Bardsley's is plainly no more to be read through continuously than Johnson's Dictionary, which was pronounced by the simple lady who went through it at a stretch to be excellent so far as the language was concerned but a little tedious and incoherent in point of story. Mr. Bardsley's laborious compilation, taken piecemeal, is likely to convey a great deal of information and to afford no little amusement, although very many of the facetious anecdotes are anything but novelties.

It would have been a gracious deed had a short preface been written to explain what, if any, special object had prompted the publication of Wilkes, Sheridan, Fox: the Opposition under George III., by W. F. Rae (W. Isbister and Co.). The three personages whose names are most conspicuous upon the title-page cannot be said to have suffered from neglect; so far from having been allowed to sink into unmerited oblivion, it is doubtful whether any three men ever lived whose memories have been kept so green. Perhaps, however, one can discover some reason for the new sketch of John Wilkes and his career; it was apparently undertaken with a view of making him somewhat less hideous than he appears in most of, if not in all, the portraits hitherto exhibited of him. Perhaps, too, the new picture of Sheridan was undertaken from a generous fear that depreciation was beginning to do its dirty work with the name of a famous "wit and orator, dramatist and politician," and from a desire to draw a parallel between the career of Sheridan and that of "the attorney's clerk of Hebrew race who has risen to be Prime Minister of the United Kingdom," however incomplete the parallel may be. And perhaps it was considered desirable to once more go over the old ground on which Fox ran his splendid course in order to show that "not the small and exclusive section of modern Whigs," but "members of the great party of progress have the best title to rank Fox among their noblest and worthiest chiefs." At any rate, if the work were to be done, it has been done as well as even an exacting reader could require; the author has chosen for treatment three subjects which can never cease to exercise a certain fascination, he seems to have employed the very best materials, he has the skill of a ready and a readable writer, and he writes as if his heart had inspired his pen.

A work of singular value and of the deepest interest is Incidents of the Sepoy War, 1857-8, compiled from the private journals of General Sir Hope Grant, G.C.B., together with some explanatory chapters by Henry Knollys, Captain Royal Artillery (William Blackwood and Sons). It is a comparatively small volume; but its contents, so far as any rate as weight and importance go, may be truly described as multum in parvo. To prove the extraordinary quality of the material forming the basis of the volume it is only necessary to mention that the diary which Sir Hope Grant kept "was no after-thought compilation. Day after day the events of the preceding twenty-four hours were committed to paper while fresh in the writer's memory." It strikes one as almost incredible that the diary "composed under circumstances of harassing fatigue and of the dangers of warfare," and such a warfare, should have been kept at all, especially by one whose position must have afforded him the less opportunity for taking notes for the very reason that it gave him the greater opportunity of having his head full of what was worth noting; and one is, therefore, the more grateful to find that the diary was, somehow, kept, and that "in no single instance have the statements of facts, or opinions expressed, been departed from." An introductory chapter is followed by a chapter of the "journal," then comes a "commentary" chapter, succeeded by another chapter of "journal;" after which there is a "commentary and explanatory" chapter, followed by four chapters of "journal;" and in this fashion we are brought at last to the end of the terrible mutiny, and to the moment when Sir Hope Grant is nominated "to the command of the British force about to proceed to China to co-operate with the French in repairing the disaster which had been suffered in the attack on the Taku forts." A supplementary appendix concludes the volume, and the useful map has not been forgotten. Of course the general outline of the events to which the journal or journals refer is exactly the same as that with which we have all, from one source or another, been long familiar; but the invaluable advantage of Sir Hope's diary is that it not only records incidents "not generally known," but it enables us to compare what we have read or heard with what is stated on his high personal authority and was jotted down before time had added or subtracted anything, and to have our impressions confirmed or corrected. Horrors, as might be expected, are plentiful; but there is no lack of the bright, and even the ludicrous. There is something extremely comic in the anecdote about the "nice gentle-looking lady" who is seated on the floor, told that she "must get up," answers, in melancholy accents, "I cannot move," is supposed, consequently, to be severely wounded, is tenderly asked whether such is the case, and replies, angelically, "No; it's rupees."

An attempt to criticise, in a few brief sentences, a treatise which is the result of years of study and labour would be an act of injustice to the author. We must therefore content ourselves in the present instance by simply directing attention to a few points of general interest in Dr. Prosser James's meritorious little volume Lessons on Laryngoscopy (Baillière, Tindall, and Cox). It may not be amiss to explain that laryngoscopy is a comparatively new branch of the healing art, exclusively devoted to the examination of the throat or larynx. By means of a mirror applied in somewhat the same way as the better-known instrument the ophthalmoscope is employed in examining the eye, the physician is enabled to see, as it were, round a corner, examine by reflection in a mirror the image of the throat, and quietly study its various diseases. Dr. Prosser James was among the first to recognise the great utility of this ingenious invention, and to employ it in the treatment of throat affections, as well as in demonstrations before a class of students attending a metropolitan hospital. The merit of the invention is due to M. Garcia, an able professor of singing still living, who, it appears, was induced to experimentise upon himself, from a desire to ascertain the exact movements of the vocal cords while in the act of producing musical notes. M. Garcia did not merely make a suggestion and leave others to test it, but, having satisfied himself of the value of his observations in auto-laryngoscopy, he proceeded to write a description of what he had accomplished and presented his paper to the most critically scientific body in the world, the Royal Society. We fully agree with Dr. James when he states, "In the light of all that has since been done, the accuracy of the descriptions first recorded by this ingenious and scientific professor of singing is most remarkable. His paper would have done credit to an expert anatomist and physiologist; and, reading it now, one cannot but wonder that the Royal Society did not confer some signal reward upon the author." The paper was printed in the Proceedings of the society, and is entitled "Observations on the Human Voice," by Manuel Garcia. It was communicated by Dr. Sharpey, March, 1855. As the contents of the paper are not generally known, Dr. Prosser James devotes to it ten or a dozen pages, which are well worth perusal. These "Lessons in Laryngoscopy" are written in an attractive and agreeable style, and must become a valuable manual for students and a guide for the more advanced practitioner. The text is fully illustrated, and several coloured plates, executed by Messrs. Leighton Brothers in their best style, will be duly appreciated by the readers of Dr. James's work.

All who are interested in the innovative theories of the modern school of German music—especially those who have not yet made it a subject of inquiry—will derive advantage and instruction from Dr. Franz Hueffer's book, Richard Wagner and the Music of the Future, recently published by Messrs. Chapman and Hall. The author of this work possesses the rare advantage of the combination of a classical and philosophical education with practical musical knowledge, together with a mastery over the English language that betrays few signs of its not being his native tongue. It is impossible here to give even an outline of the powerful, and sometimes eloquent, reasoning by which Dr. Hueffer advocates the justice of Wagner's art-principles, and recognises their realisation in his opera-dramas. On the vexed question of the relative importance of poetry and music in their stage association, he well says, "The free expression of intense and abundant feeling in poetry is but too often encumbered by the speculative structure of language, while, on the other hand, the soaring flight of music lacks a starting-point of strictly-refined and recognisable pathos. Music and poetry, therefore, by both their powers and weaknesses, are referred to each other's aid; and the results of their combination will be of a higher order than is attainable by either of them in their separate state. On the other hand, it cannot be denied that their close union will be made possible only by a mutual compromise, in which each of them has to resign certain peculiarities of its own in favour of the common aim." The illustration of modern romanticism in German music is continued by supplemental papers on Schubert, Schumann, Liszt, and Franz, in each of which there is much interesting matter—indeed, the volume is one of the most valuable contributions to the literature of music that has been published for many years. Although some portions of it have appeared in magazines, these have been so much recast and so largely amplified that the work is virtually a new one.

The beautiful art of lace-making, which Mrs. Bury Palliser and other writers have made a subject of literary and historical treatment, is practically discussed by Mrs. Treadwin, of Exeter, one of the most successful manufacturers at this time. Antique Point and Honiton Lace (Ward, Lock, and Tyler) is a book that will be useful to many industrious and intelligent ladies, who have a taste for this elegant product of feminine skill, though now to a great extent supplied by machine-work. Mrs. Treadwin contributed to the records of the Exhibition of 1851 some evidence of the manufacture of Devonshire lace two centuries and a half ago. The local trade has been revived, within the last thirty-five years, by the patronage, in the first instance, of the late Queen Adelaide, who once visited Devonshire, and more effectually by that of Queen Victoria, whose father resided at Sidmouth. The bridal dress of her Majesty, in 1840, was of Honiton lace made at the village of Beer, near Seaton; and this example, followed by many others, has aided to obtain public encouragement for a branch of industry still held in repute throughout East Devon. Mrs. Treadwin, as a native of that district, feels something more than a mere commercial interest in the renown of its lace manufacture. She has written a clear account of the different patterns and processes to be applied to this pretty handiwork. The volume is illustrated by one hundred engravings.

FINE ARTS.

SOCIETY OF LADY ARTISTS.

This society has shifted the venue of its exhibitions from Conduit-street to a gallery at 43, Great Marlborough-street. The new gallery consists of two rooms, the larger of which contains water-colour drawings—the smaller, oil-paintings. Increased wall-space appears to have been gained; for the collection is considerably larger than heretofore; and it is gratifying to be able to add that the standard of merit has not suffered in consequence.

Still, however, the ablest professional female artists abstain from supporting this society, or send (with rare exceptions) unimportant examples of their powers. As soon as a female artist feels competent to enter the arena of the ordinary exhibitions, she almost invariably does so. Consequently, this exhibition of "lady artists" is not adequately representative of woman's artistic attainments; nor would it be just to "woman's cause" to pretend that it were otherwise. Art is of no sex; and no woman seriously devoted to art would, we imagine, care to have her productions regarded in a spirit of charitable allowance or disingenuous compliment.

With so many schools of art free to female students among us it is unpleasantly significant to find so large a proportion of the more artistic works in this collection evincing foreign influence or training. Take, for instance, No. 530, "A Dutch Interior," by Miss Swift. This, which is probably the best piece of interior-painting in the exhibition, clearly owes its powerful colour and effect to the influence of M. Bishop, the eminent Dutch painter and husband of the artist's sister. Then Mrs. Benham Hay—whose "Tobit's Return to his Father" (522) reappears here, having been already exhibited some years back—studied art for several years in Italy. Miss Clara Montalba directly imitates the French painter Corot in her oil "Sketch" (452); and her water-colour sketches seem foreign in feeling, though entirely dissimilar in their key of rich colour and mellow harmony. Miss Fanny Duncan's "Evening Primroses" (559) are obviously treated à la Fantin; and foreign influence is observable in the contributions of Misses Clara Biller (533 and 541), Ribbing, and Beatrice Meyer—"A Street Scene in Liverpool" (252).

In many works of English character, too, the ladies appear to be dependent on teachers—the works often recall the styles of male painters of the same surnames as those of the exhibitors. It is not hard to divine what may be expected in a drawing of "Fair Rosamond" (23), by Miss Emma Sandys (which is very firmly pencilled, though hardly a feminine type of beauty), or in the pretty little pictures by Mrs. E. M. and Miss Flora Ward (492 and 223), or in the contributions of Misses Gastineau, Linnell, Rebecca Solomon, and others. "A Head" (592), painted on china by Miss Rebecca Coleman, may likewise be said to be imitative of a given manner; and Miss Allridge's "Iras" (56) somewhat resembles, in its harmonious colouring, but weak drawing, the "Spring Time" (199) of Miss Solomon.

Among works of more originality or freshness a foremost place must be assigned to Elizabeth Thompson's exceedingly spirited drawing representing Bengal Lancers engaged in the diversion or sport of "tent-pegging" (247). Whatever technical shortcomings may be found in this artist's work, she certainly has an extraordinary faculty for expressing energetic action in men and animals and seizing the most characteristic points of an incident. This "tent-pegging" is a suitable subject for the display of this lady's special gift. The swooping charge of the tilting horsemen, the disappointment of the one who has missed and angrily reins in his horse; the triumph of him who, having carried off a peg, waves it on the point of his lance; and the interest of the spectators about the lists, are all capably rendered. Under the well-known initials "E. V. B." are exhibited a set (246) of four large compositions of cats, monkeys, and birds, surrounded with leafy branches, the arrangement and effective colour of which are admirably suited for a decorative purpose—as, for example, the compartments of a screen. Close to these is a drawing, entitled "Château en Espagne" (245), by Miss Victoria Levin, representing a young lady seated, looking out of an open casement towards a mass of sunlit flowers, which is pleasant and bright, and not a little promising technically. Miss Louise Rayner's architectural subjects—notably, the views of Edinburgh, Salisbury, and Chester—are as remarkable as ever for their rendering of stone and other textures, and for their picturesque and animated treatment generally. There is a large and able drawing of "Edinburgh" (93), by Mrs. Stewart Smith.

We have also to commend to notice the following, as presenting merit or promise:—"A Snowy St. Valentine's Day" (361), by Miss Adelaide Maguire; "Hesitation" (230), by Mrs. Paul Naffel; "La Belle Fermière" (91), by H. Kempe; "The Family Loaf: Larens, Basses Pyrénées" (101), by Ellen Partridge; "Rosalie—a Child of Sorrento" (161), by Mrs. Backhouse; "In My Lady's Chamber" (476), by Mrs. Louisa Jopling (Romer); "The Jesuit" (509), a characteristic oil study of a head, by Mary S. Tovey; "The Golden Age" (578), by Miss Julia Pocock; "Chapel of S. Clemente, S. Marc's, Venice" (236), by Miss Alice Boyd; two Algerian subjects by Madame Bodichon; "A Land-Storm" (493), one of the very few landscapes with an impressive or poetical intention, by Miss Helen Thornycroft; "Moonlight in the Engadine" (156), with other meritorious landscapes, by Mrs. Marrable; "The Pick of the Litter" (560), by Miss L. B. Swift; "Designs for Plates" (421), by Mrs. Mark A. Bourdin; and the contributions of Mrs. Charretie, E. Macirone, Eliza Sharpe, M. Ellen Edwards, N. Goddall, Mrs. E. B. King, Susan C. Domett, Sophia Beale, Marian Edwards, S. S. Warren, and A. B. Ellis.

MR. SIMPSON'S SKETCHES ROUND THE WORLD.

Readers of this Journal know that for several years past we have been greatly indebted to Mr. William Simpson (as one of our Special Artists) for sketches which, reproduced in black and white, have furnished us with illustrations of various memorable events and scenes in many parts of the globe. A selection from this artist's original sketches now forms an exhibition of altogether peculiar interest at the Burlington Gallery, Piccadilly, opposite Burlington House. The phrase "Round the World," which is applied to these selected sketches (as to a book of travel Mr. Simpson has lately produced), though, certes, apparently a sufficiently comprehensive phrase, yet may convey a very imperfect idea of this truly cosmopolitan artist's explorations and adventures. To perform the entire circuit of this world, as Mr. Simpson did in the last mission he undertook from the Illustrated London News, is assuredly a considerable exploit; yet, though the artist took a course far from direct in this journey, it has yielded only a minor portion of the sketches in this exhibition. His successive travels have, in fact, embraced a very broad belt of the whole inhabited earth. The 186 sketches here range from St. Petersburg to Abyssinia, from Circassia and the Caucasus to the Red Sea, from Central Asia, the Himalayas, and Thibet to Ceylon and the now famous Straits of Malacca, from Peking and the Great Wall of China to the Pacific, and from California and Salt Lake City to Niagara. In Mr. Simpson's last great tour it will be remembered that he sent home pictures—of course, furtively obtained—of the interior of the Great Temple of Heaven at Peking, of the ceremonies of the Imperial wedding, and other most curious Celestial scenes and incidents, which scarcely another European has ever contrived to witness, much less to preserve and publish pictorially. His illustrations of the marvellously rapid changes the Japanese are undergoing since their acceptance of European civilisation are scarcely less remarkable; and then come the grimly-vivid representations of the extermination of the Modoc savages on the far side of the American Continent. Surely, after having "done" this planet thus completely, the artist must, like Alexander, sigh for other worlds to conquer.

On, however, the many journeyings which have served to enrich our pages, and of several of which some mementoes remain to diversify the more recent sketches in this collection, we cannot dwell in detail. It may suffice to say that, besides the admirable series of sketches in the Crimea during the Russian War, which first brought the artist prominently into public notice; besides the water-colour drawings of India, Cashmere, and Thibet, which formed a special exhibition a few years back; and besides a series of drawings of the recent excavations in and about Jerusalem, and of scenes and sites in the Holy Land, Mr. Simpson has produced countless illustrations in the tours he has undertaken as our Special Artist to Russia on the occasion of the marriage of the Czar and Princess Dagmar, to Abyssinia during the war, to Egypt on the opening of the Suez Canal, to Rome at the sitting of the Ecumenical Council, to the seat of the Franco-German war (during which he was present at Metz, Sedan, and Strasbourg), and lastly Round the World, as already mentioned. Mr. Simpson was, too, in Paris during the reign of the Commune, the fall of the Vendôme Column, the week's fighting, and the burning of a portion of the city. As indicating the difficulties and dangers under which many of these sketches were executed we cannot refrain from inviting special attention to a large drawing of the "Battle-Fields of Sedan" (96), made shortly before the final catastrophe. This was "done on the spot" (at Donchery) during the heat of the battle, and—no other material being at hand—on the back of a piece of wall-paper, as may be seen by the pattern showing through; yet the drawing presents with extreme minuteness and apparently the most deliberate topographical accuracy a panorama of the country about Sedan, so extensive that the positions of the long investing lines as well as of the beleaguered host may be traced throughout.

But, apart from the unprecedented variety of interest in the subjects represented, there are artistic qualities in these sketches which it would be unfair to the artist to pass unnoticed on the occasion of this their public exhibition. Of the high position as a water-colour painter to which Mr. Simpson is entitled an idea may be formed from his more finished drawings here, such as the view of Magdala (97); and some scenes of Coptic Church ceremonial; "The Great Wall of China" (55), "Stones in the Old Temple Wall, Jerusalem" (163), and several other subjects from the Holy Land. The conditions under which most of these works were produced seldom, however, permitted such completion "on the spot." Nevertheless, however hasty or slight, they are always sketches in the best and truest sense of the word—far more so than nine out of ten of the productions which figure in our winter exhibitions of so-called sketches. Mr. Simpson's powers of observation are singularly keen, though always controlled by a sense of the picturesque; and he is ever on the alert. He unerringly seizes and hits off the essential characteristics of all that he depicts, whether peculiarities of physiognomy, costumes, or customs, topography, architecture, or shipping, earth, sea, or sky. His skill in arranging figures is particularly exemplified in several Japanese and Chinese subjects, and also in scenes on the "P. and O. steamers." It is the freedom from mannerism—the fidelity to the aspect of strange scenes and races which render his sketches so suitable for engraving, little of their essence being liable to be lost in the process of translation. In conclusion, we may safely recommend a visit to the little Burlington Gallery, as certain to prove both instructive and agreeable in a high degree.

OBITUARY OF EMINENT PERSONS.

THE DUCHESS DOWAGER OF RICHMOND.

The most noble Caroline, Duchess Dowager of Richmond, died on the 12th inst. Her Grace, who was born June 6, 1796, the eldest daughter of Field Marshal Henry William, first Marquis of Anglesey, K.G., by Lady Caroline Elizabeth Villiers, his first wife, married, April 10, 1817, Charles, fifth Duke of Richmond, K.G., and had five sons and six daughters. Of the sons, the eldest is the present Duke of Richmond, and the third, Lord Henry Lennox, M.P., First Commissioner of Works. The second son, Lord Fitzroy Lennox, was lost in the President steamer, in 1841. The three surviving daughters are Caroline Amelia, Countess of Bessborough; Augusta, Countess of Dornburg, the wife of H.S.H. Prince Edward of Saxe-Weimar; and Cecilia, Lady Bingham. The Duchess, once celebrated for surpassing beauty, was during her whole life the regard of the circle in which she moved.

CAPTAIN CHETHAM-STRODE, R.N.

Captain Augustus Chetham-Strode, C.B., who died at Cannes, on the 10th inst., was the youngest son of Admiral Sir Edward Chetham-Strode, K.C.B., K.C.H., of Southhill House, in the county of Somerset, and brother of the present Edward Charles Chetham-Strode, Esq., of Southhill House. Captain Strode entered the Navy in 1839, and served on board the Benbow (74) in the operations off the coast of Syria and at the bombardment of St. Jean d'Acre, in 1840. Subsequently, after acting as gunnery Lieutenant of the Hastings (74) flagship in China, he was in the St. George (120) in the Baltic during the Russian War of 1854; then in the Royal Albert flagship, in the Black Sea, and until the end of the war as first Lieutenant of the Vesuvius, in the Sea of Azof, under Captain (now Admiral) Sherard Osborn, by whom he was repeatedly noticed in the despatches. After promotion to the rank of Commander in 1856, he was appointed to the command of the Vulcan troopship, on the China station, and was actively employed under Admiral Sir James Hope, with the troops under General Staveley, at the taking of the Peiho Forts, and had charge of the breaching artillery at the capture of four fortified towns, for which duties he was honourably mentioned in the naval and military despatches. In January, 1861, he was for three days and nights engaged in rescuing 650 passengers of the ship India, wrecked in the Straits of Malacca, for which hazardous service he received the written approbation of the Lords of the Admiralty. He was promoted to the rank of Captain in 1863, and subsequently made Captain of the Port of Gibraltar. In 1870 he received the command of the Bellerophon until paid off, when he was appointed Captain of the Pyrites, one of the flying squadron, which was, in 1870, detached to the Brazilian station. Here he remained until invalided. Captain Strode received for war services six medals and three clasps, the companionship of the Bath, and the order of the Medjidie.

CHESS.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

* * All communications relating to this department of the Paper should be addressed to the Editor of the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS, &c., and have the word "Chess" legibly written on the outside of the envelope.

H. MEXIA.—You have omitted to number your problems, and the omission gives trouble in referring to them. That in two moves the examiners pronounce "too easy;" that in three moves "spoilt by the succession of checks;" and that in five they have marked for insertion.

DR. PHILIPPO.—No. 1 is neat and good. It shall appear shortly. No. 2 is defective. F. G. FINE.—It appears to be correct, but examine it again thoroughly; if it stand the test, it shall be printed.

C. F.—The very slight difference, geometrically, between your proposed tour and No. 17 is sufficient to completely destroy the arithmetical properties.

F. W. F.—There is really nothing to recommend in F. W. F.'s tour, either geometrically, arithmetically, or in the selection of words.

J. R. D.—It has been demonstrated that the geometrical and arithmetical properties of such Knight's Tours as No. 17 are beyond the possibilities of single tours; and if J. R. D. will examine those properties "scientifically," he will find reason to think differently as to imagined defects and suggested improvements.

J. LOW, M.D., SHEFFIELD, WOLLEY, T. W. M.P., and Others.—Yes; problem No. 1563 is radically wrong, and ought never to have been passed by the examiners. VALUABLE DISCOVERY for the HAIR.

If your Hair is turning grey or white, or falling off, use THE MEXICAN HAIR RENEWER, for it will positively restore, in every case, grey or white hair to its original colour, without leaving the disagreeable smell of most "Restorers." It makes the hair charmingly beautiful, as well as promoting the growth of the hair on bald spots, where the glands are not decayed. Certificates from Dr. Vermaann on every bottle, with full particulars.

This preparation has never been known to fail in restoring the hair to its natural colour and gloss in from eight to twelve days. It promotes growth, and prevents the hair falling out, eradicating dandruff, and leaving the scalp in a clean, healthy condition. It imparts peculiar vitality to the roots of the hair, restoring it to its youthful freshness and vigour. Daily application of this preparation for a week or two will surely restore faded, grey, or white hair to its natural colour and richness.

It is not a dye, nor does it contain any coloring matter or offensive substance whatever. Hence it does not soil the hands, the scalp, or even white linen, but procures the colour within the substance of the hair.

It may be had of any respectable Chemist, Perfumer, or Dealer in Toilet Articles in the Kingdom, at 3s. 6d. per bottle. In case the dealer has not "The Mexican Hair Renewer" in stock and will not procure it for you, it will be sent direct by rail, carriage paid, on receipt of 4s. in stamps, to any part of England.—Prepared by HENRY C. GALLUP, 483, Oxford-street, London.

THE MEXICAN HAIR RENEWER
has gained for itself the highest reputation, and a decided preference over all other "hair-dressing" as evinced from certificates and testimonials from the most respectable sources. Being compounded with the greatest care—combining, as it does, all the most desirable qualities of the best hair preparations of the day, without the objectionable ones—it may be relied on as the very best known to chemistry for restoring the natural colour to the hair, and causing new hair to grow on bald spots, unless the hair glands are decayed; for if the glands are decayed and gone no stimulant can restore them; but if, as is often the case, the glands are only torpid, THE MEXICAN HAIR RENEWER will renew their vitality, and a new growth of hair will follow. Read the following Testimonial from Dr. Vermaann, Ph.D.:

"Dear Sir,—I have made a thorough chemical analysis of your preparation called 'The Mexican Hair Renewer,' and think it far superior to any hair preparation I have ever known. It is an ingenious compound, as harmless as it is beneficial."

(Signed) "FRED. VERMAANN."
THE MEXICAN HAIR RENEWER may be procured of any first-class Perfumer, Chemist, or Dealer in Toilet Articles throughout the Kingdom, at 3s. 6d. per Bottle.

That nothing really can outvie,
And rank so justly and so high,

What gives the hair an impulse great,
And brings it from each known retreat?
Why, Gallop's Famous Hair Renewer stands,
And universal praise commands:
Whilst all acknowledge with delight
That nothing makes it half so bright
As "THE MEXICAN HAIR RENEWER."

All other preparations made
It takes into oblivion's shade;
It has the praise of thousands gained,
Celebrity likewise obtained:
And, what is of importance more,
It will the Human Hair Restore.
"THE MEXICAN HAIR RENEWER."

The natural colour, by its use,
Like magic does its power produce;
The hair, and of compounds rare,
Selected with especial care,
And thus it is it ranks so high,
Whilst none and all may truly say
On "THE MEXICAN HAIR RENEWER."

THE MEXICAN HAIR RENEWER.

The constitution of the person and the condition of the scalp have much to do with the length of time it requires for new hair to grow; also this or thick hair will depend much upon the vital force remaining in the hair glands. New hairs are first seen to start around the margin of the bald spots, near the permanent hair, and extending upwards to the spots of covered more or less thickly with fine short hair. Extensive brushing should be guarded against as soon as the small hairs make their appearance; but the scalp may be sponged with rain-water to advantage occasionally. The scalp may be pressed and moved on the bone by the finger ends with quickness the circulation is softened and the hair which has remained long bald. On applying this hair-dressing it enlivens the scalp, and, in cases where the hair begins to fall, a few applications will arrest it, and the new growth presents the luxuriance and colour of youth.

"The Mexican Hair Renewer" may be procured of any first-class Perfumer, Chemist, or Dealer in Toilet Articles throughout the Kingdom, at 3s. 6d. per Bottle. In case the dealer has not the preparation in stock, and recommends something else as being "similar," do not be deceived. In case he will not procure it for you, it will be sent free of freight upon receipt of 4s. to any part of England.

tures to the criticism of the whole House—some plan which is based upon the principle of a division, and, therefore, an economy, of labour—will be acknowledged before long, we should hope, to be absolutely imperative. As matters are now managed, it is utterly impossible for the members of the Lower House to get through their duties with satisfaction to themselves or with due benefit to the country. A well-considered reorganisation of the methods of conducting the affairs of the Legislature would be an enterprise, less showy indeed, but more substantially valuable, than many others upon which the existing Government might enter. Of course, it is too late to attempt it this Session. But, should her Majesty's Ministers be prepared to submit a reasonable scheme for this object at the beginning of next Session, they will assuredly earn a good title to the earnest gratitude both of Parliament and the country.

THE COURT.

The Queen received Sir Thomas and the Hon. Lady Biddulph at dinner at Windsor Castle upon the birthday of Princess Louise (Marchioness of Lorne). The choir of St. George's Chapel, under the direction of Sir George Elvy, Mus. Doc., sang in the corridor during dinner. On the following day Princess Louise (Marchioness of Lorne) and the Marquis of Lorne visited Prince and Princess Christian of Schleswig-Holstein at Cumberland Lodge, and afterwards left Windsor for London. Prince and Princess Christian dined with her Majesty. Yesterday (Friday) week Earl Beauchamp (Lord Steward) had an audience of the Queen to present an Address from the House of Lords in reply to her Majesty's Speech. On Saturday last the Queen received a deputation of the Mayor and Corporation of Windsor to present an address of congratulation upon the marriage of the Duke and Duchess of Edinburgh, to which her Majesty made a gracious reply. The Mayor and Mr. Alderman Willman kissed hands, and the deputation then retired. The Duchess of Roxburghe and the Lord and Groom in Waiting were in attendance. Lord Henry Somerset, Comptroller of the Household, had an audience of the Queen to present an address from the House of Commons in reply to her Majesty's speech. The Duke of Roxburghe and the Right Hon. Gathorne Hardy dined with her Majesty. On Sunday the Queen and Princess Beatrice attended Divine service in the private chapel of the castle. The Rev. Dr. Coghlan, Incumbent of St. Peter's, Vere-street, officiated. Major-General Sir Garnet Wolseley, C.B., had an interview with her Majesty. On Monday the Queen, accompanied by Princess Beatrice, left the castle for London. Her Majesty travelled by a special train on the Great Western Railway to Paddington, and drove thence, escorted by a detachment of the 1st Life Guards, to Buckingham Palace. Princess Louise (Marchioness of Lorne) and the Hon. Mrs. Preston Bruce dined with the Queen. On Tuesday the Prince and Princess of Wales visited her Majesty, and remained to luncheon. Princess Beatrice visited Princess Louise. Prince Arthur arrived at the palace. A deputation from Christ's Hospital, and forty boys of the Royal foundation of his Majesty King Charles II., arrived at the palace at a quarter before three o'clock, to exhibit their drawings and charts to the Queen. Her Majesty, accompanied by the Prince and Princess of Wales and the Duke and Duchess of Edinburgh, entered the Picture Gallery at three o'clock, when the members of the deputation were presented to her Majesty by the Lord Chamberlain. The Duke of Cambridge, president of Christ's Hospital, was unavoidably prevented from attending, having gone to Portsmouth. The Queen inspected the drawings and charts, which were laid before her Majesty by each boy separately. The Queen and Princess Beatrice afterwards visited the Prince and Princess of Wales at Marlborough House. Her Majesty's dinner party consisted of the Duke and Duchess of Edinburgh, Lady Churchill, Lady Frances Baillie, the Duchess of Sutherland, the Lord Chancellor and Lady Cairns, Earl Beauchamp, the Marquis and Marchioness of Lansdowne, the Marquis and Marchioness of Salisbury, the Marquis and Marchioness of Ailesbury, Colonel the Hon. W. J. Colville, and the Earl of Dunmore. Prince Arthur and Princess Beatrice went to Her Majesty's Opera, Drury Lane. On Wednesday the Queen held a Drawing-room at the Palace. The Queen, accompanied by Princess Beatrice and the Duke and Duchess of Edinburgh, returned to Windsor Castle on Thursday.

The Court will pass the Easter holidays at Osborne, Isle of Wight. The Queen has appointed Count Albert Edward Wilfrid Gleichen to be Page of Honour to her Majesty, vice the Hon. George Fitzroy Henry Somerset, resigned. Lady Churchill has succeeded the Duchess of Roxburghe as Lady in Waiting to the Queen.

The Queen held a Drawing-room, on Wednesday, at Buckingham Palace. The Prince and Princess of Wales, the Duke and Duchess of Edinburgh, Princess Beatrice, Prince Arthur, the Duke of Cambridge, Prince Christian of Schleswig-Holstein, and the Duke of Teck were present. The Gentlemen-at-Arms and the Yeomen of the Guard were on duty, and a guard of honour of the Grenadier Guards was mounted in the court of the palace. The Queen, accompanied by the Prince and Princess of Wales and the other members of the Royal family, entered the Throne-Room shortly after three o'clock. In attendance upon her Majesty were the Duchess of Wellington, Lady Churchill, Lady Codrington, the Hon. Mary Pitt, the Hon. Mary Lascelles, and the great officers of state.

The principal members of the Corps Diplomatique, with the ladies of their respective families, were present, and various presentations in the diplomatic circle were made. In the general circle upwards of 200 presentations were made to the Queen.

The Prince of Wales held a Levée, on behalf of the Queen, on Thursday, at St. James's Palace. The customary state ceremonial was observed, and a large number of presentations were made to his Royal Highness, which, by the Queen's command, are considered as equivalent to presentations to her Majesty.

THE PRINCE AND PRINCESS OF WALES.

The Prince and Princess of Wales, with the Duke and Duchess of Edinburgh, were present at the debate in the House of Lords on Thursday week. In the evening the Prince and Princess and the Duke and Duchess of Edinburgh were present at the performance of Mr. Arthur Sullivan's oratorio ("The Light of the World") in the Royal Albert Hall. Yesterday (Friday) week the Prince, accompanied by Prince Bariatinsky and Prince Dolgorouki, was present at the Windsor steeplechases. In the evening the Prince and Princess and the Duchess of Edinburgh went to the Olympic Theatre. On Saturday last the Prince and Princess visited the Empress Eugénie at Camden House, Chiselmurst. Prince Arthur visited their Royal Highnesses at Marlborough House. On Sunday the Prince and Princess attended Divine service. On Monday their Royal Highnesses visited the studios of Mr. Millais, Mr. Leighton, and Mr. Prinsep. The Duke and Duchess of Edinburgh and the Empress Eugénie visited the Prince and Princess. Their Royal Highnesses dined with the Duke of Cambridge at Gloucester House. On Tuesday the Prince, as Master, initiated Prince Arthur as a Freemason into the Prince of Wales Lodge. His Royal Highness afterwards presided at a dinner given by the members of the Lodge, at Willis's Rooms. On Wednesday the Prince presided, at Marlborough House, over a meeting of the Commissioners for the Exhibition of 1881. Prince Arthur, the Duke of Cambridge, Prince Christian, and the Duke of Teck were present. In the evening the Prince, accompanied by Prince Christian, presided at a dinner, at Willis's Rooms, in aid of the funds of the British Orphan Asylum. The Princess, accompanied by her children, has taken daily drives.

THE DUKE AND DUCHESS OF EDINBURGH.

The Duke and Duchess of Edinburgh received addresses at Buckingham Palace, on Thursday week, from the Lord Mayor and Corporation of the city of London, the Lord Provost and Corporation of the city of Edinburgh, and the Lord Mayor and Corporation of the city of Dublin; also from the English Presbyterian ministers in and near the cities of London and Westminster, and from the Metropolitan Board of Works. In attendance on the Duke and Duchess were Lady Frances Baillie, Lady Emma Osborne, Colonel the Hon. W. J. Colville, Captain Hay, and Lieutenant Ramsay, R.N. Viscount Torrington and the Hon. Spencer Ponsonby, C.B., were also in attendance on their Royal Highnesses, by the Queen's command. Prince Bariatinsky, Master of the Horse to the Emperor of Russia, and M. Baroness Burdett-Coutts entertained at luncheon, yesterday week, at her residence in Stratton-street, the Lord Provost of Edinburgh and the deputation of magistrates from that city. The guests numbered forty.

Lord Ravensworth has been raised to the dignity of an Earl by the title of the Earl of Ravensworth. His second title will be Baron Ealington.

THE UNIVERSITIES' BOAT-RACE.

The annual contest of the Oxford and Cambridge University Boat Clubs on the Thames between Putney and Mortlake will take place this day. The rival crews have been practising over the course day after day, and their performance has been watched by thousands of critical observers on the river banks. Our illustration represents the scene at the customary weighing of the men who are to wield an oar. The following is the latest published account of the crews:—

According to a Calcutta telegram the treaty with Yarkund was signed on Feb. 2.

The National Rifle Association's new regulations state that in individual shooting ties shall be shot off, except where money prizes of equal value are at stake, when the tying competitors will be bracketed as equal. The register-keeper in charge of the tie-shooting may (according to instructions) call upon any competitor there and then to fire a second and even a third shot. In squad or match shooting, if for a money prize, the tie will be decided by decision; if for a prize in kind, by the aggregate scores made at the longest distance in the competition; if still a tie, by the fewest outers; and, if still a tie, by the competitors on each side who have made the highest score in the competition firing five rounds at the longest distance. In special cases ties will be decided by dividing the prize and by the fewest outers; in volley-firing by division, by the fewest outers, and by the fewest misses; if still a tie, by awarding the prize to be held for equal periods of the year by the successful battalions.

The targets for the future will be on the Swiss system—a circle of 40 in. diameter at 200 yards; a circle of 70 in. at 500 and 600 yards; and at 800, 900, and 1000 yards, and at 400 yards for volley-firing, 6 ft. by 12 ft. The divisions on the face of the target shall be:—At 200 yards, bull's-eye circular, 8 in. in diameter; centre circular, 16 in.; inner circular, 28 in.; and outer circular, 40 in. At 500 and 600 yards they range from 22 in. in the bull's-eye circular to 70 in. in the outer circular. At the long ranges, 800, 900, and 1000 yards, the bull's-eye will be 3 ft. circular; the centre, 4 ft. 6 in. circular; the inner, 6 ft. square, and the outer on the remainder of the target. At 400 yards volley the bull's-eye shall be 2 ft. wide across the target; centre, 1 ft. above and 1 ft. below bull's-eye; and outer on the remainder of the target. In all cases the bull's-eye shall count as 4; centre, 3; inner, 2; and outer, 1. The size of the carton targets shall be:—At 200 yards, 40 in. in diameter; at 500 yards, 60 in.; at 600 yards, 70 in.; and at 800 yards, 70 in. The size of the cartons to remain the same as last year. It will be perceived that an inner has been added to the mode of scoring, thus taking the place of the outer, which now counts only 1.

METROPOLITAN NEWS.

The first flower show of the season of the Royal Botanic Society was held, on Wednesday, at the society's gardens.

Last Saturday the anniversary festival of the Highland Society of London was celebrated at the Freemasons' Tavern—the Earl of Galloway in the chair. About 200 gentlemen sat down to dinner.

From the City Press we learn that twenty-one designs for the proposed City fruit and vegetable market have been submitted to the Corporation. The estimated cost of the several designs ranges from £30,000 to £202,834.

The Company of Grocers has given £100, the Company of Drapers £105, and the Company of Fishmongers £103 towards the enlargement of St. Columba's College, near Dublin, and to help to place it on the footing of an English public school. These companies all have estates in Ireland.

At its weekly meeting, on Wednesday, the London School Board adopted a new regulation for religious instruction. It requires a syllabus of Bible subjects to be drawn up for a month in advance, and a monthly record of the instruction actually given to be forwarded each week to the clerk of the board. Discussion ensued on the selection of sites, the erection of schools, and other formal business.

The weekly return of metropolitan pauperism shows that the total number of paupers last week was 107,239, of whom 36,818 were in workhouses and 70,471 received outdoor relief. Compared with the corresponding weeks in the years 1873, 1872, and 1871, these figures show a decrease of 10,410, 11,445, and 38,264 respectively. The number of vagrant relieved on the last day of the week was 616, of whom 454 were men, 120 women, and 42 children under sixteen.

Mr. Gladstone, on Wednesday, presided at the tenth annual meeting of the Newport Market Refuge and Industrial School, which was held at Willis's Rooms. After glancing at the purpose of the institution, and having spoken of the manner in which it had stood the scrutiny of the Charity Organisation Society, the right hon. gentleman made an earnest appeal on its behalf as an institution conducted upon principles the soundness of which must be obvious to all.

The Earl of Shaftesbury, accompanied by Lady Edith Ashley, presided, last week, at the George-yard Ragged School, Whitechapel, at a "tea and meeting" given to 200 poor and destitute people whose homes are in the low-class lodging-houses of the metropolis. His Lordship alluded to the marvellous improvement which had taken place in lodging-houses since the commencement of the lodging-house mission, which, he said, now has fifty preachers, and holds services in nine or ten different lodging-houses every week.

On Wednesday evening the anniversary festival of the British Orphan Asylum was held at Willis's Rooms—the Prince of Wales occupying the chair. The chief supporters of his Royal Highness on the occasion were Prince Christian, the Marquis of Hertford, and the Marquis of Exeter. The secretary read a long list of subscriptions, including 100 gs. from the chairman, the thirty-sixth annual donation of 10 gs. from her Majesty, a donation of 10 gs. from Prince Christian, and sums of 100 gs. from Sir Thomas Tison, Sir Richard Thornton, and others; the total amounting to the handsome sum of £2400, including thank-offerings of 15 gs. from three former pupils.

There were 2608 births and 1611 deaths registered in London last week, the former having been 93 more and the latter 72 less than the average numbers in the corresponding week of the last ten years. There were 4 deaths from smallpox, 64 from measles, 11 from scarlet fever, 9 from diphtheria, 61 from whooping-cough, 20 from different forms of fever, and 13 from diarrhoea. The deaths referred to diseases of the respiratory organs and phthisis, which in the two previous weeks had been 609 and 584, rose under the influence of the recent cold weather to 649 last week, and exceeded the average by 50; 315 resulted from bronchitis, 169 from phthisis, and 107 from pneumonia. The widow of a bank-note printer died in Shafton-road, South Hackney, on the 17th inst., from "senile decay," whose age was returned as one hundred years. The mean temperature showed a considerable excess every day last week, and averaged 46.5 deg., which was in excess by 4.5 deg.

The annual dinner of the Institution of Civil Engineers was held last Saturday. Among the guests were Prince Christian, the Duke of Teck, the Lord Chief Justice of England, Mr. R. A. Cross, M.P., Mr. Ward Hunt, M.P., the Earl of Carnarvon, the Earl of Devon, and Earl Granville. Mr. Ward Hunt, in responding to the toast of the Navy, said that when the history of the Ashantee expedition came to be investigated the conduct and gallantry of the Naval Brigade—and in that he included not only the bluejackets, but also the Royal Marines—would be found to bear comparison with the conduct and gallantry of any part of the splendid force which was engaged during the war. Lord Carnarvon said he had greatly wished that our future policy in regard to the Gold Coast could be handed over to the Institution of Civil Engineers. He should be very glad to see them exercise their functions in cutting roads, draining marshes, building bridges, and reclaiming land before the civil administrator entered upon his part of the work. Prince Christian and the Lord Chief Justice replied to the toast of the visitors, and Lord Granville proposed the toast of the evening, which was responded to by the chairman, Mr. Harrison, president of the institution.

The highest tide which has been seen in the Thames for very many years occurred yesterday week. The water rose to about four feet above its usual height. The Lambeth district, from Blackfriars to Vauxhall Bridges, occupied by small houses, chiefly inhabited by labouring people, suffered the most from the overflow. For upwards of one hour, from three to four o'clock, the water rushed across the wharves, yards, and narrow lanes lining the banks, and speedily flooded the main thoroughfares running parallel with the river, to the depth of from three to four feet. The intervening cross streets were rendered impassable for upwards of two hours, and the inhabitants were unable to leave their houses. In Vine-street, York-road, the approach to the South-Western Railway station, nearly a quarter of a mile from the river, the water was about four feet in depth, and all access to the station was cut off for some time. The overflow being sudden and unexpected, the amount of damage done is very considerable. The kitchens and cellars of the houses situated within a few hundred yards of the river were filled with muddy water to the depth of several feet. At Deptford a child was killed, and many old women and children narrowly escaped being drowned.

The classical tripos list was published on Thursday. The leading first-class men are Messrs. Walter Leaf (Trinity), Francis Hay Rawlins (King's), J. H. Freese (St. John's), T. H. THE ASHANTEE WAR.

The British soldiers and their skilful General, lately employed in the chastisement of a barbarian King of black warriors in West Africa, have returned victorious to receive a hearty welcome and just applause from their fellow-countrymen of the United Kingdom. The arrival of several troop-ships or transports conveying these regiments home from Cape Coast Castle has kept Portsmouth and London in pleasing excitement since Thursday week. The Tamar was the first to arrive that day, or rather in the preceding night, bringing 500 men, who were the 23rd Royal Welsh Fusiliers, under Colonel the Hon. Savage Mestyn, and detachments of the Royal Artillery, Royal Marine Artillery, and Royal Marines. Captain Walter Grubbe, commander of this vessel, had been with the land forces throughout their campaign, and had commanded part of the Naval Brigade in the battle of Amoaful. The troops did not land till the next day (Friday), between nine and ten in the morning. Lieutenant-General Viscount Templetown, commanding the Portsmouth and southern military district, had ordered preparations to receive them with due honours. The escort or guard that accompanied their reception at the Dockyard and on Governor's-green, was formed of the fifth company Royal Engineers, battalions of the 4th or King's Own, 15th, 18th, and 30th Regiments, the Army Service Corps, and the Portsmouth divisions of Royal Marines and Marine Artillery. The Mayor and Corporation, in their robes of civic dignity, presented an address of welcome. The troops, wearing their soiled grey tunics and trousers and pith helmets, as during the late campaign, instead of their regimental uniform, marched through High-street amidst the cheers and hat-waving or handkerchief-fluttering salutes of a great crowd of people. At the railway station they were entertained with a plain luncheon of bread and cheese and beer, provided by the town Corporation. The 23rd Welsh Fusiliers went on to the camp at Shorncliffe, where they arrived in the afternoon, and were received by Lord A. Russell, the Commandant, the Marquis of Tweeddale, Lord and Lady Pelham, and the Folkestone Corporation. The 93rd Regiment and the third battalion of the 60th Rifles were at Shorncliffe. The officers of the 93rd, the sergeants, and the privates separately entertained their friends of equal rank in the 23rd with a festive dinner. The Artillery, who went up from Portsmouth to Woolwich, enjoyed the same kind of friendly reception.

On the same day, in the evening, arrived the now famous commander of our little army on the Gold Coast, by the steamer Manitoba, a name taken from the Red River Province of Canada, where he distinguished himself in 1870. Sir Garnet Wolseley was accompanied by the officers of his staff, including Lord Gifford, and by Lieutenant-Colonel Evelyn Wood, Major Baker Russell, Lieutenant-Colonel Colley, Captain Rait, R.A., and others who have done much of the best service in the Ashantee War. The Manitoba brought some of the twenty-eighth company Royal Engineers and forty invalids of the Naval Brigade, who are well cared for in Haslar Hospital. Sir Garnet and the officers with him landed about eight o'clock on Saturday morning. At his own particular request, there was no formal reception of him, but Lord Templetown was there to shake hands with him. As soon as the Major-General got to London that day he reported himself to the Secretary of State for the War Department. He had an interview with Mr. Gathorne Hardy. After this, Sir Garnet met Lady Wolseley at Fleming's Hotel. Her Majesty the Queen, upon hearing of his arrival in England, sent an inviting command to visit her at Windsor Castle. Sir Garnet went on Sunday afternoon, and had an interview of two hours with his Royal Mistress. She had, we remember, telegraphed to him, immediately after the fall of Coomassie, her thanks and congratulations. His Royal Highness the Duke of Cambridge, Field Marshal Commanding-in-Chief, inspected the Welsh Fusiliers on the day after they got to Shorncliffe.

The famous "Black Watch," the 42nd Royal Highlanders, arrived at Portsmouth in the Sarmatian, on Monday at eleven in the forenoon. Officers and men returning are 530 in number, under Lieutenant-Colonel M'Leod, C.B., with Majors Duncan Macpherson and F. C. Scott. With these came Brigadier-General Sir Archibald Alison, Major Home, R.E., and several other officers; the Sarmatian also brought forty men of the Army Service Corps. Their reception on landing, at two in the afternoon, was much like that of the Welsh Fusiliers, on the Friday before. The Highlanders remained in the Clarence Barracks at Portsmouth. A large number of our invalided soldiers are in the Military Hospital at Netley.

The Rifle Brigade, under Colonel Warren, with some Royal Engineers and Marines, arrived on Thursday in the Himalaya. They, too, were heartily welcomed. The Rifle Brigade are at Winchester.

It is announced that the Queen will review the troops of the Ashantee Expedition, in the Home Park at Windsor, on Monday next. The review will include the 42nd Highlanders, the 23rd Welsh Fusiliers, the Rifle Brigade, Artillery, Engineers, Marines, and some, we hope, of the Naval Brigade—in fact, all the various arms engaged in the late war.

The hour fixed for the review is 12.30 p.m. Her Majesty the Queen, with their Royal and Imperial Highnesses the Duke and Duchess of Edinburgh, Princess Beatrice, the Prince and Princess of Wales, and the other members of the Royal family, will leave the Castle about a quarter past twelve for the Home Park, where the troops, under command of Sir Garnet Wolseley, will be drawn up in a line of about 500 yards, fronting the Castle. The ground will be kept by a battalion of the Foot Guards, the Carabiniers from Hounslow, and the 2nd Life Guards from Windsor. A strong force of the metropolitan police, under Mr. Superintendent Mott, as well as the Windsor police, under Mr. Chief Superintendent Hayes, will be also in attendance. The troops are to arrive at Windsor by the South-Western and Great Western lines. They will muster in the Home Park at once, and be held in readiness to receive the Queen, who, on arriving at the Park, will drive along and inspect the ranks, after which the regiments will march past her Majesty at the saluting-point.

The Lord Mayor of London has invited Sir Garnet Wolseley and all the officers of the Ashantee Expedition to a banquet at the Mansion House next Tuesday, to meet the Duke of Cambridge, Prince Arthur, Mr. Gathorne Hardy, and Mr. Ward Hunt, First Lord of the Admiralty. The Common Council of London will bestow on Sir Garnet the freedom of the city.

We give an illustration of the scene at the landing of Sir Garnet at Portsmouth. A portrait of this distinguished General, from a photograph taken by Messrs. Window and Bridge, before his departure to the Gold Coast (he did not then wear his beard), has been engraved for our Extra Supplement this week. Sir Garnet Joseph Wolseley is forty years of age, having been born on June 4, 1833, at Golden Bridge House, near Dublin. He is a son of Major Wolseley, of the 25th Regiment, and belongs to the Wolseley family of Wolseley Hall, near Rugeley, Staffordshire. He entered the Army in March, 1852, and served with the 80th Regiment in the Burmese War, and with the 90th in the Crimean War, where he was severely wounded, gaining his captaincy in January, 1855. He was in the Indian Mutiny war, and received high praise for his conduct at Lucknow, with the brevet rank of Lieutenant-Colonel. In 1860 he was in the Chinese War, on the staff of the Quartermaster-General. He gained the full rank of Colonel in June, 1865. In 1867 he went to Canada as Deputy Quartermaster-General. The history of the Red River Expedition, in 1870, commanded by Sir Garnet Wolseley, has been told to our readers; when we gave some illustrations of its arduous task in the forest and river journey of 600 miles, from Lake Superior to Lake Winnipeg. For a most interesting account of this remarkable performance—happily unattended with actual bloodshed—we refer to the book (Macmillan, publisher) written by the lamented Captain G. L. Huyshe, one of Sir Garnet's staff, who has not been spared to come home from West Africa upon this occasion. Sir Garnet Wolseley has since held the appointment of Assistant Adjutant-General to the Commander-in-Chief at the Horse Guards. He has more than once commanded a division at the autumn manoeuvres. His rank in the Army is still that of Colonel only, but he had the local and temporary rank of Major-General during his late command in the Ashantee War. He is a Commander of the Bath, and a Knight Commander of the Order of St. Michael and St. George, which is a distinction awarded for civil or military services done in the British colonies.

The illustrations of the late campaign, furnished by the sketches of our Special Artist, Mr. Melton Prior, whose arrival home was mentioned last week, are continued in this Number. In one instance—that of an actual fighting scene, in which the British soldiers are shown in the attitude of combat in the bush—we have preferred to give a mere facsimile of Mr. Prior's sketch, as then and there drawn by him, instead of the more finished work usually prepared from such sketches for the engraver on wood.

There is a painful interest of reality, too, in the illustration of a convoy of sick and wounded carried down the road from Coomassie to the Prah. The number of hammock-bearers available at this time was so much reduced that each hammock, with the suffering or helpless invalid lying beneath a scanty canopy, was borne upon the heads of four men instead of six, as at first, along a rough and often flooded path. It required the energetic persuasive exertions of the British officers in charge of these convoys to get them over the ground, as many of the natives were inclined, but for fear of instant punishment, to lay down their load. Nearly half the troops of white race that went up to Coomassie were obliged to be carried back in hammocks; of the 42nd Highlanders only 250 were in marching condition; nor were the Rifle Brigade, Welsh Fusiliers, and Naval Brigade in a much better plight, when the excitement of the conflict was passed, and they felt the immense fatigue, as well as the unwholesome effects of climate, to which they had been exposed.

Our larger engraving shows Sir Garnet Wolseley, with his staff, in the position occupied by the head-quarters of our little army at the battle of Amoaful, on Saturday, Jan. 31. The village, or rather hamlet of Egginassie, a mile south of the town of Amoaful on the road from Quarman and Inasufu, where the British troops had passed the night, was occupied by Sir Garnet at eight o'clock in the morning. The front column of his army, consisting of the 42nd Highlanders, with Captain Rait's two guns and rockets, was sent forward immediately, under Sir Archibald Alison, to attack the main body of the Ashantees, who held a strong position on the slope of the hill of Amoaful, with a swamp and a stream of water between them and the hamlet of Egginassie, 200 or 300 yards in advance of the English General's head-quarters. At the same time, the left wing of our forces, under Colonel M'Leod, and the right wing, under Colonel Evelyn Wood, entered the jungle, respectively to the left and to the right of head-quarters, in order to cut their way, diagonally, to the left and the right extremities of the extended front column. They were hotly engaged, almost as soon as they got into the dense thicket, with the overlapping wings of the enemy's large army, which endeavoured to surround the small body of troops, about 2500 in all, commanded by Sir Garnet Wolseley. But support was early and steadily brought forward by the Rifle Brigade, under Colonel Warren, composing the rear column of our army; and there were moments, during that battle of six long hours, when we had fighting on every side of the square formed by Sir Garnet's disposal of our forces. The result, however, is now quite well known; and our present occasion requires only that we should notice the central scene at head-quarters, in what may be called the village green of Egginassie. A tree in the middle of this space is Fetish, being consecrated, agreeably to the religious customs of a West African native people, by some superstitious belief in the immanent deity, to be appeased with fanciful and dreadful ceremonies at stated periods of the year. Near this tree, but somewhat to the left hand in our Artist's sketch, we see the Major-General, wearing a field officer's cocked hat, with several gentlemen of his staff behind or beside him. He was accompanied, also, by Commodore Hewett, R.N., throughout the day. He seems to be dictating an order to the officer who stands writing; while more to the left hand we observe a company of soldiers in the act of starting to march forward and support the front attack. The Highlanders are distinguished by the red feather in the bonnet. Under the Fetish tree sits a wounded man of the Naval Brigade, supported by a sailor and another man, while the surgeon is extracting a piece of lead from his left leg, which is evidently a painful operation. A number of hammock-bearers, huddled close together, sit waiting to be called upon, as they will presently be, to go and fetch in more of the wounded to the field hospital, which is established in these huts or cottages at Egginassie. In the foreground are the soldiers of the head-quarters guard, engaged in direct conflict with a portion of the enemy, who have pressed in upon the extension of our left column, endeavouring to cut it off from the centre. The whole picture is a perfectly truthful and most animated representation of the central point in the battle of Jan. 31, which was really decisive of the war.

Our special publication upon this subject, entitled "FROM CAPE COAST TO COOMASSIE: AN ILLUSTRATED NARRATIVE OF THE ASHANTEE WAR," is now ready for issue, and we trust that it will be found deserving of acceptance.

Mr. R. D. Sassoon, on behalf of the Anglo-Jewish Association, gave a soirée, on Wednesday, at his residence, 95, Lancaster-gate, to a distinguished company of ladies and gentlemen numbering between 200 and 300. Several addresses were delivered and selections of music performed.

The Lord Mayor entertained at a banquet in the Mansion House, yesterday week, the members of the Chambers of Commerce and Chambers of Agriculture of the United Kingdom. The company numbered over 300 gentlemen and a few ladies. His Lordship gave the toasts of the evening—"The Trade and Commerce of the United Kingdom," "The Chambers of Commerce," and "The Chambers of Agriculture," and Mr. Norwood, M.P., Mr. S. Lloyd, M.P., and Sir Massey Lopes, M.P., replied.

FOREIGN AND COLONIAL NEWS.

FRANCE.

Thursday, March 26.

In spite of their recent victories in the Assembly, the situation of the Duc de Broglie and his colleagues is growing more and more precarious every day. Rousing themselves from their listless inactivity of the past three months, the Left are now beginning to harass the Cabinet in earnest, and not a week passes without some well-pointed attack directed against this duplex Government of "Combat" and "Moral Order" and the reactionary majority which upholds it. The Prime Minister's equivocal declarations apropos of the Royalist intrigues and the Septennat have been followed by a letter from Marshal MacMahon—ostensibly a congratulatory epistle thanking M. de Broglie for the manner in which he defended his powers during the recent great debate, but in reality a formal declaration in favour of the statu quo. The President has, moreover, expressed his discontent at the inopportune intervention of the Extreme Right in the late Parliamentary battle, and has been doing his utmost to remove the bad impression created by the Duc de Broglie's embarrassed declarations. At one moment a Ministerial crisis was expected, the Ministers of Justice and Religion complaining of the cavalier manner in which the Vice-President of the Council treated the more ardent Royalists; but that difficulty has been overcome, peace being re-established for a short time in the Cabinet.

The Assembly will take a month's holiday on Saturday for the convenience of such deputies as are members of the departmental councils general. M. de Mazière's report on the Duc de Broglie's proposal to postpone the municipal elections for ten months, which was read on Tuesday, was received by the Right with a perfect storm of interruptions and loud marks of disapproval. It is certainly couched in most masterly language, and formally revindicates the rights of the electors; but yesterday the servile majority voted by a large majority in favour of the Government bill. M. Pressensé made an eloquent speech against the Government.

The new electoral law will come on for discussion after the recess; and with it a counter-proposition, brought forward by the deputies of the Extreme Left, calling upon the Assembly to issue decrees for general elections on June 28 next, and to proclaim its own dissolution on July 15 following. The preamble of this bill, which, unfortunately for France, has no chance of being voted, sets forth that, since July 2, 1871, 170 partial elections have taken place in seventy-seven departments, forming more than three quarters of the French territory, the great majority of them resulting in favour of the Republican candidates. It stigmatises the conduct of the present Government in allowing Royalist intrigues to infringe the rights of the electors, and concludes by stating that universal suffrage forms the basis of all political right in France, and that its maintenance is the best guarantee for order and stability.

The bellicose deputies of the Chamber have been endeavouring to make a mystery of the army committee's report relative to the new fortifications of Paris. A motion was brought forward, the other day, to the effect that the House should discuss this report in secret sitting; but, after a few observations from the Minister of Foreign Affairs, the proposal was eventually negatived. It is reported that M. Thiers will break his long silence to speak in favour of the new fortification system advocated by the army committee.

A letter has been addressed to the President of the Assembly by the Minister of Justice communicating the sentence passed some time ago upon M. Ranc, and demanding his expulsion from his seat as deputy. The matter has been referred to the bureaux.

A melodramatic comedy by M. Octave Feuillet, entitled "Le Sphinx," was produced on Monday night at the Théâtre Français, with tolerable success.

HOLLAND.

The Dutch have not brought fighting to an end at Achéon so soon as we have finished it on the Gold Coast, but they seem determined to do their work thoroughly. They are fortifying themselves in Achéon, and storing provisions, with a view to recommencing operations, if necessary, with a third expedition in October. In the Parliament, on Saturday, the Colonial Minister, in reply to a question, stated that the Government was able to meet all the expenses of the war, and intended to carry it on until a satisfactory result had been obtained.

BELGIUM.

On the recommendation of the Government, the Chamber has granted a credit of $90,000, to indemnify Spa for the loss incurred by the suppression of the gaming-tables.

ITALY.

Monday, being the anniversary of King Victor Emmanuel's accession, was observed as a general holiday in Rome, the city being gaily decorated with flags and the streets crowded. Deputations from the Italian Senate, the deputies, the Council of State, the magistracy, the Army and Navy, the scientific societies, and many towns and provinces of the kingdom, were received at the Quirinal by his Majesty, who returned a gracious reply to each of the addresses. The Emperor of Germany has written a most friendly letter to the King. After congratulating his ally on the twenty-fifth anniversary of his accession to the throne, the Emperor says, "God has brought your Majesty to behold the complete triumph of the liberty and independence of Italy. My sincere wish is that the Almighty will always protect your Majesty and the Italian people." On the previous day the King received the congratulations of the diplomatic body. The reception lasted two hours. His Majesty has received congratulatory letters from the Sovereigns of Europe.

Two counter-demonstrations were held at Rome in honour of the Pope during the celebration of King Victor Emmanuel's accession. A number of Roman noblemen presented his Holiness with an address, to which he replied praising their unalterable devotion. There was also a meeting in the Loggia di Raffaello, at which his Holiness was enthusiastically saluted.

The Duchess of Madrid, wife of Don Carlos, has given birth to a daughter.

An official telegram, received at Madrid on Wednesday, announces that Marshal Serrano, at six a.m. on that day, attacked the Carlist position near Bilbao. The centre, commanded by General Loma, advanced as far as Carreras; the right, under General Rivera, advanced towards a strong position, which two batteries of Krupp guns are bombarding successfully. The latest telegrams confirm the success of Marshal Serrano's army, which is now encamped on positions taken from the Carlists. The fighting was suspended at nightfall. The losses of the Republican troops were 435 men and 17 officers wounded, and two officers and 15 men killed. The Carlists made a very stubborn defence.

The Carlists have been throwing incendiary shells into Bilbao with the most destructive effect. Whole streets have been set fire to. The Carlists have captured a small fort near Bilbao, with its garrison of twenty-four Carabiniers.

The Minister of Marine has presented to the Cortes the colonial estimates, showing a surplus of £40,000, which the Minister proposes to employ in the purchase and construction of war vessels and the improvement of the navy.

GERMANY.

The Emperor William completed his seventy-seventh year on Sunday. His Imperial Majesty was well enough to go to church in the morning. After Divine service many distinguished persons, including the King and Queen of Saxony, the Grand Dukes of Baden, Weimar, and Mecklenburg, and the Dukes of Altenburg and Saxe-Meiningen, arrived at the palace. An immense crowd assembled, and gave enthusiastic cheers for his Majesty. The Generals of the army had previously waited upon the Emperor to express their congratulations; and, in reply to an address delivered in their name by Field Marshal von Wrangel, his Majesty said:—"Receive my thanks for the wishes you have uttered for the improvement of my health. They are this year especially welcome, and I think I may hope that they will be fulfilled."

Prince Bismarck's restoration to health is slow; but there seem to be good hopes that it is steadily progressive. On Sunday night he obtained the first really refreshing sleep he has had since his illness. His appetite improves, and his strength is returning gradually.

The Military Committee of the German Parliament entered, yesterday week, upon the second reading of the Army Bill. As on the occasion of the first reading, clause 1, which fixes the peace effective of the army at 401,659 men, was rejected by 22 votes against 6, as was also a motion to fix the figure at 384,000. The other clauses of the bill were adopted in the same form in which they passed the first reading. During the debate the Minister for War declared that, without a fixed number being set down for the peace effective, the bill would not be accepted by the Federal Government.

The German Parliament completed, on Monday, the second discussion of the Press Bill, which passed almost in the form in which it was brought forward by the Committee. An animated debate occurred on the last clause, which provides that the bill shall not be extended immediately to Alsace-Lorraine. A motion presented by Herren Guerber and Hoyerbeck to strike out this clause was rejected by 174 votes against 129. On Tuesday the Parliament concluded the second reading of the Press Bill, and the first reading of a bill for the introduction of civil marriage throughout the Imperial territory.

The bill respecting the clergy recently approved by the Federal Council has been submitted to the Parliament. It provides that ecclesiastics who have been dismissed from office by the sentence of one of the Courts may, in case of resistance, be deprived of their nationality and expelled from Federal territory.

The second Ecclesiastical Bill was read the second time, yesterday week, in the Lower House of the Reichsrath, by 192 votes against 58. The House sanctioned, on Tuesday, the sum inserted by the Government in the estimate for the Theological Faculty of Innsbruck, after having rejected the amendment of the Committee, which proposed a reduction of the amount, as well as a resolution aiming at the suppression of the faculty.

In Vienna the clericals have held a mass meeting, which served as a general demonstration against Cesarism and a special protest against the Austrian Church Bills. The heads of the Catholic aristocracy of the empire were present, and messages of sympathy were received from all parts of Europe. The most notable was a telegram from Cardinal Antonelli conveying the Pope's blessing.

Herr Stephan Bitto, President of the Hungarian Lower House (who was sent for by the Emperor on the final resignation of the Deak Ministry), has formed a new Ministry, which is composed as follows:—M. Bitto, President of the Ministry; M. Chiazzy, Minister of Finance; M. Bartal, Minister of Commerce; M. Szapary, Minister of Interior; Baron Wenckheim, Minister of the Court; M. Zeihy, Minister of the Roads and Communications; M. Pauler, Minister of Public Instruction; M. Zzende, Minister for the Defence of the Country; M. Peiacevitch, Minister for Croatia.

On Monday M. Bitto explained the policy of his Government by a speech in the Diet. While announcing that he will endeavour not to disturb the union of political parties, the new President stated that the Ministry would confine itself to the tasks of remedying the financial and commercial difficulties of the country, the administrative machinery, and the establishment of an equilibrium.

The new Minister of Finance, on Tuesday, announced in the Diet that his first duty will be to reduce the expenditure, in order to improve the state of the finances. This depended upon the establishment of an equilibrium. He spurned the thought of a collision with the other section of the empire.

THE BENGAL FAMINE.

We have received for publication the following weekly telegram from the Viceroy to the Secretary of State for India, dated the 21st inst. :—

"Prices nearly stationary; rise in some parts of Eastern Bengal. Reports of spring crops good everywhere, except in Tirhoot. It is thought that rain of February has placed several districts beyond reach of famine. Trade brings 1700 tons a day into Behar, and very large quantities of private grain are awaiting dispatch at railway stations in Punjab. Government grain is being dispatched up East Indian Railway at rate of 2000 tons a day, up Eastern Bengal Railway 800 tons a day. Lieutenant Governor, after visiting Tirhoot reports that, on arrival, he found famine of considerable severity had set in through parts of Durbungah subdivision. People were flocking to relief works in enormous numbers. Local organisation for relief was incomplete. There was no dearth of supplies, but prices were high; population at large not seriously affected, but many of poorest classes much pinched, and a few of most wretched had reached point of starvation; only three or four deaths recorded, but it is feared that a few more may have suffered of whom we have no full information. Organisation now improved; village to village relief in detail being pressed on. Every effort being made to draught off people from relief works to their homes, but difficulties are considerable, as they prefer remaining on works.

"Lieutenant-Governor reports that widely-spreading want has been stayed. In a part of Chumparun there has been a marked change for worse in condition of people, but local organisation good, and equal to occasion. Village relief system in working order; no deaths reported. From several parts it is reported that if it had not been for measures taken by the Government there would have been many thousand starvation deaths before this. In some parts Government grain is being sold to general population.

"Sir R. Temple has visited whole of Rajshaye division. Reports transport arrangement in Rajshaye satisfactory; no deaths from want. His estimates for requirements of all distressed districts now complete. Total amount of grain now allotted, 387,500 tons, which gives a reserve over requirements of 49,000 tons; additional reserve unallotted, 78,000 tons; total reserve, 127,000 tons; total provision, 465,000 tons. Calculations have been based for safety on daily ration of 1½ lb., instead of 1 lb., as heretofore. Further ample food supplies available in Punjab."

On Wednesday night £63,000 had been received at the Mansion House in aid of the fund being raised there for the relief of the sufferers by the famine in Bengal; and of this sum £60,000 has been sent to the Central Relief Committee at Calcutta, for transmission to and distribution in the distressed districts.

The Glasgow Committee has forwarded a second instalment of £5000 in aid of the fund.

THE PRINCE IMPERIAL'S BIRTHDAY.

The political demonstration of the French Bonapartist party, which took place at Camden Place, Chiselhurst, on Monday week, upon the eighteenth birthday of the late Emperor Napoleon's only son, is the subject of an Illustration. A very large number of gentlemen, with some ladies, had come over from France, and went down to Chiselhurst by special trains from town. Among them were five Princes of the Bonaparte family, sixty-five Prefects of the Empire, and several ex-Ministers of its Government, besides not a few who had been Councillors of State, members of the Senate, or deputies to the Corps Législatif. Prince Lucien Bonaparte, Prince Lucien Murat, Prince Charles Napoleon Bonaparte, Prince Jerome Bonaparte, and Prince Louis Murat were entertained at breakfast by the Empress and the Prince Imperial. Among the men of political distinction present were M. Rouher, the Duc de Grammont, the Duc de Padoue, the Duc de Bassano, the Marquis de Lavalette, M. Pietri, M. Abbattucci, and others who bore an active part in the Imperial Government. There was a religious service at eleven o'clock, the celebration of low mass in the little Roman Catholic Chapel of St. Mary, Chiselhurst. The body of Napoleon III., it will be remembered, is laid in the mortuary chapel attached to this place of worship. The Rev. Isaac Goddard, Curé of St. Mary's Chapel, delivered an address after the mass. The members of the Imperial family and household visited the mortuary chapel, which now contains the beautiful sarcophagus presented by Queen Victoria. This was bedecked with masses of white flowers, to which the mourners added a wreath of violets interwoven with gold. In the grounds of Camden Place five or six thousand persons had assembled. A large pavilion, with a raised platform, had been put up for the intended ceremony. The Prince Imperial, Napoleon Eugene Louis Jean Joseph, stood in the middle of the platform, his mother the Empress standing a little back, at his right hand. He wore the ordinary gentleman's evening dress, with the grand cordon of the Legion of Honour, and the silver star on his right breast. The Empress was in deep mourning. The Duc de Padoue, in the name of those present and of all other adherents of the Bonaparte dynasty, was to read the address. He ascended the platform and read this paper, in the French language. It congratulated the Prince Imperial on his birthday, and stated that he was now of the legal age, under the Constitution of the French Empire, to ascend the throne, which it was hoped and believed he would yet be enabled to reach. The reading was attended by frequent cries of "Bravo!" and other expressions of hearty assent; cheers of "Vive l'Empereur!" followed its close. The Prince Imperial, with much dignity and energy, read his reply, also written in French, declaring that if, for the eighth time, the French people should decide by universal suffrage in favour of a Napoleon for their ruler, he was ready to accept the trust of Imperial power. His address was greeted with loud acclamations, and there were renewed cheers for the Emperor and Empress. The Imperial family, with their chief guests, re-entered the house. The Prince Imperial, or Emperor as they would now call him, accompanied by his mother, received in the drawing-room a great number of deputations from the departments of France, most of whom brought gifts of flags, jewels, and other tokens of homage. Luncheon was provided in the dining-room, and in a tent on the lawn. The Empress and Prince Imperial had a dinner party in the evening.

NATIONAL SPORTS.

The Bristol meeting, which took place last week, was scarcely so great a success as had been anticipated; for the weather on the first and third days was as bad as it could be, the incessant rain making the course very heavy and slippery. It had been industriously put about that some of the Royal family would be present; but, to the great disappointment of the ladies, this did not prove to be the case. The Duke of Hamilton had very bad luck at the meeting, for the whole of his large team only managed to win two minor events, and twice when his representatives were made strong favourites they occupied the tantalising position of second. Probably Palm, who is by West Australian—Sabine, was one of the best horses that ran during the three days. He won the City Grand Annual Hurdle-Race in fine style from a field of fifteen, and on the following day a 10lb. penalty did not interfere with his carrying off a second hurdle-race. Mr. Arthur Yates, our most popular gentleman rider, was in the saddle on each occasion. The Bristol Royal Steeplechase, to which the magnificent sum of £1000 was added, brought out a field of twenty, but, unfortunately, proved a most extraordinary chapter of accidents from beginning to end, which is attributable to the terrible state of the ground. When they had gone nearly two miles Royalist (10st. 7lb.), who at the time was nearly a field in front of everything, bolted on the wrong side of a flag, and was, of course, out of the race. Almost at the same moment St. Aubyn (10st. 11lb.) fell at a fence, and Fantôme (10st. 9lb.) tumbled over him. A little further on Général (10st. 10lb.) and Clifton also came to grief. Schiedam (11st. 2lb.) was the next victim, as he slipped into a ditch, and Ryshworth (12st. 7lb.) fell over him. Two fences from home Merlin (10st. 8lb.) and Master Mowbray (11st.) also fell, the former bringing down Vintner (10st. 4lb.), who was full of running at the time. This left Scots Grey (10st. 13lb.) and Dainty with a good lead, and they rose at the last flight of hurdles together. The latter fell, and the "pale horse" was left to canter in alone. Jerry (10st. 9lb.) and Silvermere (11st. 1lb.), neither of whom had ever shown prominently in the race, were respectively placed second and third. Scots Grey ran pretty forward in the last Grand National, but, as may be imagined from our account, little reliance can be placed on the running, and, after the race, Vintner was made a great favourite for the "steeplechase Derby" at Liverpool, last Thursday. Footman started for two events during the meeting; but, as he persistently refused to jump even a hurdle, it is evident that his terrible fall of last year has ruined him for steeplechasing.

When, some little time back, we were commenting on the adjustment of the weights for the Lincoln Handicap we took occasion to remark upon the great strides in popularity which this meeting has made during recent years. This popularity is, of course, partly adventitious, for Lincoln is the first racing fixture after the recess; and turfites of all ranks, bearing, for the most part, the enforced idleness of winter with much discontent, are naturally only too glad of the opportunity to resume their favourite pastime. But, even if circumstances were less favourable, it must be admitted that the management this year well deserved the success which has been achieved. For the first time (with the best result) they added the magnificent sum of £1000 to the principal handicap; and, what was even more important, they purchased last autumn some additional ground and constructed a "straight mile," like the New Mile at Ascot, to replace the narrow and tortuous course upon which the Lincoln Handicap has hitherto been run. We heartily congratulate the committee of management upon their public spirit and its satisfactory results, and earnestly commend their example to the attention of certain gentlemen, who shall be nameless, at Epsom and Newmarket, and to all others whom it may concern. The principal feature of the first day's racing was the Brocklesby Stakes, for two-year-olds, run over the last half of the mile course. Eighteen youngsters faced the starter, and there were the usual number of "certainties" which had been so tried that they could not possibly lose. All the favourites, however, were defeated by Mr. Alington's Cashmere, a brown filly, by Thormanby—Scar, who won with the greatest ease by three lengths. She comes of a running family, being own sister to Chasuble and Decorator, and must have been highly tried by her owner, as she has been nominated for no less than thirty-two races.

The Lincoln Handicap was contested by no less than thirty-five horses, and, like the principal event on the first day, fell to a son of Thormanby. It may further be noticed, as a matter of coincidence, that Tomahawk won the Lincoln Handicap by exactly the same distance that Cashmere won the Brocklesby—viz., three lengths. Tomahawk early made his mark in the racing world by defeating his stable companion, Couronne de Fer, and a large field in one of the early two-year-old races last year. After that he ran several times unsuccessfully, and people generally considered that his only victory was one of those "flukes" for which the Turf is famous. His trainer, however, always had a good opinion of the colt, and it was mainly through his advice that Mr. Swindells purchased him for £1000 when he was put up to auction last autumn. A lucky deal, indeed, as which is not where "Lord Freddy" is the purchaser! Poor Oxford Mixture ran, as usual, just sufficiently well not to win, and the customary outsider obtained the third place. The Curate was fourth, a common situation for the favourite in a large handicap; Salvanos, Pete, and Andred ran respectably; and Wenlock, who was to do such great things, Sister Helen, the Infanta colt, and Sweet Agnes entirely disgraced themselves.

Captain Machell has won his second successive Grand National by the aid of Reugny; Chimney Sweep and Merlin, two complete outsiders, were second and third. The first day's racing at Liverpool was of little interest, and we shall give a full account of the meeting next week.

The dispersal of an old-established stud is always a matter for regret, and the Turf can ill afford the loss of such a man as the late Baron Rothschild. The horses in training were sold by Messrs. Tattersall, at Newmarket, on Thursday week, and realised the sum of 14,355 gs. Marworth alone made more than a third of this sum, being taken by Count Lehnndorff, to whom his immense bone and substance proved irresistibly attractive, for 5000 gs. None of the other three-year-olds fetched high prices; but, among the two-year-olds, Pedometer, by King Tom—Miss Peddie (1900 gs.), Tancred, an own brother to Corisande (1300 gs.), and Coomassie (1000 gs.) all reached four figures. Pedometer and Coomassie were bought by Mr. Foy on behalf of a member of the Rothschild family, and M. Lefevre secured Tancred. Three of Mr. Padwick's horses were sold in the same ring. Couronne de Fer, for whom no less than 6000 gs. was refused last season, seemed to be regarded with general suspicion, and, in spite of his owner's offer to match him for 1000 gs. to run any three-year-old in England over the Rowley Mile, Lord Rosebery got him for 2500 gs. We fear that it has been discovered that he inherits the family failing, and, like the rest of Miss Agnes's stock, cannot get beyond six furlongs; while it was broadly hinted by some people that he has turned roarer. Packington, for whom 1600 gs. was paid as a yearling, now fetched only 850 gs.

SKETCHES IN PARLIAMENT.

Since the new House of Commons has met for actual business there has been, as might have been expected, considerable attendance of members. On the first night Mr. Roebuck set the example of diligence in this respect, for he was the first person in the Chamber, and, taking the prescriptive seat which was ceded to him in former Parliaments, he held a kind of levée, gentlemen coming up in succession and greeting him. On that occasion the neophyte members rather wandered about, uncertain where to settle; but since then they have got into tolerable order, and many of them may be looked for in particular places, and stand out from the "undistinguishable throng." The reappearances of the components of the new Government, and their coming up to take the oath, were so managed as to be almost dramatic, the advent of Mr. Disraeli being especially effective.

The generally tame and formal proceeding of moving the Address in answer to the Queen's Speech was enlivened by a deviation by Sir W. Stirling-Maxwell into a party attack, wittily shaped; and even the ponderosity of Mr. Romaine Callender, the seconder of the motion, unrelieved by attempts at rhetorical flights, did not operate to restore the usual dulness. Nor did the solemnity of Mr. Torrens, when he was adjuring the House to do miracles in mitigation of the Indian food distress, serve to depress the discussion, inasmuch as Mr. Gladstone was prompt to retort on Sir W. Stirling-Maxwell; but he did so in all good humour, and it was his cue to evince that the Government would find no factious opponent in him. The Prime Minister may be said to have been beaming; on his face mantled unusual smiles, his manner was gracious and his observations playful, and it scarcely needed for him to have said in so many words that he was satisfied with the result of the recent political bouleversement, so amply did his demeanour imply satisfaction.

The second day of the meeting of the House for business is generally featureless; but this time, there was a disturbing element introduced on the Report of the Address, for the Home Rulers placed themselves formally and in force in presence of the Legislature. Perhaps that peculiar labial utterance which—if the word may be excused—may be called "spluttering," to which Mr. Butt is subject, was rather increased on this occasion by a touch of nervousness. He began in a tone of moderation, and, though he warmed up a little when he described the down-trodden, police-ridden condition of Ireland, illustrated by the fact that no man was allowed to possess and to use arms at his discretion (which is a feeble word to indicate what the use would be), and how complete the liberty in that respect would be under a purely Irish Parliament, he cannot be said to have been over-enthusiastic, and, on the whole, his speech was not so effective as might have been expected. Perhaps, however, it was only a rehearsal against that occasion when Home Rule is to put on a grand Parliamentary appearance. Other Irish members of that persuasion revealed themselves, so to speak, in action. For instance, Mr. Macartney, who was undemonstrative, but decided; and, above all, there was Mr. Sullivan, who made an unquestionable hit. He is said to be audacious to a degree; but, though he was bold and freespoken, he could scarcely have been accused of audacity, showing at once a sense of personal and representative responsibility, combined with a proper deference for the Assembly which he was addressing. He is not merely eloquent, in the Irish meaning of the word, but, though ardent and copious in language, he is a rhetorician of skill; while as to humour, for point, and, above all, for the appearance of its unconsciousness, it is inimitable. Some of his illustrations of the effect of the Arms Act in Ireland were droll in the extreme as he moulded them, though they were none the less effective on his argument because they were so closely told. But they culminated in the case of the performing monkey which was seized for possessing and firing a popgun, against the statute and the peace of our Lady the Queen. Indeed, the sympathy which the hon. member exhibited towards the oppressed monkey was most affecting.

In this discussion there was an indication, beyond that of moving the election of the Speaker, that the Government intends to utilise the undoubted capacity of Mr. Chaplin as a debater; for, à propos of nothing, he made a sharp party attack on Mr. Gladstone, his thrusts being as keen and rapid as those of a small-sword and his demeanour almost fierce, while the expression of his face may be described by the familiar phrase that he had the light of battle in his eye. The rejoinder of Mr. Gladstone was forcible, but made without passion; in truth, his manner is so subdued that, by comparison with what it was wont to be, it might almost be called melancholy. One thing he did positively, and that was repudiating entirely that Home Rule towards which he is accused of having a leaning when it would serve his political purposes to conciliate its professors. Possibly some few people know that Lord Robert Montagu has been converted into an Irish member and a Home Ruler, and he made a tremendously lengthy but curiously unintelligible confession of his new political faith. Office has worked a miracle on Sir Michael Hicks-Beach; for, whereas he was a low-voiced, modest speaker, who never roused attention, because he did not rouse himself, now he evidently desires to imitate the sound of a trumpet in his enunciation; while as to his sentiments, he means that the sound shall be by no means uncertain. Besides, he proved that he could say things which were so pointed that they ruffled the Home-Rulers, and stung them into clamorous denials; and, altogether, he astonished those who were familiar with his Parliamentary antecedents. When Mr. Butt offered to withdraw his motion, up sprang The O'Donoghue from a seat carefully removed from the spot where the Home-Rulers congregated in a group, and twitted those gentlemen with having made only a feint, so that there was nothing left but to divide, and so to show the scanty numbers of the adherents of the Home-Rule movement.

There have been indications that even now the Conservative party in the House is not welded in perfect unity; for when a motion was brought forward to renew the rule which forbids unopposed business to be taken after twelve o'clock at night, Mr. Disraeli having accepted a modification of the order proposed by Mr. Dillwyn, up came Mr. Beresford-Hope with a jocular objection to a compromise coming from the Liberal side; while Mr. Mowbray, who has not been permitted, as heretofore, to adorn a Conservative Ministry, and now sits undistinguished on a high back bench, with a warmth and energy which betokened strong feelings of some sort, almost denounced the really tactical course of the Prime Minister, who is doing all he can to conciliate and humour the House in all its varieties. So a composite minority—the greater part of which, however, were Conservatives—went into the lobby against their newly-empowered chief. There was more steadiness and discipline in their conduct on what was, in a manner, the first party debate and division of the Session. It was on the proposition of Sir Charles Dilke to extend the hours of polling under the Ballot Act to eight o'clock in the evening; and the Ministerialists, and eventually the Ministry by its representative, the new Home Secretary, made a decided stand against the change. The late Government speaking through Sir Henry James and Mr. W. E. Foster, temporised, and suggested compromise, but ultimately were driven to support the second reading of the bill. The majority of seventy-five did not represent the actual strength of the Ministerialists, because some Liberals followed Mr. Roebuck in voting with the Government; but the division was, nevertheless, a test one, and showed the weakness of the Opposition effectually. Occasion was taken in this discussion by several members to give the House tastes of their quality. Notably, Mr. Edward Jenkins, of "Ginx's Baby" notoriety, made his first essay; and he did so with a coolness, an ease, and a confidence which seemed to irritate the Ministerialists; for, having first tried a common mode of indicating indifference—that of raising a hum of conversation—when they fancied that the honourable and fluent gentleman was plunging into an oration—they set in with the usual inarticulate hints that they had had enough of him, which he judiciously accepted, and a good deal of ingenious ratiocination and ornate diction was thus lost to the world. Again, Dr. Cameron, a new member for Glasgow, made his coup d'essai, and showed that, although doubtless he has a good deal in him, he has not in perfection the faculty of getting it out with facility and felicity. Perhaps Mr. T. Thompson, who sits for Durham City, when he has caught the House of Commons manner, may do well; for he possesses a copious vocabulary, which is not quite under judicious control, and seems to have ideas tolerably defined, while his presence is good and his voice also.

Altogether the House, notwithstanding the large infusion of new memberdom, has exhibited pretty much its traditional characteristics; while it certainly has shown itself ready to grant every grace, favour, and facility to the new Ministry.

PARLIAMENTARY SUMMARY.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

Yesterday week the Marquis of Salisbury, in laying on the table papers relating to the famine in Bengal, defended the conduct of the Viceroy of India with reference to the provision he had made to mitigate the calamity. To prohibit the export of grain, he thought, would have been useless, inasmuch as the supply of food was abundant, and the only difficulty was that of land transport. A minute of the Governor-General showed that there was no foundation for the charge that the labour test had been too rigidly imposed upon persons unaccustomed to work or too much exhausted for labour. With regard to the future, three millions sterling would be required in order to make the provision which the Government deemed to be necessary; but it was proposed to ask for powers to raise ten millions, so that they might be prepared to meet all emergencies. Agreement to the Address formed the only other business of the evening.

An alarmist picture of the state of the Navy was drawn by the Earl of Lauderdale on Monday night. The noble Earl stated that the British Isles were surrounded by 229 iron-clads of all nations, whereas of the 33 ships of similar class possessed by her Majesty 13 required new boilers, 7 were, to say the least, shaky, and of the remainder he doubted whether more than 10 were really effective. The first duty of the new Government, he trusted, would be to execute those repairs which their predecessors had been unable, for lack of men, to accomplish. After a few words from Lord Malmesbury, who said it would be premature to state the plans of the Government, Lord Camperdown gave an explanation of the naval policy of the late Administration. A great many of the ships came in to be repaired at once, and, owing to the enormous weight of the machinery, more men were required than had been anticipated. Admitting that some of the iron coating could be pierced by 6½-ton guns—admitting also that it was a question whether it was advisable to spend the £70,000 that would be required to repair certain ships of the Minotaur class—he still doubted whether the Navy was in the deplorable condition mentioned, but was rather inclined to believe that the noble Lord had overlooked depreciation among the 229 foreign ships, and that the British Navy would at any time be able to give a good account of them. The Duke of Somerset blamed the late Government for reducing the number of men in the dockyards from the 18,000 he used to deem it necessary to maintain down to a number as low as 11,000. From this subject the House, on a motion for papers by the Earl of Limerick, proceeded to a debate on the state of the militia, the noble Earl contending that no encouragement was given to really respectable persons to join that branch of the service. After a short discussion, the returns required were promised.

During a short sitting on Tuesday, at the instance of Lord Belmore, the subject of the slave trade in Polynesia was discussed, Lord Carnarvon stating that the traffic had diminished under the operation of the Act of 1872. At the desire of Lord Delawarr, certain papers relating to railway accidents were granted, after some debate.

On Thursday the Duke of Richmond gave notice that on Monday next he should move that the thanks of the House be given to her Majesty's naval and military forces engaged in the recent operations on the West Coast of Africa. The Lord Chancellor laid on the table three bills relating to the transfer of title to land, and intimated that they were framed on the principles enunciated by Lord Selborne on the subject last year. The main feature of the measure was the establishment of a register of title to land. He proposed that there should be a registration of three kinds of title—namely, first, a title absolute and indefeasible; secondly, a title limited or certified to be good from a particular date, and not beyond that date; and, thirdly, the simple title of a proprietor in possession and alleging himself to be owner. He further proposed that the registrar under the bill should be authorised to accept a title of forty years' standing, provided he was of opinion that there were no imperfections in such title. The three registrations he proposed were—fee simples, leaseholds of a certain length, and charters. For three years compulsion to register would not be enforced. There should, however, then be an obligation to register, and if a property were not registered the purchaser should only obtain an equitable title. The noble and learned Lord then stated at considerable length the minor provisions of the bills. After a discussion, in which Lord Selborne, Lord Hatherley, and other noble Lords took part, all expressing general concurrence in the principles of the bills, they were severally read a first time.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Yesterday week Mr. Whalley replied on a point of privilege to the letter of the Lord Chief Justice respecting his commitment for contempt. He moved that the letter be referred to the Committee of Privileges. Mr. Disraeli suggested that it was better fitted for a Select Committee, and in the end his proposition was agreed to. A statement was made by the Prime Minister on the course of future business. The House would be asked to meet on the following day to receive the excess votes of 1872-3, the supplementary Estimates, and a vote of credit for the Ashantee war. These and the votes for mon he hoped would be settled by the 31st. After this "financial tour de force" they would adjourn to April 13, and on the 16th the Chancellor of the Exchequer would introduce the Budget. On the report of the Address Mr. Butt rose to move his threatened amendment, expressing the dissatisfaction in Ireland with the existing system of government in that country, and suggesting that exclusively Irish affairs should be left to Irish members, without any interference with or any separation from the British Empire. Amongst the speakers was Mr. Gladstone, who stated at some length the grounds upon which he said he should not hesitate to vote against it. Any plan for what was termed home rule ought not only to be intelligible, but should be shown to be expedient. After considerable discussion the House divided, and the amendment was rejected by 314 to 50. The Address was then agreed to. In Committee of the whole House, Lord G. Hamilton moved a resolution asserting the expediency of enabling the Secretary of State in Council for India to raise a loan of ten millions sterling for the service of India on the credit of the Indian revenue. Approval of the motion having been expressed by Mr. Denison, Mr. Laing, and Sir G. Balfour, it was agreed to, and ordered to be reported to the House next day, at twelve o'clock. Leave was given to bring in a large number of bills.

As had been arranged, the House sat for a short time on Saturday, when, having gone into Committee of Supply—Mr. Cecil Raikes, on the motion of the Premier, taking the chair—a number of votes to meet Civil Service excesses in 1872-3 were agreed to. A short discussion was raised by Sir J. Hay as to the advisability of the purchase by the late Admiralty of the Briton (subsequently called the Dromedary); but, after some explanations from Mr. Lefevre and Mr. Goschen to the effect that the vessel had been purchased as a store-ship, the hon. and gallant Baronet withdrew his opposition. On the motion of the Chancellor of the Exchequer, a vote of credit amounting to £800,000 was taken on account of the Ashantee expedition, the right hon. gentleman intimating that, so far as could be at present ascertained, the total cost of the war not provided in the ordinary military and naval expenditure would not exceed the sum of £900,000. The report on the East India Loan was brought up, and some other formal business was disposed of. The House having resolved itself into a Committee of Ways and Means, Mr. W. H. Smith moved that a sum of £1,422,797 be granted to her Majesty on account of the charge of the public services between March 31, 1873, and March 31, 1874. The motion was agreed to.

A motion made by Mr. Sandford on Monday to reduce liability to income tax to incomes below £500 was shortly discussed, but nothing came of it, the feeling evidently being that the proposal was crude and premature. Votes on account for the Army, Navy, and Civil Service were obtained as follows, without observation:—£2,000,000 for the naval services; £2,000,000 for the army services; £1,886,600 for civil services; and £1,226,000 for the revenue departments. The East India Loan Bill was read the second time, and bills were brought in by Mr. Butt and Mr. Bryan to assimilate the Irish Electoral and Municipal Franchise to the English law. Other bills were also brought in by private members.

There was a long discussion on Tuesday with respect to the hour of the night after which contested motions should not be proceeded with. A motion was ultimately carried, in accordance with a late precedent, that, with the exception of money bills and bills that have passed through Committee, no order or notice of motion shall come on after half-past twelve at night when notice of opposition or amendment has been given. The report of Supply and of Ways and Means was brought up, and agreed to. In Committee of the whole House, a resolution with reference to loans to school boards was agreed to. The Consolidated Fund (£1,422,787) was read the second time. Bills were brought in by Mr. P. Taylor to abolish the game laws; by Mr. Newdegate, to appoint Commissions for inquiring into monastic and conventual institutions; by Mr. Agnew, to abolish hypothec in Scotland; and by Mr. Mundella, to repeal the Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1871. The second reading of this last bill Mr. Mundella fixed for June 10; and Mr. Cross took the opportunity of saying a few words in vindication of the course taken by the Government in the appointment of a Royal Commission.

At the instance of Sir Charles Dilke, the House, on Wednesday, discussed the second reading of a bill which had for its object the extension of the time of polling under the Ballot Act, the hours to be from eight in the morning till eight at night, instead of between eight and four in the afternoon as now. There was considerable controversy, but in the event the bill was rejected by a large majority. Leave was given to The O'Donoghue to bring in a bill to extend the provisions of the Irish Land Act of 1870 to England and Scotland.

Mr. Disraeli gave notice that on Monday next he would move that the thanks of this House be given to her Majesty's naval and military forces engaged in the operations on the West Coast of Africa. The Consolidated Fund (£1,422,797 14s. 6d.) Bill was read the third time and passed. The Consolidated Fund (£7,000,000) Bill passed through Committee, as did also the East India Loan Bill. The Middlesex Sessions Bill, the object of which is to regulate the salaries of the assistant judge and second chairman of the Middlesex sessions, was read the second time; as also was the Public Works Loan Commissioners (loans to school boards).

The council of the National Rifle Association has deemed it necessary to issue a new code of regulations, making an entire change in the size and form of the targets, settling the vexed question of ties, and embracing other important alterations.

The Leeds Royal Park, which adjoins Woodhouse Moor, and which it was proposed to sell as building sites, has been bought by a company for £150,000; and it will be appropriated to the purposes of recreation, the ground being very suitable for floral exhibitions and galas.

There is a decrease in the Civil Service Estimates for the coming year submitted to Parliament of £243,456. The votes for education, the Post Office, and the telegraphs are the only ones showing an increase. The Army Estimates for the ensuing year show a total of £14,485,300, a net increase of £69,200. The total of the Navy Estimates is £10,179,485, a net increase of £279,760.

Lord John Manners was, yesterday week, re-elected, without opposition, member for the northern division of Leicestershire, on his appointment to the office of Postmaster-General. At Galway Mr. O'Donnell, the Home-Ruler who was certified by Archbishop Manning, defeated by over 200 votes Mr. Joyce, a Home-Ruler uncertified, the numbers being—O'Donnell, 579; Joyce, 358. The election for this borough was occasioned by the succession of Lord Howth to his present rank. The nomination for North Lancashire, to fill the vacancy caused by the elevation of Colonel Wilson-Patten to the Peerage, took place on Wednesday. Mr. Clifton, who came forward in the Conservative interest, was the only candidate before the electors. Mr. Callan having elected to sit for Dundalk, there is a vacancy in the representation for the county of Louth. Mr. John Ramsay was, on Thursday, re-elected, unopposed, for Falkirk Burghs.

MUSIC.

THE OPERA SEASON.

We have still only to record the performances of Her Majesty's Opera at Drury-Lane Theatre, as those of the Royal Italian Opera will not commence until Tuesday next.

Our last notice of Mr. Mapleson's establishment was necessarily restricted to the performance of the opening night, Tuesday. On the Thursday following "Il Trovatore" was given for the debut of Signor Galassi as the Count di Luna—that of Mdle. Lodi, as Amina in "La Sonnambula" (announced for Thursday), having been postponed to Saturday.

The new baritone possesses a voice of considerable power, yet of agreeable quality, and his phrasing generally denoted both culture and intelligence. His delivery of the popular "Il balen" was so successful as to necessitate repetition, when it was still better given, much of the nervousness of a first entry having subsided. The favourable impression produced by Signor Galassi was improved with the progress of the opera, his acting and singing having been very effective in the great scene with Azucena, and the still more important duet with Leonora. This latter character was represented by Mdle. Titiens with that high dramatic and vocal power which have long rendered it one of her finest impersonations, a similar remark applying to the Azucena of Madame Trebelli-Bettini. Signor Naudin, as Manrico, sang and acted with great energy, and shared with Mdle. Titiens the encore of the "Miserere." Other characters were filled by Mdle. Bauermeister and Signori Rinaldini, Campobello, and Casaboni.

Mdle. Lodi, who made her first appearance in this country on Saturday, has a light soprano voice, clear and agreeable in quality, if not remarkable for power. Her intonation is generally good, and she executes florid bravura passages with much fluent skill, having also considerable capacity for pathos and passion. The commencing portion of the opening cavatina, "Come per me serena," was gracefully sung, and its concluding movement, "Sovra il sen," was given with an impulse and brilliancy that confirmed the good impression previously made. This was further improved by the singing rather than the acting of Mdle. Lodi in the bed-room scene, especially in the touching passage, "Non credea mirarti," and the clever execution of the final bravura, "Ah! non giunge" secured the favourable reception of the new Amina, whose future performances will probably gain with the increased confidence of the artist. Other features in the cast were so familiar as to require no more than mere mention. Signor Naudin was Elvino; Signor Agnesi, Count Rodolfo; and Mdle. Bauermeister, Lisa.

This week's performances began, on Tuesday, with "Il Trovatore," cast as before; for Thursday "Lucia di Lammermoor" was announced; and to-night (Saturday) "Fidelio" is to be given, with Mdle. Titiens as the heroine, and the first appearance of Herr Conrad Behrens, as Rocco.

Last week's Crystal Palace concert brought forward a work by Johannes Brahms hitherto unheard in this country. It is entitled "Schicksalslied" ("Song of Fate"), and is written for chorus and orchestra. There is much of calm beauty in the opening adagio, and some powerful writing in the following allegro. The piece is of moderate length, and therefore free from that diffuseness and over-elaboration which characterise some of its composer's more ambitious productions. Herr Joachim's masterly performance of Mendelssohn's concerto, and of a portion of one of Bach's sonatas for violin, and a fine execution of Beethoven's fourth symphony (in B flat), were other special features of the programme, which included Mr. Sullivan's overture to "The Sapphire Necklace" and a repetition of Brahms's orchestral variations on a theme by Haydn, first introduced here three weeks ago. The vocalists were Madame Sinico and Mr. Vernon Rigby. To-day (Saturday) Little's concerto-symphony for piano (with orchestra) is to be performed by Mr. Oscar Beringer, and Herr Carl Reincke's overture to the operetta, "An Adventure of Handel," is to be given for the first time here.

The sixteenth season of the Monday Popular Concerts will close next week with a programme of special interest, the occasion being the annual benefit-night of the director. At last Monday's concert Herr Joachim led Mendelssohn's quartet in E flat, from op. 44, and played, with Mr. Charles Hallé, Beethoven's "Kreutzer" sonata, for piano and violin, the solo of the last-named gentleman having been the same composer's sonata in D from op. 10.

Mr. Arthur Sullivan's oratorio "The Light of the World" was given by the Royal Albert Hall Choral Society, for the first time in London, on Thursday week, when the work was conducted by the composer, as on its production at last year's Birmingham Festival, for which it was specially commissioned and composed. On that occasion we entered so fully into an analysis of the merits and characteristics of the music that brief notice may now suffice, premising that the general effect has been much enhanced by various changes which the composer has since made, these being chiefly a reduction in length of several of the pieces, both choral and solo. As now modified, the oratorio gains much in compactness of form. At the performance referred to the orchestral and choral portions of the score (its best features) derived full effect from the vast forces assembled at these concerts; and the occasion was rendered specially interesting by the attendance of the Prince and Princess of Wales, the Duke and Duchess of Edinburgh, and other Royal personages. The principal singers were Mesdames Lemmens-Sherrington and Patey, Mr. Cummings, and Mr. Santley; some of the subordinate solo passages having been sustained by Miss Spiller and Mr. Maybrick. Dr. Stainer presided at the organ.

Yesterday (Friday) week the Sacred Harmonic Society gave Mr. G. A. Macfarren's oratorio "St. John the Baptist," which was then heard for the first time in London. Here, as in the case of Mr. Sullivan's oratorio, we are absolved from the necessity for lengthened comment, having noticed the work on its first production, at the Bristol Festival, in October last. Since then it has been given at Manchester, again conducted by Mr. Charles Hallé, and with a renewal of the Bristol success; and now we have to record a still greater triumph in its enthusiastic reception by one of those large and critical audiences which are accustomed to assemble at the concerts of the Sacred Harmonic Society. Seldom has Exeter Hall been more completely occupied than on this occasion; indeed, it could scarcely have been fuller. Three of the solo singers—Madame Lemmens-Sherrington, Mr. E. Lloyd, and Mr. Santley—were the same as at Bristol; Miss Antoinette Stirling having replaced Madame Patey in the music of the narrator. These names are sufficient to indicate that the performance in this respect was excellent. Admirable, also, was the choral and orchestral execution of the work, a result largely owing to the care and interest taken in its preparation and direction by Sir Michael Costa, the conductor. All the choruses, most of which are written with a masterly hand, produced a marked impression, two having had to be repeated. These were, the movement for female voices, "This is my beloved son," and the fine chorus ending the first part, "My soul, praise the Lord," in which the well-known psalm tune "Hanon" is treated with rare ingenuity and skill. The unaccompanied quartet for the solo voices, "Blessed are they," was also encored. The applause was frequent throughout the oratorio, and Mr. Macfarren was twice called for. The society's forty-second annual Passion-week performance of "The Messiah" is to take place on Wednesday next.

The second concert of Mr. Henry Leslie's choir, on Tuesday evening, consisted of a selection of sacred music, which included a fine motet, "Dixit Dominus," by the late Samuel Wesley; a similar and older piece, "Gaudent in Coelis," by Walliser; a new "Tantum Ergo," for eight-part choir, by Mr. J. F. Barnett (encored); Mendelssohn's sublime psalm, "Judge me, O God" (encored); Bach's motet, "I wrestle and pray;" M. Gounod's new "Ave Verum" (encored); Mr. Charles Horsley's anthem, "I was glad;" and several new part-songs, two of which, Mr. Leslie's "The Rainbow" and "The Lullaby of Life," had to be repeated. The singing of the choir was admirable in all these pieces. Vocal solos were contributed by Mr. Bentham and Mr. Ainsworth. Mr. Leslie conducted as usual.

The sixty-second season of the Philharmonic Society opened on Wednesday evening, when a selection of high and varied interest was performed, commencing with No. 11 (in A) of Handel's "Concerti grossi" for stringed instruments (the incidental solo passages skillfully executed by Herr Straus, M. Buzian, and Mr. W. Pettit), and including Beethoven's violin concerto and his romance in F, splendidly played by Herr Joachim, the same composer's overture to "King Stephen," and Weber's to "Der Freischütz," and Mendelssohn's "Scotch" symphony. The orchestral pieces were finely rendered under the direction of Mr. Cosins, who has now entered upon his eighth year of office as conductor of these performances. Mendelssohn's scena "Infelice," and an aria from Graun's "Britannico," were effectively declaimed by Madame Otto-Alvalleben. The next concert will take place on Monday, April 20.

The New Philharmonic Concerts begin somewhat late this year, the opening of the twenty-third season being announced for Saturday, April 18, when the first of four morning concerts will be given, the remaining four performances being fixed for evenings alternating therewith.

Miss Josephine Lawrence gave a concert at the Hanover-square Rooms on Tuesday evening, when she played, with great effect, Beethoven's sonata for piano solo in C minor (from op. 10), Mendelssohn's trio in the same key, Schumann's variations for two pianofortes, and Mozart's sonata in G for piano and violin. Herr Straus was the violinist, Signor Piatti the violoncellist, and Miss Lawrence's instructor, Mr. Franklin Taylor, sustained one of the pianoforte parts in Schumann's piece.

The fifth concert, and last but one, of the British Orchestral Society took place on Thursday evening, when a new symphony by Mr. G. A. Macfarren was produced, of which we must speak next week.

Next week will also be a busy one. Besides the opening of the Royal Italian Opera and the closing Monday Popular Concert, (already referred to), it will include a series of nightly performances of sacred music at the Royal Albert Hall, where, among other works, Bach's "Passion-Music" will be given—the recurrence of the annual repetition of this composition, as part of an evening service at St. Paul's Cathedral, being fixed for Tuesday next.

The Sacred Harmonic Society's annual Passion week performance of "The Messiah" will take place on Wednesday next at Exeter Hall. Madame Sinico, Madame Trebelli-Bettini (her first appearance at the society's concerts), Mr. Sims Reeves, and Mr. Santley will be the principal vocalists, and the performance will be conducted by Sir Michael Costa.

The Prince of Wales has signified his intention to preside at the dinner of the Royal Society of Musicians, which is to take place at Willis's Rooms on April 27.

A long series of daily evening concerts will be given in the Albert Hall, beginning on May 1. The arrangement, said to be on a very extensive scale, will shortly be made public.

THEATRES.

HAYMARKET.

The new play at the Haymarket is by a new author, Mr. G. W. Godfrey, who has given earnest in it of dramatic aptitude. It is fancifully entitled "Queen Mab;" but the fairy is represented by an orphan mortal, whose loves and dangers interest us because they serve to bring out a character in contrast with the servile conditions that impede its natural development. These struggles with "unspiritual circumstance" have ever been suggestive, and the mind readily accepts their manifestation as the working of a sacred mystery. The earthly outcome, however, uniformly disappoints expectation. Queen Mab is here simply the adopted daughter of a vagabond player, an orphan, whose destitution itself is the very element in which the nobler attributes find opportunity of display. Her real father, named Vyner, was an artist, who had eloped with a Baronet's younger sister. Mab was the surviving fruit of their unfortunate marriage. It so happens that this same Baronet, Sir Greville Carew, of Cornwall, engages the orphan to give painting lessons to his niece. Sam Curnick, the veteran actor who has supplied the place to her of a parent, informs her of her relationship, in order that she may make her choice whether to retain her connection with Bohemian life or at once rise to the privileges of aristocratic society. Mabel Vyner decides on the former. But love interposes to disturb her content. Gerald Carew, the Baronet's son, a Life Guardsman, intrudes upon her while preparing supper, and amuses her with his languid and supercilious manners, which she meets with a brusque behaviour suitable to her apparent station. His better nature is as effectually concealed from her. They live to be better known to each other—he as her unknown saviour from the peril of drowning (an incident which he had laughed at when related by her), and she as a great painter, the Baronet's niece, and his own future wife. In developing his idea, Mr. Godfrey has conceived some striking situations, and much excellent dialogue; but he is apt to lose sight of the action while elaborating the latter, which is not seldom too much in the styles of the late Mr. Robertson and the present Mr. Byron. Young writers, however, naturally imitate; and Mr. Godfrey will probably prove more self-reliant in his next effort. He has provided some taking characters for Mr. Buckstone, Mr. Howe, and Mr. and Mrs. Chippendale; and these will suffice for the present. The scenery, painted by Messrs. O'Connor and Morris, is unexceptionably good. Altogether, the audience received the new drama with marked favour.

CRITERION.

It is the order of the day that theatres should increase in number, and Messrs. Spiers and Pond have added to their magnificent restaurant at Regent-circus, Piccadilly, a neat and commodious playhouse, which they have placed under the management of Mr. H. J. Byron, assisted by Mr. E. P. Hingston as business-conductor. The new theatre is of moderate size, but elegantly decorated, blue and gold prevailing among the colours, and satin abounding in the materials for cushions and curtains. The act-drop also does credit to the artistic reputation of the Messrs. Grieves, and the stage is sufficiently capacious for regular performance, though not perhaps for abnormal monstrosities. Mr. Byron has begun business with a new and original piece of his own—a comedy in three acts, entitled "An American Lady." The heroine is personated by Mrs. Wood, who comes over from America in order to save her brother from ruin, and accomplishes her object by meeting his creditors personally, and, in the free-and-easy style of Transatlantic diplomacy, gaining their consent to maintain the business. A change takes place in the state of the market, and the factory-bell, long suspended, is set ringing again. There is also a minor action, consisting of love passages between the American lady and the son of a Baronet, who has abused his trusteeship, and receives from her £2000 to set matters right. These simple materials serve for the framework and setting of much sparkling dialogue, in which the wit is much more evident than the humour. In fact, the present piece is the careless work of a clever man, intended only to start a new theatre with some degree of credit until something better can be provided for its patrons. It is followed by a burlesque from the pen of Mr. W. S. Gilbert, called "Topseyturveydom," in which the capricious writer endeavours, however vaguely and vainly, to show everything in a reversed position—the population of that kingdom being born old and growing young, so that ladies nurse their grandmothers in their arms, &c. The notion is obvious enough, but difficult to realise, and we cannot congratulate the author on his complete success.

SCENE FROM "MARY QUEEN O' SCOTS," AT THE PRINCESS'S THEATRE.

After some little difficulty, Mr. W. G. Wills's historical drama of "Mary Queen o' Scots" has been securely planted on the boards. The great scenes have become understood by the performers, and at length they identify themselves with their parts. One cause of the ultimate success achieved is that a certain amount of spectacle is permitted to assist the general action and to embellish it with pictorial groupings. Our Artist has selected one of these spectacular scenes for illustration. It represents the entry of the newly-inducted Queen into Scotland, where and when she is encountered by the famous John Knox, who, zealous for Presbyterian Christianity, is careful to oppose its Catholic form, and strongly objects to the Queen's wearing the cross. Mary is surprised by the interruption, and justly pleads that it was publicly known that she was a Catholic, and that therefore the great preacher's objection was an arbitrary insult, unsupported either by logic or true piety. The picture brings all parties into prominence. There are Mr. Rousby as John Knox; Mrs. Rousby as the indignant Mary; the favourite, Chastelard, as now represented by Mr. Forbes Robinson; and the subordinate characters completing the scene. We see at once that such a group of historical individuals in actual action on the stage must form an interesting as well as a moving picture. We may congratulate Mr. Wills on having treated a difficult subject so judiciously as to ensure its success, and the actors on having interpreted it in a manner satisfactory to the audience and honourable to themselves. The victory has not been won without a battle, but it derives an importance from the previous contest, which served mainly to show the value of the result.

MR. SIMPSON'S "ALL ROUND THE WORLD."

The figure of "A Circassian of the Soubash," which appears in one of our Engravings, is copied from a sketch by Mr. W. Simpson, the well-known travelling Special Artist of this Journal. We are glad to observe that he has received from the Institute of Water-Colour Painters the unsolicited honour of election as a member of their society.

This sketch is to be seen among the very interesting collection of such works, exhibited by him at the Burlington Gallery in Piccadilly, under the title of "All Round the World," meaning pretty much the same as that of his lately-published book, "Meeting the Sun." Our readers are well aware that Mr. Simpson was sent by the Illustrated London News, in August, 1872, to attend the wedding of the young Emperor of China at Peking, whence he came home, in 1873, by way of Japan, California, and the United States of America; so that he did upon that occasion perform, what is no rare or difficult feat in these days, the going all round the globe. But his travels and labours as an artist during the last twenty years have often led him into regions not so commonly visited by our wandering countrymen. He knows territories around the Levant, the Red Sea, and the Black Sea, from the stronghold of King Theodore in Abyssinia, which he saw beleaguered, in 1868, by a British army, to the Crimea, where he witnessed the siege of Sebastopol, and to the shores of Circassia, whither he accompanied the late Duke of Newcastle. Mr. Simpson presents a study of Circassian national character and costume in the sketch here engraved. It is as lifelike and truthful as most of his other sketches. The Tcherkess, as their name is properly written, inhabit the lower parts of the mountain valleys on that side of the Caucasus range which is towards the Black Sea, between the Abkhassians, whose country lies more to the west, and those dwelling east of the river Sunja—namely, the Midszezes, Kistes, or Tchetchenzes, and the Ossetes of the highlands beyond Mount Kasbeck. There is a strange diversity of races, languages, habits, and religious creeds among the various populations of this region, from the Black Sea to the Caspian. Since the Circassian struggle for independence, under Schamyl, was suppressed by the military power of Russia, a large number of the Mohammedans have chosen to emigrate into Asiatic Turkey. Their place has been partly supplied by Armenians removing their habitation from the Turkish dominion into that of the Czar. But the class of which Mr. Simpson's pencil has furnished a characteristic type may still be met with. In the details of this highland chieftain's apparel, we notice a peculiar sort of bandoliers, a row of small receptacles for cartridges, or powder and bullets, suspended across the man's breast.

The order of the Legion of Honour has been conferred upon M. Emile Baillière, son of the founder of the well-known firm of medical publishers.

Messrs. Papayanni, the owners of the steamer Laconia, from which 117 pilgrims were said to have been washed overboard in the Bay of Tunis, have received further intelligence tending to show that only nine persons are missing.

The festival in aid of the funds of the Royal Hospital for Incurables was celebrated, on Wednesday evening, at the London Tavern, under the presidency of Lord George Hamilton, M.P. About 150 ladies and gentlemen sat down to dinner. Subscriptions amounting to about £2600 were announced.

CHAPPELL and CO.'S PEOPLE'S HARMONIUMS. Solid Oak Case, by Alexandra. Price FOUR GUINEAS. This Harmonium has been designed to meet the demand made for a small instrument of good quality of tone, at a price within the reach of all. By the aid of newly-invented machinery, Messrs. THE ALEXANDRE NEW SEVEN-TUNING ORGAN HARMONIUM. Solid Oak Case. Five Octaves, and Two Footboards.

The ever-increasing musical culture in all classes of society has created a demand for free reed instruments of a superior quality to those hitherto manufactured. The public will be found directed to all that has hitherto been considered objectionable as regards tone. This and has been obtained by using a larger and thicker tongue, and a new system of voicing, which renders the quality rich and organ-like. Another advantage in the new system is the increased strength of the reeds, and diminished liability to go out of tune by losing the bellows.

The new system is applied to all the large instruments with still greater effect, and without extra cost.

CHAPPELL and CO., 50, New Bond-street.

THE ASHANTEE WAR: THE RETURN HOME—SIR GARNET WOLSELEY LANDING AT PORTSMOUTH.

THE UNIVERSITIES' BOAT-RACE ON THE THAMES: WEIGHING THE CREW.

PUBLIC CHARITY IN PARIS.

The severe distress this winter among the poorer classes in Paris, where there is no regular poor-law provision, as in England, for the relief of the destitute, has led many influential and benevolent persons to take part in special efforts. The Duchesse de Magenta, wife of Marshal MacMahon, Duc de Magenta, Septennial President of the French Government, has been placed at the head of some important charities. Her proposal is to increase the number of soup-kitchens. At present there are forty of these soup-kitchens, which distribute 10,000 rations per diem. The Duchess thinks that seven more soup-kitchens ought to be established, and that the number of daily rations should be increased to 35,000. The distributions, however, are not free; each ration, worth about three halfpence, is sold to the applicants for one halfpenny—the Parisian poor objecting to receive charity. A large class of artisans, too, cannot avail themselves of soup-kitchens. The bureaux de bienfaisance are so organised that they do but little good, especially owing to the formalities and regulations that fence round all applications for relief.

WORK AND WAGES.

A four-foot vein of high-class coal has been struck in a new sinking at the Llanharan Collieries, belonging to Messrs. Richards, Power, and Co., of Cardiff and Swansea. Openings have been made on an extensive scale for working it.

The Royal Commissioners of Inquiry into the Operation of the Labour Laws are the Lord Chief Justice, Lord Winmarleigh, Mr. Bouvier, the Recorder of London, Sir M. Smith, Mr. Roebuck, M.P., Mr. Thomas Hughes, Mr. Goldney, M.P., and Mr. Macdonald, M.P. The general scope of their inquiry embraces the Master and Servant Act and the Criminal Law Amendment Act; but they will also have to inquire whether it is expedient to limit or define the law relating to conspiracy generally, or as affecting the relations of masters and workmen.

The trades union Parliamentary committee has held a meeting, specially convened, to consider the action of the Government in appointing the Labour Laws Commission. A resolution was unanimously passed declaring it to be a more excuse for delay, and protesting against it as a surprise, an intrigue, and a fraud. The trades unions of the country are recommended to refuse to have anything to do with the Commission, either in the way of giving evidence or of recognising its action. Mr. George Potter, at a meeting of trades unionists, on Thursday week, denounced as "traitors to the cause" Mr. Macdonald, M.P., and Mr. Thomas Hughes, Q.C., because those gentlemen have consented to serve on the Commission.

Mr. Hughes has written to the papers justifying himself; and Mr. Macdonald, M.P., who was present at a conference of miners held at Glasgow last Saturday, justified his consent to be nominated upon the Commission. A resolution of confidence in him in reference to this matter was passed.

Mr. Macdonald, M.P., has issued an address to the miners of Scotland, in which he recommends them to consider well before they finally determine to resist reduction of wages. He suggests that they should meet the masters half way, and thus enable 30,000 men to remain at work.

The miners' strike in South Staffordshire appears to be assuming an alarming aspect. The whole of the men in the Cannock district are out, and the notices of a large number in the Dudley and Brierley Hill districts expire shortly. The prospect of a general strike of colliers in the Black Country, consequent on the threatened reduction of wages, is more serious than has been the case for many months past. There have been meetings in various colliery centres this week. In North Staffordshire the miners have held a mass meeting to concert measures for resisting the reduction of 15 per cent in wages which takes effect from next Saturday. The masters' conduct was characterised as "unjust, dishonest, and oppressive." After paying them this compliment the men expect them to receive their delegates at a friendly conference. Should the reduction be enforced, about eight thousand of them threaten to strike. In Lancashire the same question is being discussed in a more pacific way by conferences of delegates. One of these took place on Monday, at Wigan, when it was announced that a joint committee of coal-masters and miners' delegates would meet as soon as possible to negotiate for a compromise.

The executive committee of the National Agricultural Labourers' Union met at Leamington on Monday, and reported 2500 unionist labourers to be locked out throughout the country, and the committee gave permission for strikes in two other districts where the men's demands have been refused. The recently-appointed Royal Commission on labour was strongly denounced, together with the action taken by Mr. Macdonald, M.P., and Mr. T. Hughes. Mr. Cox, the "Derbyshire magistrate," apologised for Mr. Hughes and Mr. Macdonald as the victims of a trick. They had been, he said, entrapped into the Commission by being allowed only half an hour to decide whether they would serve or not. About 1200 locked-out farm labourers paraded Newmarket streets on Tuesday, preceded by a band, and wearing the unionist colour—blue. Letters threatening incendiary fires have been received by some of the farmers.

At a meeting of coalowners at Cardiff, on Tuesday—Mr. Fothergill, M.P., presiding—an application from the miners to restrict the output of coal in order to avoid the necessity for reducing wages was refused.

The Oldham district colliers, on Tuesday evening, resolved to resist the attempted reduction of wages. Eighteen hundred men and boys are on strike.

Subject to Parliamentary sanction, the Town Council of Birmingham has resolved to purchase the business of two local gas companies.

Dr. Lyon Playfair has consented to preside over the health department of the Social Science Association Congress to be held at Glasgow.

The Office of Admiralty Director of Education, which has for some years been held by the Rev. Dr. Woolley, at an annual salary of £1200, is abolished.

Sir Arthur and Mr. Cecil Guinness have received, through a deputation headed by the Duke of Leinster, the thanks of the Irish people, and especially the citizens of Dublin, for the magnificent and patriotic support of the Exhibition Palace, during two years, as a place of instruction and amusement.

Archbishop Manning, speaking, on Monday night, at Exeter Hall, on the subject of temperance, remarked that, if the enormous liquor traffic continued to extend itself year after year unchecked, the day would come when Parliament would be unable to cope with it; and its influence over the people of this country would then be so strong that by it the votes of electors and elected would be determined. He looked upon this as one of the gravest signs of the present day.

ROYAL INSTITUTION LECTURES.

FUNGI AND MOSSES.

Professor Williamson, F.R.S., in his fourth lecture on Cryptogamic Vegetation, given on Thursday week, considered the Fungi and Mosses. The fungi are a class of cellular, flowerless plants, growing in or upon wood and the herbaceous parts of living or dead plants, upon living or decaying animal substances, and in solutions of organic mixtures. A large portion of them are microscopic bodies, and only to be made out by a very high magnifying power. Of these the bacteria have of late excited much discussion. Dr. Bastian and others assert that they may be produced by spontaneous generation—that is, from inorganic matter by some kind of inorganic force without the agency of life; while Pasteur and others deny their formation, except by the means of the living germs abounding in the atmosphere. Professor Williamson said that the question was considered not yet ripe for settlement, but expressed his own opinion that the evidence hitherto obtained is against Dr. Bastian's theory. He then described the nature and development of the yeast-plant and its relation to fermentation, and other fungoid growths. The dry-rot, he said, should be termed the "wet-rot," since the spores of this fungus light upon damp, not dry, wood, and run into its tissues with incredible power—the decay hastening with the growth of the fungi. If the wood be painted, the mischief is hid, till utter destruction ensues. The noxious fungi of the vine and the potato, and the mould formed on preserves, were also noticed. Proceeding to mushrooms, he stated that what we use as food is the fruit of the fungus, the plant itself consisting of small white filaments composed of cells closely joined together. After commenting on the modes of reproduction and development of mushrooms, the Professor said that the Italians reject the mushroom used at our tables, and use other kinds which we despise, and he added that we thus waste tons of wholesome food. He especially commended the rapidly-growing puff-ball for its delicate flavour and nutritive qualities, as far exceeding the cauliflower and cabbage. He also described the gradual formation of the "fairy-rings" in our meadows by growing fungi. The latter part of the lecture was devoted to the mosses, the most of which have a cellular stem on which the leaves are arranged, giving the structure a very characteristic aspect. They possess also other analogies to the higher orders of plants. After commenting on the peculiarities of their development and multiplication, elucidated by diagrams, the Professor concluded by observing that, although the atmosphere is so loaded with minute vegetable germs that we cannot avoid breathing them or taking them in our food, yet he did not believe that any harm ensued to us in consequence.

TEMPERATURE OF THE ATLANTIC—THE CHALLENGER OBSERVATIONS.

Dr. W. B. Carpenter, F.R.S., Registrar of the University of London, at the Friday evening meeting, March 20, in beginning his discourse, said that the series of investigations carried on by him in 1868 and the three following years, of which the results had been communicated to the members in previous discourses, had led him to the following conclusions:—1. That there is a general interchange of water between the Polar and Equatorial areas, wherever permitted by the disposition of the land; the whole of the deeper stratum moving slowly from the Equator towards either Pole. This double movement is sustained by the constant excess in weight of the Polar column above that of the Equatorial column—their levels being supposed equal—producing an excess of lateral pressure on the lower strata of the former and a consequent outflow towards the latter; this constant outflow tending to occasion a reduction of level, which tendency will produce a continual surface indraught into the Polar area. The theoretical correctness of this view is admitted by every physicist, and can easily be demonstrated experimentally. 2. That the temperature of the deeper parts of the North Atlantic basin progressively falls from 40 deg. Fahrenheit, at about 900 fathoms, to 35½ deg. or to 36½ deg. at the bottom; so that the whole of the lower stratum (often exceeding 2000 fathoms in thickness) consists of water which has either of itself come from the Arctic basin or has been cooled down by a large admixture of Arctic water. 3. That the temperature of the deeper stratum of the South Atlantic would be lower than that of the corresponding stratum in the North Atlantic, on account of its much freer communication with the (South) Polar basin; and that the influence of the Antarctic flow might probably extend to the north of the Equator. 4. That, in consequence of the meeting of the two Polar underflows in the Equatorial area, and the continual draughting off of the warm upper stratum towards either pole, the cold stratum would rise nearer the surface in the Equatorial than in the Temperate parts of either ocean. All these predictions have been so precisely verified by the Challenger observations as to afford a most satisfactory confirmation of the general doctrine on which they are based. Dr. Carpenter had further maintained that the amelioration of the climate of the western side of the British Isles, of the Orkney, Shetland, and Faroe islands, of Iceland, Norway, and Spitzbergen, is due to this slow Polar indraught acting on a stratum of water, which, even as far north as the Faroe Islands, has a thickness of several hundred fathoms; and that this could not be rightly attributed to the influence of the Gulf Stream (restricting that term to the proper Florida current), which dies out after passing the banks of Newfoundland, where it meets the Arctic current, being no longer distinguishable either by movement or by temperature from that general north-eastern surface drift which is maintained by the prevalence of south-west winds over this part of the North Atlantic. This view, also, has been confirmed by the Challenger investigations, which have shown that the true Gulf stream, even when flowing past Sandy Hook at the rate of three miles an hour, has not a greater depth than one hundred fathoms; and that this depth is still smaller when it passes Halifax, by which time it has extended itself superficially. But these investigations have also shown that between Bermuda and the Azores the temperature of the upper stratum between 100 and 600 fathoms is much higher than that of the corresponding stratum nearer the Equator, a temperature above 60 deg. prevailing down to the depth of 300 fathoms, at which the temperature at ten degrees nearer the Equator is only 55 deg.; and while under the Equator it is but little above 40 deg. As this excess of warmth gradually disappears towards the Azores, and is entirely lost between the Azores and Madeira, the lecturer thought that it might not improbably be due to the return of that portion of the Equatorial current which does not enter the Caribbean Sea or the Gulf of Mexico, but is deflected northwards by the chain of the Antilles and the coast of Florida and Georgia. This has been very commonly included in the general designation, "Gulf Stream;" but Dr. Carpenter urged that the term should be restricted to the Florida current. In so far as the upper stratum of the Atlantic in the latitude of the Azores derives an excess of warmth from this northern diversion of the Equatorial current, to that extent our own climate is ameliorated by it; since the indraught which carries that stratum northwards into the Arctic basin will thus bear with it a greater store of heat. But this indraught of heat would equally take place if there were no Equatorial current at all, or if it could all pass on without interruption by any land barrier into the Pacific. In conclusion, Dr. Carpenter referred to the observations made during the further voyage of the Challenger from the Cape to Kerguelen's Land, thence to the border of the great southern ice-barrier, and thence to Australia (the satisfactory completion of which has just been announced by telegram from Melbourne), as likely to afford a firm basis for the doctrine he had advocated, which, if established, would be of the highest importance in physical geography. George Busk, Esq., F.R.S., the treasurer and vice-president, was in the chair.

THE TEMPLE OF DIANA AT EPHEBUS.

Mr. Charles T. Newton, in his second lecture on Ephesus and its Temple, in connection with Mr. Wood's discoveries, on Saturday last, after rapidly touching on the points of chief interest in the biblical narrative of St. Paul's visit, dwelt upon the celebrity of the goddess Diana, or Artemis, and the prevalence of her worship, which was carried by the Phœceans as far as their remote colony Marseilles. Her especial characteristics were referred to an Asiatic origin. On the Ephesian coins of the Imperial period, and in certain statues in Italian museums, doubtless copied from the statue in her temple at Ephesus, she appears in a rude and archaic form, loaded with strange symbols, unlike the type of the beautiful huntress-queen, the Artemis of the Greeks. We have an analogous phenomenon in regard to other deities of Asia Minor, bearing Greek names, but differing essentially in type from their Hellenic homonymes. The multiplication of breasts in the Ephesian Diana is explained by St. Jerome as the symbol of her being the nursing-mother of all animal life, and is at variance with Hellenic treatment. Mr. Newton then gave a short history, first of the original temple, founded about 550, finished about 460, and burnt by Herostratus 356 B.C.; and then of the second temple, built during the reign of Alexander the Great, whose well-known proposal to the priests, and their still more celebrated evasion of his conditions, will be remembered. It is the remains of this second temple which Mr. Wood has discovered. This edifice was specially interesting, not only as being a kind of museum for works of art, but also as having served, like other ancient temples, as a bank of deposit. The wealth of states, kings, and private individuals was deposited within its treasury, under the guardianship of the priests, who kept careful records of all such property. The Parthenon at Athens had a similar treasury, of which the nearly complete accounts for a series of years have come down to us, and have been recently published by the industry of the Germans. Among the inscriptions discovered at Ephesus are two documents of this class, which throw much light on this ancient system of banking. Some of the property thus left in deposit must have occasionally lapsed for want of heirs, and thus swelled the revenues of the goddess, resembling the case of the Suits' Fund in our Court of Chancery. Xenophon, when going on a campaign with Agesilaus, left a large sum of money with one of the chief priests at Ephesus, with the understanding that it should be restored to him if he returned, but if he did not that it should be dedicated to the goddess. Besides gifts, bequests, dedications, and fines, her personal property, she also possessed real property, in the shape of lands, of which the fee simple was sometimes sold by the owners to the temple, on the condition that they should remain in undisturbed possession as life-tenants, at a fixed rent, the land being thus protected from pillage and confiscation. This tenure may be compared to that under the monasteries in the Middle Ages, and to the Turkish Vakouf. The ancient privileges of the temple as an asylum for fugitives were of great importance; and, though occasionally abused, were allowed even by the Roman Emperors. Female slaves maltreated by their masters found refuge here, and, if they proved their charge, became servants of the goddess; otherwise, however, their masters were bound over to keep the peace. Of the exact subordination and functions of the body of priests belonging to the temple Mr. Newton said that we have no knowledge. After noticing the grand festival of Artemis, held throughout the month Artemisia (or March), which was dedicated to her, the lecture was concluded with a description, drawn from one of the Greek novels, of the procession in her honour on her birthday, May 25, in which Abrokomas, the hero, walked among the Ephebi, or young men, and Anthia, the heroine, was with her companion maidens. The concluding lecture, on Saturday next, will be devoted to Mr. Wood's discoveries.

PHYSICAL PROPERTIES OF GASES.

Professor Tyndall began his sixth and concluding lecture, on Tuesday last, by referring to Boyle's experiments, which showed that the motion of falling bodies and the swing of the pendulum are retarded by the resistance of the atmosphere, which was further proved by a guinea and a feather falling, in precisely the same time, in the exhausted receiver of an air-pump. The principle of the syphon was next explained and illustrated, and it was demonstrated that the bend of the syphon must not be at a greater height above the level of the liquid than corresponds with the height of a column of the liquid which the atmospheric pressure can support. Thus, if the liquor to be drawn off be mercury, the height of the bend must be less than 30 inches; and if it be water, it must be less than 34 feet. Having exhibited the motion of the flame of a candle towards the current of air rushing towards it, the Professor showed that this occurs also with a steam-jet, which was thereby enabled to balance an egg-shell and a glass ball successively. He then alluded to the researches of Clément and Desormes in relation to this subject, and to the ingenious practical application suggested by Mr. C. William Siemens. This was followed by an account of the experiments whereby Magnus explained the deviation of round projectiles to be due to their rotation in their passage through the air. The hydraulic system of the human body, the heart and its appendages, was next alluded to, and the sphygmograph, which by tracings records the manner in which the heart is working, was exhibited in action upon the Professor himself, the state of his pulse being revealed by the movements of a ball of light upon the screen. The use of the cardiograph, for registering the action of the heart, was explained, and the results of Dr. Sibson's administration of nitrate of amyl were shown in tracings on smoked glass. After stating that all gases are really the vapours of liquids, Professor Tyndall referred to Faraday's liquefaction of chlorine and other gases, and exhibited an iron bottle containing 200 gallons of carbonic acid, the gas in soda-water. When some of this condensed gas was drawn off the cold created by its evaporation was so great as to turn the watery vapour and the condensed gas itself into snow, and even to freeze mercury. The interesting researches of Professor Andrews on the gaseous and liquid states of matter were next commented on, as proving the continuity of these states; and, finally, Mr. Ladd's process of liquefying the gas ammonia was exhibited in action.

No lectures will be given in Passion and Easter weeks.

NEW BOOKS.

In the volume, An Art-Tour to Northern Capitals of Europe, by J. Beavington Atkinson (Macmillan and Co.), the author explores the outlying fields or fallows of modern European, Scandinavian, Oriental, and classical art; and it is very curious to see how the utmost extremes of artistic conception, motive, and aim, or style and habit of treatment exist side by side, yet very rarely blend together or modify each other. As we accompany the author to Copenhagen, Christiania, and Stockholm, St. Petersburg, Moscow, and Kiev, we are reminded of the fringe of some rich tapestry or carpet, where the colours appear distinct and individual, without the crossing and interchange of warp and woof. Artists should be very grateful to Mr. Atkinson; for a great part of his observations relate to a terra incognita, comparatively speaking, and the public will find much that is interesting, as well as novel, in the book. A portion of the materials had previously been used for articles published in journals and magazines, but about two thirds of the present volume are new. The author had unusual qualifications for the task he undertook. He had an extensive acquaintance with art throughout the middle and southern States of Europe, and had, besides, visited Egypt and Syria, so that he possessed ample data for forming a just estimate of the condition of art in the new regions he has traversed. One of the most valuable essays in the early part of the book is that on Thorwaldsen, which is duly critical and analytic, yet warmly appreciative. Very interesting and valuable is the description of St. Petersburg, which includes a more complete and trustworthy account of the famous collection of the Hermitage than we before possessed in English. This magnificent collection, which will bear comparison with the richest galleries of Europe, is the noblest monument of the wealth and public spirit of successive autocrats of Russia since Catherine II. The Dutch pictures, says Mr. Atkinson, are not to be equalled save in Holland or in Dresden; the Spanish school has no competitor save in Madrid and Seville; the portraits by Vandyke and the sketches by Rubens are only surpassed in England and Bavaria; the collection of gold ornaments from Kertch is not surpassed by the gold-work in the Etruscan Room of the Vatican; and elsewhere he says that the finest collection of classic jewellery in the world has been exhumed from the Crimean sepulchres; the coins are not inferior to the numismatic collections in Paris or the British Museum. "La Vierge de la Maison d'Albe" and "St. George," by Raphael; "La Madonna Litta" and a "Holy Family," by Leonardo da Vinci, with other important examples of these great masters, are also in the Hermitage, but have suffered most cruelly at the hands of "restorers." The English reader can hardly be reminded without regret that the most valuable portion of the Hermitage Gallery, after the Crozat collection, is Lord Orford's pictures, which were removed from Houghton to St. Petersburg in 1779, and lost to this country for the very moderate sum of £35,000. The celebrated Royal manufactory of mosaics at St. Petersburg receives considerable attention. At Moscow, especially, but also at St. Petersburg and Kiev, the "City of Pilgrimage," Mr. Atkinson, like all travellers in Russia, was much struck with the picturesque aspect of the countless gilded, coloured, and fantastically-shaped domes of churches and other buildings; with the evidences of the vast mineral wealth of the Russian empire afforded by the internal decorations of those churches and buildings; and with the splendour and sumptuousness of the Greek Church ritual in its church functions and processions. The offshoot of Byzantine art which is patronised by the Church is an entirely traditional and utterly dead style, or rather a mere manufacture and trade. Sculpture, too, has no chance with the Greek Church, for she discountenances any representation of the human figure in the round. The author justly points out that symbolism, such as we find in the Greek Church, has "never been favourable to art as art; the noblest type of the human form, which is the highest aim of art, has never been striven for under the sway of symbolism. Physical beauty and truth to nature stand, in fact, in the way of that act of faith and attitude of devotion which the system of symbolism engenders." Mr. Atkinson finds little that is hopeful in the present position and prospects of art in Russia and the Scandinavian kingdoms. Proofs of capacity and ability are given by many living painters, but their art is an exotic: modern art, chiefly of debased classical and Renaissance styles, has been imported from France, Germany, and England. A native art has yet to be founded by reference to national life, character, costumes, and landscape—much of which is extremely picturesque. Future development may, says our author, possibly be threefold. First, in the direction of Scandinavian antiquities, as exemplified, for instance, in Finnish metal-work. Secondly, Byzantine, especially for decoration, the style being, as it were, the natural heritage of Russia; the best Russian decorative art being already directly Byzantine. Thirdly, and possibly the fittest sphere of development, would be still more Oriental. Russia not only borders upon ancient Byzantium, but she is the close neighbour of Persia, India, and China; and when the thin veneer of Western civilisation is scraped off the Muscovite is an Oriental. Russia, therefore, should constitute herself the exponent and champion of the Eastern arts. At present she seems to be copying South Kensington wholesale, than which no course could be more suicidal. A copious index renders the work more valuable as a book of reference.

The biography of Leonardo da Vinci and the catalogue raisonnée of his most important paintings, which constitute Mrs. Heaton's share in the authorship of the volume, Leonardo da Vinci and His Works, by Mrs. Charles W. Heaton and C. O. Black, M.A. (Macmillan and Co.), are extremely welcome, for there has been a strange deficiency in our language, of information in a collected, readily-available form, respecting the great Milanese master and his works. Mrs. Heaton very modestly intimates that she has only sought to compile, from most of the later and many of the earlier authorities, a biographical sketch, from which nothing of interest in regard to Leonardo's life should be omitted, but in which there should be no attempt at criticism of his works or genius. This intimation, however, does far less than justice to the care and skill displayed in the arrangement and narration of the biographical facts and inferences, or to the judgment and good taste with which critical opinions on the master's works have been collated and occasionally commented upon. Mr. Black's able essay on "Leonardo da Vinci in Science and Literature," which is largely based on Signor Gilberto Govi's researches in his treatise "Il Genio di Leonardo," forms a valuable, and indeed necessary, complement to the biography. Mr. Black conclusively shows that Leonardo was not less great in philosophy and science than in art. He may, in truth, be fairly regarded as the first great teacher and prophet of inductive philosophy, and the first great discoverer and pioneer in very many departments of modern science. Obviously, however, no figure in history at all approaching the intellectual and artistic grandeur of Leonardo has ever been so neglected by posterity, and only enormous labour and rare qualifications can effect a rehabilitation, so far as that is now practicable. A strange fatality has attended all that Leonardo did or wrote. His "Last Supper" and many of his chief works in painting and sculpture are either destroyed or exist only in fragmentary studies or the copies of pupils. The enormous mass of his manuscripts was left in dire confusion, and the difficulty of reading his calligraphy and arranging his notes is rendered doubly great by the peculiarity of the writing—being from left to right, with numerous elisions and strange orthography. Many entire volumes of his papers have been destroyed or lost. Others are scattered throughout the various countries of Europe; and some, such as the jealously-guarded volume in which the French manuscripts are preserved, are as yet unexplored. Yet the few "Sibylline leaves" which have been examined and edited literally teem with the germs of modern thought and science, and either prophetically hint at or clearly anticipate inventions and discoveries in succeeding ages upon which great reputations have been founded in several branches of science. The volume under notice is handsomely got up and illustrated by photographs from drawings by the master or from engravings after some of his pictures.

Some subjects, like ghosts supposed to have long been laid, are constantly cropping up again, without apparent rhyme or reason; and to that category belongs the otherwise excellent volume entitled Joan of Arc, by Mrs. Bray (Griffith and Farran). It appears that the writer has lately been studying "the French chronicles of the fifteenth century;" and a generous disposition, combined, perhaps, with didactic tendencies, seems to have suggested the idea of imparting to the public the fruits of that interesting study. Yet it cannot be said that the story of the Maid of Orleans had hitherto escaped notice. She and her voices, and her heroism, and her trial, and her condemnation, and her rehabilitation may still have some fascination hanging about them, but it is by no means the fascination that belongs to novelty. To say nothing of histories, chronicles, and other works, ancient of date and written, some of them, in a foreign language, the wonderful maiden, whose singular career has made the village of Domrémy illustrious and historical, has not been lost sight of by modern authors, both English and French. It seems but yesterday that a lady, very well known in the field of literature, gave us a "Jeanne d'Arc," published by Messrs. Smith, Elder, and Co., and there is at this very moment in course of publication M. Guizot's "History of France," or French "Tales of a Grandfather," in which there is a very full and sufficient account of the famous Maid of Orleans. But this is, perhaps, a case to which we may apply the popular saying, "the more the merrier;" and, at any rate, the new version of an old tale is evidently the result of much laborious and conscientious research, and, as a historical monograph, is a very meritorious production. It is one of those works which, by their judicious intermixture of an individual's romantic biography with other matters of a more generally instructive kind, are calculated to do inestimable good by inciting those who at first turn over the pages for the sake of mere amusement, or from an unwholesome thirst after the miraculous, to imitate Oliver Twist in "asking for more," and so to betake themselves earnestly to the great sources of historical information. The author commences with a brief notice of the relations established by the treaty of Troyes between the English King, Henry V., and the French King, Charles VI.; gives a glance at the circumstances attendant upon the deaths of those two monarchs; sketches the early character and the misfortunes of Charles VII. and the miserable and ever-declining state of France; and not before the eighty-ninth page brings Joan of Arc to the birth. Thence, which belongs to the sixth chapter, the biographical narrative is straightforwardly proceeded with down to the fourteenth chapter, which contains a description of her condemnation and execution. Other events, more or less germane to the principal theme, and including the apparition of "a false Joan," are handled in the three succeeding chapters. The eighteenth chapter shows how "posthumous justice" was "rendered to the maid," and deals with certain incidents of which the celebrated Jacques Cœur, Charles VII.'s liberal creditor, is the hero. The nineteenth and last concludes with the death of Charles VII., and an estimate of his moral qualities and his abilities. The estimate is not a high one, less high than that which M. Guizot—not committing himself to any strong opinion of his own, but merely quoting contemporary authority—might lead one to form. At the same time, it is difficult to allow much force to the plea urged by M. Guizot when he says of Charles VII.: "On ne peut plus attribuer sa prompte et efficace activité, en 1453, à l'influence d'Agnès Sorel; elle était morte le 9 février, 1450." Surely he would have been a worse "fainéant" than anybody ever thought he was, if the effect of what "gentle Agnes" did was to end with her existence. The quatrain written by Francis I. in honour of Agnes is differently given by M. Guizot and by Mrs. Bray, and those who love to dispute over such matters may be glad to have both readings. M. Guizot has it thus:—

Gentille Agnès, plus d'honneur tu mérites,
La cause étant de France recouvrer;
Que ce que peut dedans un cloître ouvrir
Close nonnain ou bien dévot ermite.

Mrs. Brays thus:—

Gentille Agnès (sic), plus d'honneur tu mérites,
La cause étant de France recouvrer;
Que tout ce qu'en cloître peut ouvrir,
Close nonnain (sic) ni en désert ermite.

The latter, at any rate, has evidently suffered a little from misprints.

AMONG THE NOVELISTS.

The attention of the Postmaster-General should be directed to the three volumes entitled Victor and Vanquished, by Mary Cecil Hay (Hurst and Blackett); for it is quite clear that, so far as the postal arrangements are concerned, there is something rotten in the state of a town called Churchill, and of a neighbouring village. It is surely very wrong that bewitching young ladies—whether tall and handsome or short and pretty—should have opportunities of wheedling susceptible old townsmen who combine the sale of stationery with a postmastership, or of being suddenly taken so ill in the room where the correspondence of a whole village is being sorted as to render it necessary for the sorters to run for brandy or anything else, and leave the letters wholly unprotected. Such things are, no doubt, even outside of novels; but they are very reprehensible. Nor can any but the loosest of moralists find justification for two otherwise unexceptionable young ladies, who, for the sake of checkmating villainy, have recourse to lying, misrepresentation, imitation of handwriting, cajolery and downright theft. Lovely and lovable they may be, and they are; but high-minded is not an epithet to be applied to them. The time when probity is truly admirable is when it prefers to suffer the uttermost rather than meet guile with guile; and the reason why an honest man struggling with adversity is a sight for the gods is, of course, because, as the very language testifies, the struggle is, on the sufferer's side, conducted with honesty. The two sweetest, and they are very sweet, characters delineated in "Victor and Vanquished" are admirably handled and give a singular grace as well as no slight interest to the story; but they are tainted in the manner hereinbefore insinuated, and the consequence is that they win our love without our respect, and they set a bad example; we cannot place at a very high moral elevation either the young lady who, for any reason whatever and without a thought of the ruin or trouble or disgrace she may bring on the poor people whom she beguiles, purloins a letter; or the other young lady, who not only does the same thing (for to steal by agency is to steal in fact), but also caricatures her own father. It may be said, and truly, that a writer who would correctly represent nature must not attribute perfection to even the most angelic woman; but there are imperfections and imperfections, and those personages whom a novelist intends to be despised should have the despicable blemishes. As for the probabilities and improbabilities of the story, there seems to be nowadays growing up a laudable practice of allowing greater latitude than was for a certain period of austere criticism vouchsafed to the writers of romance, and therefore little more need be said on that score than that some readers will experience emotions of surprise as well as of pleasure at the recital of how a verdict of "Not guilty" was returned in the case of a somewhat irregularly conducted trial for a murder which never was committed. There is a revival of the old style, which had become almost obsolete, in the highly-wrought description of the sinner's death-bed; but the ease with which the upright allow their scruples about appropriating the departed sinner's money to be met and overcome is characteristic of the present, and indeed of all, times. Freshly and pleasantly the story opens, and freshly and pleasantly it is told in many succeeding pages; of tantalising mystery there is no little; of pathos there is a modicum; of love at cross purposes there is enough to give piquancy; and of originality there is an appreciable amount. It is not often that a tutor and a "companion to a lady" exercise, even in fiction, so important an influence over so many lives, or that a villain undertakes the duties of a tutor as a sort of amateur and a lady of really high birth and station is obliged to have recourse to something not altogether unlike false pretences in order to obtain a situation as "companion," getting a hundred a year for performing duties which seem to consist chiefly in charming the reader and everybody else and speaking sweetly through an ear-trumpet.

A sober, staid, matter-of-fact, unexcited and unexciting style is characteristic of Jean de Byron, by the author of "Friends in Council" (W. Isbister and Co.). The matter is such as would have been more justly treated by the adoption of a less cold, less dispassionate, less dull, less unpicturesque manner. The contents of the three volumes are professedly intended to be illustrative of "the Russian Court in the middle of last century," and in order to fulfil that purpose historical facts have been interwoven with a romance. Conspiracies, military revolts, political intrigues, banishments, recalls, the pomp and circumstance of war, and the semi-barbaric splendour of Russian ceremonials offered opportunities of putting upon paper some striking pictures done with pen and ink; and the imaginary fortunes of the hero, who rises from obscurity to position and makes love to both a princess and a gipsy, might have been made the occasion of a powerful story, which should have irresistibly carried the reader through the whole gamut of sentiment. But the opportunities and the occasion, though they have not been altogether neglected, have certainly not been made the most of. The tone is rather that of the lecturer than that of the novelist; and, although there is plenty of incident, there is little action—at least, action so vividly portrayed that it seems to go on before the reader's eyes. The blood is seldom or never warmed; the pulse is seldom or never thrilled; the curiosity is seldom or never stimulated. Such as the plot is, it dwindles and expires, rather than culminates and explodes; and the repetition of similar situations, in respect of persons who are banished to Siberia, is probably lifelike and true to the times depicted; but is, nevertheless, a little tedious. Interest, however, there certainly is, especially for those who are contented with sketches of character and long conversations having more to do with human nature in general than with the progress of the story, and who consider the love-affairs of a hero and two heroines to be quite a minor consideration. It is scarcely necessary to add that the novel—or whatever such a work, being in three volumes, ought to be designated—is, from the moral point of view, quite unexceptionable; and that it is written (as many very popular novels are not) in good, simple, unpretentious English. Indeed, something a little more pretentious would have been appropriate to certain portions of the story and would probably have relieved their deadness.

A curious kind of hybrid, but lively and readable withal, is A Chronicle of the Fermors: Horace Walpole in Love, by M. F. Mahony (Sampson Low and Co.). Two volumes, unusually elongated in size (out of compliment, perhaps, to Horace Walpole's long legs), contain a fiction founded upon fact, a speculation based upon internal evidence afforded by Horace Walpole's letters. And yet Horace Walpole cannot be said to be by any means the chief character of his gender in the story; but he appears now and then in the society of the heroine and as a writer of letters relating more or less to the heroine and her fortunes, and on such occasions we are called upon by the author to admit that Horace Walpole, by his actions and his expressions, betrays himself, and stands convicted as the deeply-smitten but hopeless lover of the peerless heroine. That heroine is Lady Sophia Fermor, eldest daughter of the Earl and Countess of Pomfret. Lady Sophia is described, on the authority of those who lived and wrote during her lifetime, to have been almost unequalled in beauty and grace by any of her own countrywomen, and to have been the envy and despair of all the ladies, as well as the theme of admiration and veneration amongst all the gentlemen, who were natives or Italian inhabitants of that noble city of Florence, where we are first introduced to her by our author. At Florence she meets with the Duke of Newcastle's nephew and heir, Lord Lincoln, an admirer greatly to be encouraged by so ambitious a mother as Lady Pomfret, and, we are bidden to suppose, a rival before whom even the fastidious Horace Walpole feels it inevitable that he should retire without a struggle. The fate of Lady Sophia is the principal subject of the novel or chronicle, which tells how she loved and was loved by the unstable Lincoln; how she was twice jilted by that noble but inconstant and somewhat time-serving and mercenary heir to the dukedom of Newcastle; how she became an example of union between May and December by marrying the powerful, but at the very least elderly, Lord Carteret; and how, according to our author's theory, she died of a broken heart. Nemesis is made out to have requited the exquisite Lord Lincoln by afflicting him in his later manhood with a bottle-nose. The style in which the chronicle is written is very animated; characters are sketched with considerable vigour; there is a great deal of sprightly dialogue; scenes of a bygone age are cleverly reproduced; and there is no small amount of wit, borrowed for the most part, as was but natural and almost obligatory, from the letters of Horace Walpole and others.

Mr. Disraeli has declined to receive a deputation urging the release of the Fenian convicts who are detained in prison.

RUSSIAN MARRIAGE FESTIVITIES: PROCESSION OF LIFE-BOATS AT ST. PETERSBURG, SKETCHED BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST.

MAJOR-GENERAL SIR GARNET JOSEPH WOLSELEY, K.C.M.G., C.B.

THE DISTRESS IN PARIS: GIVING SOUP TO THE POOR AT THE CHARITY KITCHEN, RUE DE SEVRES.

THE LIFE-BOATS AT ST. PETERSBURG.

One incident of the festivities and ceremonies that took place at St. Petersburg, in the weeks before and after the marriage of the Duke of Edinburgh and Grand Duchess Marie, was sketched at the time by our Special Artist there. But the engraving then made from his sketch has been deferred in publication, on account of the great press of other illustrations. The subject represented was noticed in our current description of the proceedings at St. Petersburg. It was the setting forth of a procession from near the quay of the Admiralty, to escort to the railway station, for conveyance to a remote destination in the provinces, the two life-boats which had been provided by a subscription raised among the members of leading societies, under princely and noble patronage, at the metropolis of the Russian Empire. Her Imperial Highness the Czarevna, during her visit to England last summer, graciously showed her particular interest in the arrangements for saving life at sea and upon the coast, which have been made so efficient by the Royal National Life-Boat Institution of London. This has led to the forming of a Russian Society for Aid to the Shipwrecked, with a special additional object—that of furnishing the means of rescue for lives endangered amidst the breaking ice of rivers and other inland waters of that vast country. We have given some account of the matter on a former occasion. There was something appropriate, in the public gift of life-boats, to the wedding of the Grand Duchess with an English Sailor Prince.

THE DUKE OF EDINBURGH'S MARRIAGE TREATY.

The treaty between the Queen and the Emperor of Russia for the marriage of the Duke of Edinburgh with the Grand Duchess Marie Alexandrovna has been presented to Parliament and printed.

The treaty, which consists of twenty-one articles, was signed at St. Petersburg on Jan. 22, 1874, and the ratifications were exchanged on Jan. 29.

Article 3 provides that the Duchess is not to be in any way hindered in the full, free, and unrestrained exercise of the religious profession of the Orthodox Church; but shall, nevertheless, of her own free will accompany the Duke to chapels and churches of the Established Churches of England and Scotland, and other Protestant churches and chapels, at all times when it shall be fitting that she should assist at ceremonies and other public acts which may be held therein.

Children born of the marriage are to be brought up as Protestants.

By article 5 the Emperor assigns to his daughter the usual marriage portion granted to Emperors' daughters of 1,000,000 roubles (about £150,000), which is to remain for ever in Russia, and bear interest at the rate of 5 per cent per annum, which will be paid half-yearly to her Imperial Highness, who is to have the separate and exclusive enjoyment of it, and is to be at liberty to dispose of it by will. The Emperor, also, "as a mark of his particular affection, which is not to be considered as a precedent for the future," grants to the Duchess an annual sum of 75,000 roubles (£11,250) for life, which her Royal Highness is also to be at liberty to dispose of according to her own free will and pleasure. The Emperor also assigns to his daughter a special marriage portion of 1,000,000 roubles (£150,000), to be dealt with in the same manner as the ordinary marriage portion. Her Royal Highness retains possession of her private capital, amounting, when the treaty was signed, to 600,000 roubles (£90,000).

There is to be only one household for the Duke and Duchess, and her Imperial Highness is to be at liberty to make any contribution she may please to the expense of the joint establishment; but the debts and obligations of the Duke and Duchess are not to be common to both.

If her Royal Highness should become a widow she is to have £6000 a year from the English revenues, and is to be at liberty to live in any country she pleases; and at her death, whether she die before or after the Duke, the marriage portions and interest and her private capital are to be appropriated for the benefit of her children.

In the event of her Royal Highness dying before her husband and leaving no children, the Duke is to have the enjoyment for life of the interest of the ordinary marriage portion of the Duchess, and at his death it is to revert to the Emperor of Russia. The special marriage portion would at once revert to the Emperor in the event of the Duchess dying before her husband, and without children. The only sum which would go absolutely to the Duke would be a sum of 250,000 roubles (£37,000), which is to be taken out of the marriage portion mentioned in article 5, the interest on this sum being deducted from the interest on the marriage portion, which, as already stated, his Royal Highness is to receive during his life.

Mr. Arthur W. Peel will act as Opposition Whip during the Session.

At a meeting of the representative body of the Disestablished Church of Ireland, held yesterday week, in Dublin, the following resolution was unanimously passed:—"That the sincere thanks of the representative body be given to the London committee for their liberal donation of £10,000 in aid of poor parishes in the south and west of Ireland."

A short trial-trip was made from St. Pancras to Bedford, on Saturday, of a train of Pullman's "palace cars," which have been placed by the Midland Railway directors upon their line. Two were "parlour" and two "drawing-room and sleeping cars," and the result of the test is stated to have been very satisfactory.

The Commissioners of Inland Revenue have arranged that lists of all persons licensed to keep dogs shall be exhibited at the police stations of the district to which they belong on April 1, and proceedings are to be taken against all defaulters who are discovered. The penalty for keeping a dog without a license is £5, which the magistrate before whom a defaulter is summoned may reduce to 25s., but no lower.

The council of the Royal United Service Institution, having decided that a gold medal be granted annually for the best essay on a naval or a military subject, to be determined on each year by the council, have made known the conditions of competition. The following is the subject for the essay to be rendered on or before Dec. 1, 1874:—"On the best mode of providing recruits and forming reserves for the British Army, taking into consideration its varied duties in peace and war."

Sir Samuel Baker, in reply to a complimentary address presented to him by the Liverpool Chamber of Commerce, yesterday week, expressed a belief that Africa would never be civilised by the simple preaching of missionaries, however noble the ideas of the societies and of the individuals might be. The time had not arrived when the natives could listen to theological teaching; the time had, however, always existed when the natives, who were men of common sense, would attend to what would benefit their own position. Nothing could benefit savages so much as the introduction of commerce.

DEPUTATIONS TO MINISTERS.

A small army of deputations descended upon Downing-street yesterday week.

Lord Derby received a deputation from the Associated Chambers of Commerce, who urged an assimilation of the patent laws of all countries by international convention. His Lordship was also addressed upon the trade with Spain and Portugal, and the expediency was pointed out of entering into negotiations by which British manufactures may be admitted in these countries on much more favourable terms than at present, and their wines be admitted into England upon virtually the same footing as those grown in other countries.

Mr. Disraeli received a deputation of the same body, who waited upon him to propose the appointment of a Minister of Commerce, with a seat in the Cabinet. Mr. Disraeli promised his best consideration of the subject, but he reminded the deputation of the great difficulties which exist in the way of setting up new institutions in an old country like England.

Deputations on the subjects of railway management and the operation of the Workshops and Factories Acts had an interview with the Home Secretary. Mr. Mundella reiterated the demand of the public for an inquiry into the causes of railway accidents, and a more efficient system of precaution.

Another detachment was detailed against the Postmaster-General to memorialise him on cheap telegraphy and the desirability of having a wire to Lundy Island. Lord John Manners intimated that this would form part of a comprehensive scheme now being matured. The memorial in favour of sixpenny telegrams his Lordship treated as a question of revenue, and made a note of it.

Monday's deputations comprised one to the Premier on local taxation and another to the Chancellor of the Exchequer on the brewers' license duty.

The first was a combined demonstration of the Central Chamber of Agriculture and the Metropolitan Poor-Rate League. Its views were expressed by Lord Hamilton, Mr. Dudley Baxter, Mr. Albert Pell, M.P., and other gentlemen. In his reply Mr. Disraeli recalled the occasion, some twenty-five years ago, when he first advocated in the House redress for real property. This he carefully defined to be redress not for land alone, but for all realised property.

The brewers' deputation was strong numerically, and presented an imposing front of M.P.s. Mr. Pryor, chairman of the Central Brewers' License Repeal Association, stated the grounds on which remission of the duty was claimed. Sir Stafford Northcote, having recognised the magnitude of the case, promised to lay it before his colleagues.

A deputation of gentlemen connected with the sugar trade waited upon the Chancellor of the Exchequer on Tuesday, and asked for the remission of the remaining portion of the sugar duties. The right hon. Baronet promised to examine the question in all its bearings, and with reference to other remissions of taxation which had been pressed upon him.

ASTRONOMICAL OCCURRENCES IN APRIL.

(From the "Illustrated London Almanack.")

DURING the year there will be two Eclipses of the Sun and two of the Moon. The first is a TOTAL ECLIPSE OF THE SUN on April 16, but not visible from England. It will be visible from the South Atlantic Ocean and part of Africa. The central eclipse begins at 1h. 4m. p.m., in longitude 48 deg. west of Greenwich, and latitude 78 deg. 10 min. south, and the central eclipse will end at 2h. 57m. p.m., in longitude 39 deg. 53 min. east of Greenwich, and latitude 29 deg. 45 min. south. At the Cape of Good Hope there will be a large partial eclipse, beginning at 2h. 38m. p.m., the middle at 3h. 50m., and ending at 4h. 56m., mean time at the Cape.

The MOON is near and to the right of Saturn on the morning of the 11th, and to the left of this planet on the morning of the 12th. She is near Mercury on the 14th, Venus on the 17th, Mars on the 18th, and Jupiter on the 27th. Her phases or changes of times are:—

Full Moon	on the 1st	at 19 minutes	after 11h.	in the afternoon.
Last Quarter	" 9th	" 20	" 10	" afternoon.

"Joe," the chimpanzee which for three years has had the honour of a separate apartment in the monkey-house at the Zoological Society's Gardens, has died, after about two months' illness. Joe was probably one of the best-tempered and most accomplished of his tribe that ever existed.

Under the Public Health Act, yesterday week, the sanitary authorities and police of a place near Newbury demolished a hovel which had been built by a man named John Lawrence on a secluded part of Brookham-common. In this hut, which was composed of hurdles, turf, and straw, the man, his wife, two grown daughters, and a troop of small children lived without any kind of ventilation or sanitary arrangements whatever. They were, on being expelled, furnished with tickets to the Newbury Union Workhouse.

CURIOUS WILLS.

(Contributed by the Author of "Flemish Interiors, &c.")

WILL OF MAXIMILIAN I., EMPEROR OF GERMANY.

Everyone has visited Innsprück: everyone, therefore, knows and has admired, with mingled awe and astonishment, that monument of monuments raised to the mighty memory of Maximilian I. in the old Franciscan church by Ferdinand I.

The pride of this Monarch of eight feet high, who seemed destined by Nature's self to dominate other men—who added to his numerous titles that of Pontifex Maximus, and aspired to become, not only Pope, but "canonized saint," in order to be worshipped by his daughter and by posterity—appears, before his death, to have descended to a very sober view of mortal grandeur.

His will, dated 1519, affords a striking, not to say touching, evidence of his changed convictions, being penned in a spirit of profound humility.

Therein he orders that:—"As soon as he is dead his head shall be shaven, his teeth drawn out, pounded to powder publicly in the Royal chapel; that his body, having been left there all day, without pomp or state, should be thrust into a sack filled with quick lime, and that, covered with a piece of white cloth, it should be deposited in a coffin; that it should then be buried in the church of the palace of Neustadt, under the altar of the chapel of St. George. Care was to be taken that the head and heart should be immediately beneath the feet of the celebrant, who would thus tread on them every time mass was said there." These directions were strictly carried out; and although it was intended that his remains should be removed to this mausoleum, the ceremony was deferred from time to time, and they still repose in their original depository.

THE WILL OF MONTAIGNE.

Anthomne, in his "Commentaires sur les Coutumes de la Ville de Bordeaux," tells us that—

... "Montaigne, finding his end approaching, rose from his bed, and, throwing around him a dressing-gown, opened his secrétaire, called around him all his servants and such other legatees as he had named in his will, and then and there proceeded to count out to them severally the bequests he had made them, thus forestalling any difficulties his heirs, executors, or administrators might raise against satisfying them after his death."

This trait, which does honour to the judgment as well as the generosity and consideration of the great philosopher and essayist, is not related by any of his biographers, yet is it well worthy of record and of imitation. We may add it is eminently characteristic of a man whose motto may be said to have been "Que scay-je?" Congenial with this spirit of Pyrrhonism is the phrase attributed to him on his death-bed, "Je vais chercher un grand peut-être!" This has, nevertheless, been strongly denied, and it is asserted, on the other hand, that Montaigne died while mass was, by his own desire, being celebrated in his room, and at the very moment of the elevation. He was born February, 1533, and died September, 1592.

WILL OF VAUGELAS, THE GRAMMARIAN.

This eccentric but admirable individual, whose name is familiar to every student of French literature, lived during the period of what may fairly be considered its renaissance, and was as highly esteemed for his unobtrusive virtues as he was respected for his profound science in the branch of letters which he made his own. This knowledge it was that procured him the entrée to the exclusive circle of "Beaux-esprits" and "Précieuses" who constituted that modern Parnassus known as the "Salon bleu." When the authors of that day, surrounded by illustrious amateurs, assembled in that consecrated temple of the muses to read the proofs of works destined to become immortal, Vaugelas was the supreme authority to whose knowledge and judgment all questions of orthographical accuracy and even of literary taste were referred by those votaries of letters; and such men as Boileau-Despreaux, the grand Corneille, and Racine bowed to his dicta.

Vaugelas was in receipt of several pensions, but so prodigal was he in his liberalities that he not only always remained poor, but was rarely out of debt, and finally acquired among his intimates the sobriquet of "Le Hibou," from his compulsory assumption of the habits of that bird, and only venturing into the streets at night.

His will contains much that is original, but we shall confine ourselves to one characteristic clause. After disposing of all the little he possessed to meet the claims of his creditors, he adds:—"Still, as it may be found that even after the sale of my library and effects, these funds will not suffice to pay my debts, the only means I can think of to meet them is that my body should be sold to the surgeons on the best terms that can be obtained, and the product applied as far as it will go towards the liquidation of any sums it may be found I still owe; I have been of very little service to society while I lived, I shall be glad if I can thus become of any use after I am dead."

This instance of philosophical probity is deserving of all commendation.

The state umbrella of the King of Ashantee is to be exhibited in the South Kensington Museum.

The twenty-first report of the Charity Commissioners for England and Wales has been issued. It states that the sales of charity property authorised by the board during the year have realised in the aggregate the sum of £264,543 19s. 8d. The total amount produced by the sales so authorised since 1853 is £2,748,521 10s. 7d., but a considerable portion of this sum has been either reinvested in land, or applied in other ways for the benefit of the charities entitled. With regard to the function of granting certificates of incorporation to trustees, with which the board was charged by the Act of 1872, no more than eleven such applications have yet been received, and only two certificates have been granted. The commissioners express a strong opinion that, according to past experience, corporations cannot generally be regarded as eligible trustees for the administration of charities. The net aggregate amount of stock and other securities transferred to the official trustees of charitable funds during the past year was £592,041 11s. 2d., being the largest amount hitherto so transferred in any one year. Sums amounting in all to £73,940 13s. 1d. were re-transferred or sold by the official trustees during the year, partly for the purpose of being re-invested in land, and partly with the object of providing funds for the erection of school or other buildings, or effecting other improvements of the trust estate. The amount of the stock so sold has been exceptionally large. This may be partly accounted for by the extent to which the trust funds have been drawn upon for the erection of new school buildings in pursuance of schemes established by the Endowed Schools Commissioners. The total amount of the stocks and other securities held by the official trustees on Dec. 31, 1873, was £5,690,823 13s. 9d., which belonged to 6907 charities. During the past year particulars of 310 newly-created or unrecorded charities had been entered in the register, which now contains 7139 foundations.

Forbes Edward Winslow, the sons, the acting executors; the personal estate being sworn under £45,000. The testator gives £5 to each of his nephews and nieces of his name and blood residing in England, to purchase a ring or some other suitable memorial of him; £100 to each of his sons as executors, £500 to each of his four children, £1000 and his furniture and personal effects to his wife; he also gives her the income of the residue for life, and at her death the residue is to be divided between his children.

Her Ladyship, the youngest daughter of the late John Puget, Esq., of Totteridge, Herts, married, Aug. 7, 1823, Vice-Admiral Granville George, second Lord Radstock, and leaves issue one son, Granville Augustus William, present Lord Radstock, and two daughters, of whom the younger is Lady Proctor Beauchamp.

SIR WILLIAM KEITH BALL, BART.

Sir William Keith Ball, second Baronet, of Blofield, Norfolk, died at Spenhall Hall, Warwickshire, on the 9th inst., and was interred in the family vault, at Poyning, on the 17th. He was born Oct. 27, 1791, the only son of Rear-Admiral Sir Alexander John Ball, first Baronet, the attached friend of the first Lord Nelson, by Mary Smith, his wife, daughter of John Wilson, Esq., of Westminster. The baronetcy, which is now extinct, was conferred, June 24, 1801, on his father, who was Commander of the blockade, and, after its surrender, first English Governor, of Malta. Sir William, whose death we record, succeeded to the title on the 25th of October, 1809, and married, in 1870, Louisa, daughter of Captain Yeats, R.N.

THE HON. R. CHARTERIS.

Lieutenant-Colonel the Hon. Richard Charteris, of Cahir Lodge, in the county of Tipperary, D.L., died on the 16th inst. at 16, Grosvenor-square. He was born July 25, 1822, the second son of Francis, present Earl of Wemyss and March, by Louisa, his wife, daughter of Richard, second Earl of Lucan, and was consequently next brother of Lord Eloho. Adopting the military profession, he served first in the Scots Fusilier Guards and afterwards in the Grenadier Guards. For several years he was on the staff, as Aide-de-Camp, of H.R.H. the Commander-in-Chief. Colonel Charteris married, Aug. 2, 1853, Lady Margaret Butler, eldest only surviving daughter and heiress of Richard, last Earl of Glengall, and leaves issue two sons and two daughters.

Easter Monday is not to pass away without its volunteer review. A field day has been contrived, by the authorities of the Horse Guards, for the 8000 or 10,000 men of the metropolitan regiments, the Middlesex troops being under the command of Prince Edward of Saxe-Weimar, and the Surrey brigades under Colonel Stephenson. Arrangements are being made at Dover, by Major-General Sir Alfred Horsford, K.C.B., for a field day and sham fight on a rather extensive scale, in which the combined regular and volunteer forces of the district will take part. The review will be held upon the broad undulating land stretching between Dover and Deal, at the back of Dover Castle.

The usual mode of election to the Royal Academy and other fine-art societies involves the necessity for artists first making application. John Martin objected to apply to the Royal Academy, as he insisted that that body should confer the honour unsolicited, so he was never an R.A. The Institute of Painters in Water Colours has just begun a new movement in this respect, and, on Monday evening, they selected and unanimously elected into their body seven new men, who are thus invited to join this society. The names are Messrs. Oakes, Syer, Simpson, Tenniel, Hardy, Houston, and Woolf. The society hopes, by this addition of men of the varied talent presented by these names, to give strength to their body and increased interest to their exhibition. The Institute was also the first fine-art society in this country which thought it an honour to enrol among their members the names of some of the most distinguished artists of the Continent—such as Rosa Bonheur, Gallait, Madou, and others.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS. LONDON, SATURDAY, APRIL 4, 1874.

The last scene in connection with the stirring drama of the War in Ashantee was exhibited on Monday last. Her most gracious Majesty held, in Windsor Park, a review of the little army which has returned from the Gold Coast, at which her thanks were personally offered to Sir Garnet Wolseley and his Staff, and through them conveyed to the non-commissioned officers and men. In the evening, after suitable speeches in both Houses of Parliament by the leaders respectively of the Government and the Opposition, votes of thanks were unanimously agreed to. These ceremonials, fairly representing the sentiment of the nation, have fitly brought to a close an episode in the history of our country which, however disagreeable in prospect, has served to illustrate in vivid colours the best qualities of our several defensive services.

This is not a meet occasion for analysing or characterising the causes, either remote or immediate, in which the Ashantee War took its rise. There will be a diversity of opinions respecting them, as there will be also respecting the policy which decided upon the campaign. But whatever conclusions may be arrived at in regard to matters which fall exclusively within the statesman's province, there can be but one as to the manner in which the military and naval forces commissioned to give effect to the decision of the Government have achieved the task imposed upon them. The charge which they received at the hands of the Executive Ministers of the Queen has been faithfully and triumphantly observed. The duty intrusted to them has been most ably performed. The object sought to be accomplished has been achieved, and the lustre of British arms has, under peculiarly trying and dangerous conditions, been kept untarnished.

To a very large extent, the work intrusted to Sir Garnet Wolseley and those who served under him was novel in its character and in most of its conditions. The war to be carried on was unlike almost every other war of which history makes mention. The obstacles to which the British General found himself confronted differed in almost all particulars from those which a commanding officer is usually called upon to surmount. In many respects, the expedition to the Gold Coast resembled "a leap in the dark." The position, the strength, and the ordinary tactics of the enemy were unknown. The distance between his capital and the Gold Coast was matter of conjecture only. Between the one and the other vast ranges of bush country intervened. No road between the two, capable of being traversed by a single battalion, existed. The climate during the greater part of the year is pestilential, and even during the short comparatively healthy season is fraught with danger to the health of Europeans. The campaign must be opened and closed within inexorable limits of time, and from the nature of the country and the habits of the foe it soon became clear that every conflict would have to be carried on with hosts of combatants hidden by the bush from the sight of their assailants. Into this dark valley of the Shadow of Death Sir Garnet Wolseley was bound to adventure, and from its very heart to snatch, if possible, such a triumph as might guarantee for a long period to come the security of the British Protectorate against the warlike, crafty, and ferocious Ashantee nation.

The feat of arms which has been accomplished by the handful of forces under the command of Sir Garnet Wolseley is, undoubtedly, one of the most remarkable of modern times. As far as true military instinct, backed by precise calculation and informed by trustworthy intelligence gathered from all quarters, could master the uncertainties which impended over the campaign, the "leap in the dark" was taken with as much confidence in its results as could be supplied by scientific investigation. It was well said by Lord Granville, on Monday night, that "foresight had more to do with what Sir Garnet Wolseley accomplished in the expedition than even the skill and gallantry with which it was carried out." "I have never known a case," he added, "in which a scheme was so completely planned from the beginning, and carried to a successful end by the man who conceived it." This, indeed, is the singular merit of the General's exploit. He knew what he was going to do, and he found the means to do it. He scientifically ascertained and measured all the steps to be taken, and he took them. A mistake or a failure involving but a few days' delay—nay, as Mr. Disraeli declared, "a few hours only"—would have been disastrous. Of course there did occur sundry failures of the machinery extemporised for the occasion. The native levies, as combatants, proved worthless; as carriers, turned out to be treacherous. But Sir Garnet was never without timely resource. If he had not provided beforehand for misfortunes which happened, he was able to meet and overcome them by some suitable device. There is no reason to suppose that he under-estimates the value of military routine; but he has given to his country and to the world abundant evidence to show that it is not by a pedantic adherence to routine that such a war as that in Ashantee can be carried to a successful conclusion.

It is matter for congratulation that so few lives were lost on the part of the British troops, whether by actual fighting or from the deadly nature of the climate. For the first, thanks are due to the wonderful skill with which the General drew up his plan of operations; in regard to the second, the chief merit must be attributed to the thoroughly thought-out service of the medical staff, and to the liberality with which the late Administration provided all requisite remedies and comforts. The glory of the campaign is that it has brought into the light of day not merely the discipline, the endurance, and the gallantry of the troops, but also the intelligence, patience, and resolution of every individual soldier belonging to the rank and file. They were necessarily thrown pretty frequently upon their own resources. In advancing through the bush they could seldom see the enemy they had to encounter, and very frequently lost sight of their own comrades in arms. They had, however, implicit trust in the military competence of their officers and commander-in-chief. They knew that the work given them to do was such as could be performed, and that the place in which they found themselves bound to display their gallantry was the proper place for them to fill. Hence they were never despondent, even if sometimes they were beset by perplexities; and the very fact that they were expected to make the best of their individual powers, rather than to act with the precision of a machine, seems to have added vigour to their courage, and to have inspired them with an enthusiasm which carried them triumphantly through all difficulties and perils.

The war is over—the last war of the kind, let us hope, in which we shall be entangled. The men to whose skill and gallantry the conduct of it was intrusted have been duly honoured by a thankful recognition of their services by the Queen, the Parliament, and the country. The distinction they have earned has been ungrudgingly conferred upon them. The character of the British Army has been more than fully sustained. Within the short space of six months the objects of an extremely dangerous and doubtful expedition have been substantially realised. The curtain falls upon the scene amid unanimous shouts of applause. We can only hope that it will never rise again. Our sympathy with those who have suffered bereavement in this campaign is too keen to admit of our being covetous for our country of that kind of reputation which can only be won by the effusion of blood. Nevertheless, it will be a satisfaction to the public, as it certainly is to us, to dismiss the Ashantee War from our thoughts with the satisfactory assurance that the men whom we look to for the defence of our country, whether ashore or afloat, will be found equal to any demand made upon them by the exigencies of the future.

THE DUNKELD MONUMENT TO THE 42ND HIGHLANDERS.

The additional honours won by the 42nd Royal Highlanders, the "Black Watch," in the late campaign, under Sir Garnet Wolseley, against the Ashantees, and the hearty welcome they have received on their return to England, will give fresh interest to the beautiful monument placed two years ago in the Cathedral of Dunkeld, Perthshire. This monument, publicly unveiled by the Dowager Duchess of Athole, was provided by the officers of the regiment, as a memorial of their comrades killed in battle. As the regiment was first embodied in the neighbourhood of Dunkeld, about 130 years ago, and its ranks have been largely recruited from Athol Highlanders, the venerable Cathedral of Dunkeld is a fit place for the monument, which consists of a mural tablet, 9½ ft high by 8 ft. broad, of the finest Carrara marble. The sculptor is Mr. John Steell, of Edinburgh, whose statues of the Queen, the Duke of Wellington, Professor Wilson, and Allan Ramsay, in Prince's-street, that of Lord Melville, and the noble Memorial of the Prince Consort, are conspicuous ornaments of the Scottish capital.

In this sculptured memorial tablet at Dunkeld, which is an exquisite work of art, the chief feature is a large pointed panel, surrounded by a richly-moulded and lofty framework, and filled with an alto-relievo. The subject is taken from the following lines in "The Black Mousquetaire," in the "Ingoldsby Legends":—

But a sombre sight is a battle-field,
To the sad survivor's sorrowing eye,
Where those who scorned to fly or yield
In one promiscuous carnage lie;
Where the cannon's roar
Is heard no more,
And the thick dun smoke has rolled away,
And the victor comes for a last survey
Of the well-fought field of yesterday.
No triumphs flash that haughty brow,
No proud, exulting look is there;
His eagle glance is humbled now,
As earthward bent in anxious care
It seeks the form whose stalwart pride
But yesternorn was by his side.
And there it lies!—On yonder bank
Of corpses which themselves had breath
But yesternorn—now cold and dank
With other dew than those of death!
Powerless as it had ne'er been born
The hand that clasped his yesternorn!

These touching verses have been faithfully translated into marble, and the result proves how closely related the art of the sculptor is to that of the poet. The principal figure is the officer who has visited the scene of carnage. With cap in hand, he stoops over the bodies of his comrades, mourning their sad fate. In the whole attitude of the officer there is much that is striking and impressive. The feeling which marks the expression of the countenance is seldom seen delineated in marble with such remarkable truthfulness and power. This figure may also be said to be an allegorical representation of the deep feeling of respect which the regiment bears to the memory of those whose deeds of valour have rendered the 42nd famous in the annals of our country. In passing through, among the general wreck and ruin, the officer comes upon a young ensign of the same regiment who has been killed, and whose body is lying over a gabion, with his head downwards. The brave youth still grasps with his right hand the colours which he had so gallantly borne, and with which, even in death, he refused to part. The face bears a calm and heroic expression—the figure, as a whole, presenting the very embodiment of true and devoted courage. Immediately above is another soldier, a private, who has fallen close by. In one part of the tablet is represented a fallen Russian, who is distinguished by his helmet, which is lying beside him, and by his cartouche-box with the double eagle engraved upon it.

On the freestone slab underneath the monument is the following inscription:—"In memory of the officers, non-commissioned officers, and private soldiers of the 42nd Royal Highlanders (the Black Watch), who fell in war from the creation of the regiment to the close of the Indian Mutiny, 1859. The ten independent companies of the Freacadan Dubh, or Black Watch, were formed into a regiment on Oct. 25, 1739, and the first muster took place in May, 1740, in a field between Taybridge and Aberfeldy.

Here, 'mong the hills that nursed each hardy Gael,
Our votive marble tells the soldier's tale;
Art's magic powers each perished friend recalls,
And heroes haunt these old cathedral walls.

Erected by the officers of the corps, 1872." There is also a record of the principal engagements in which the 42nd took part:—"Fontenoy, Flanders, Ticonderoga, Martinique, Guadaloupe, Havannah, Egypt, Corunna, Fuentes D'Onor, Pyrenees, Nivelle, Nive, Orthes, Toulouse, Peninsula, Waterloo, Alma, Sebastopol, Lucknow."

THE LATE CAPTAIN THOMPSON.

Among the officers of our Army whose lives have been sacrificed to the public service in the late war on the Gold Coast the name of Captain Herbert W. Thompson will claim remembrance. This gentleman lately held a commission in the 2nd Dragoon Guards (Queen's Bays), the date of his captaincy being

July, 1867. He volunteered for service in the Ashantee War, and received the appointment of Inspector-General of the Armed Native Police, who were actively employed in the early operations of the campaign. The duties and labours cast on him by this official responsibility, and greatly increased by the zeal with which he devoted his whole energy to their performance, had an exhausting effect upon his bodily strength; and he finally succumbed to the diseases of the pestilential climate of West Africa. We present a portrait of this lamented officer, from a photograph by Messrs. Elliott and Fry, of Baker-street.

THE LATE SIR SYDNEY COTTON.

The death of Lieutenant-General Sir Sydney Cotton, G.C.B., the late Governor of Chelsea Hospital, was noticed by us a month ago, but we have been compelled to defer publishing his engraved Portrait. He was one of the best officers that the British Government of India ever had in its service, though some conventional point of precedence did not admit of his becoming a Commander-in-Chief. He was a son of Mr. Henry Calvely Cotton, by Matilda, daughter of Mr. John Lockwood, of Ashstead, Surrey, and was born in 1792. He was cousin of the late Field-Marshal Viscount Combermere, and also of Sir Willoughby Cotton. In 1810 he entered the Army as a Cornet in the 22nd Light Dragoons, and proceeded to India. In 1842 and 1843, having succeeded to the command of the 28th Regiment, he took part in the operations in Scinde, under General Sir Charles Napier. On two separate occasions Sir Sydney Cotton commanded successfully expeditions of four or five thousand men against the warlike tribes in the hills beyond the Peshawur border, and against a Hindustanee colony of fanatics who had taken up a position in those hills for the purpose of disturbing the British frontier. He also commanded the 22nd Regiment in an expedition, in 1854, against the Affetees, in the Bori country. The 22nd being ordered home, Colonel Cotton exchanged into the 10th Regiment, and, at the end of 1855, was transferred to Peshawur with the rank of first-class Brigadier. In 1857, when the Indian mutiny broke out, he was the senior military officer at the important frontier station of Peshawur. The crisis was very serious; the armed population of the hills in front and on flank were known to be hostile and ready for any mischief, and the native garrison of Peshawur was ripe for revolt. The position was one of extreme peril, difficulty, and responsibility; but, after weighing all the circumstances, Brigadier Cotton resolved on disarming the sepoys, notwithstanding that the commanding officers of some of the regiments expressed the conviction that their corps were loyal. On the morning of May 22 the sepoys, having been ordered to pile arms as if for some drill purpose, were marched away from their firelocks, and the European troops—previously concealed—rushed forth, seized the arms, and conveyed them to the arsenal, the 4000 sepoys being utterly powerless. Subsequently it became known that that very day had been determined upon for a general rising of the native troops of Peshawur. In September, 1857, Lord Lawrence, who at that time was Governor of the Punjab, wrote to Sir Sydney Cotton—"In the number of good men round me in the Punjab I have been most fortunate. Whatever credit is due to the Punjab administration should be fairly shared among us all. No officer has had a more difficult part to play, or played it more ably, than yourself;" and again, in May, 1858—"No officer in India deserves better of his country during the late crisis than yourself." Referring to this period, Lord Canning, the Viceroy of India, in a letter dated November, 1860, expresses himself as follows:—"There is no doubt that the interests of the State were best consulted by keeping that frontier in your hands, for it would have been much less secure in the charge of any other divisional commander in India; and if any outbreak upon it or inroad across it had occurred, and had not been met promptly, and with a knowledge of all local difficulties, or of the way to overcome them (which no officer possessed in any degree to compare with yourself), neither you nor I should now be in India, according to all human probabilities." In 1858 Sir Sydney Cotton was elevated to the rank of Major-General, created a K.C.B., and received the thanks of the Government of India. Her Majesty subsequently was pleased to award to him the annuity granted "for distinguished and meritorious services." In 1862 Sir Sydney returned to England, after an almost uninterrupted service in India of upwards of fifty years. In 1863 he was appointed Colonel of the 10th Regiment, and during 1865 and 1866 commanded the Northern district. In 1866 he became Lieutenant-General, and in 1869 he was nominated Honorary Colonel of the Cheshire Artillery Volunteers. In 1872, on the death of his old brother officer in the 22nd, Sir John Pennefather, he was appointed Governor of Chelsea Hospital, having previously been promoted to G.C.B. Sir Sydney Cotton was married, in 1820, to Marianne, daughter of Captain Hackett, of the 22nd Light Dragoons, by whom he leaves a son, Lieut.-Colonel Lynch Stapleton Cotton. A volume published by Sir Sydney Cotton in 1868, entitled "Nine Years on the North-West Frontier of India" (Bentley, New Burlington-street), is still worthy of perusal, as a contribution to the history of the British Indian Empire during a period before and after the rebellion of 1857. It does not spare the exposure of serious faults in our Indian administration of that time.

The Portrait of Sir Sydney Cotton is from a photograph by Mr. Debenham, of Regent-street.

"EVANGELINE."

Homeward serenely she walked, with God's benediction upon her.

In this beautiful English hexameter line, which by itself makes a perfect little poem, Longfellow speaks of his Acadian peasant maiden, at Grand Pré, on the shores of the Basin of Minas, going to her father's house, the farmer Benedict Bellefontaine, after her attendance on confession in the Catholic parish church. Mr. Luxmore, in his picture now among those exhibited at the Dudley Gallery, has rendered the figure and character of Evangeline with much of that grace which comes of a true conception of a high ideal of humanity, more especially of virtuous womanhood, such as the poet designed in the heroine of this pathetic American story. We are expressly told that Evangeline had black eyes and dark brown hair, as was not unlikely in a daughter of the French colonists, or else we might rather have fancied her a fair-complexioned girl; but the artist has here followed his author with fidelity, in spite of the double meaning of the word "fair." And so we may still see the constant Evangeline, as she was to be seen a hundred and sixty years in the Nova Scotian village, in those peaceful days when still Down the long street she passed with her chaplet of beads and her missal, Wearing her Norman cap, and her kirtle of blue, and the earrings Brought in the olden time from France, and since as an heirloom, Handed down from mother to child throughout long generations. But a celestial brightness, a more ethereal beauty, Shone on her face and encircled her form, when, after confession, Homeward serenely she walked, with God's benediction upon her; When she had passed it seemed like the ceasing of exquisite music.

THE ASHANTEE WAR.

The history of the late campaign on the Gold Coast against King Coffee Calcallee and the Ashantees is now concluded. We have the pleasant duty of reporting the appropriate expressions of public approval bestowed upon our brave soldiers and sailors returned to England. An account is given in another page, to accompany the illustrations, of the welcome accorded to the 42nd Highlanders on their arrival at Portsmouth by the townspeople there, and by their comrades of the military service. The 23rd Welsh Fusiliers, the Rifle Brigade, the Marines; the detachment of Artillery, Engineers, and Army Service Corps have likewise met with a cordial reception. The sailors of the Naval Brigade, who fought as well on land as on sea, are equally deserving of honour; nor should the West India negro regiments and their English officers be forgotten, though we shall not have an opportunity of seeing them here. Those portions of the forces lately employed in the Ashantee War that could not be represented at the inspection of the troops by her Majesty in Windsor Park on Monday last are to be considered as equally sharing in the favour of their Queen and country.

It is with regret we observe, too, that several of the able and enterprising officers who undertook special services connected with the expedition have been prevented this week by illness or accident from coming with Sir Garnet Wolseley and his staff to receive in person from her Majesty the assurance of her gracious esteem. Among these gentlemen is Major William Francis Butler, of the 69th Regiment (on half pay), whose portrait we give this week bearing the title of Captain W. F. Butler—for his promotion to the rank of Major dates only from last Tuesday. He has also been rewarded with the honour of C.B. for his efforts, though circumstances made them unsuccessful, to bring up the West Akim native auxiliaries in aid of Sir Garnet Wolseley, as described in a separate notice. Sir Garnet's candid and considerate remarks, in two official despatches, upon the merits of Captain Butler and Captain W. L. Dalrymple, 88th (now Major Dalrymple), another special service officer in a very similar position, should go to the hearts of all who desire justice, above every other quality, in a superior commander. The Duke of Cambridge, by his express mention of Captain Butler in the House of Lords on Monday, proved that this beneficial spirit of fair appreciation is cherished at the head-quarters of our noble Army. The unsuccessful, indeed, are not always the least deserving, or the least competent to achieve high success with more favourable conditions. It is a most encouraging sign for the public service, and an agreeable trait of character in one so fortunate, while so prudent and skilful, as the General commanding this Ashantee expedition, that the services of Captain Butler should have been thus frankly acknowledged. We have been the more inclined to dwell upon the case of this officer, because the home-staying and reading English public is indebted to him, as elsewhere noticed, for two delightful books, "The Great Lone Land" and "The Wild North Land," which, we hope, will not be his last narratives of adventurous travel. Captains Butler and Dalrymple were invited to the Queen's dinner party at Windsor Castle on Tuesday, but were too ill to attend.

Another highly meritorious officer whose fame suddenly emerged, just after the fall of Coomassie, from the shade or passing cloud that had seemed to obscure the practical success of his performances in this war, is Captain J. H. Glover, R.N., Administrator of Lagos. We now understand, as we could not understand a few weeks ago, the complicated position of affairs which he had to deal with in his diplomatic and military commission among the native tribes on the banks of the Volta. It is very probable that the ultimate consequences of his action, and that of Captain Goldsworthy, may prove a great permanent advantage to British African policy and commerce, by opening up the navigation of that great river, which is an object quite as important as chastising the Ashantees; and we trust that our Government will keep it in view. At the same time, Sir Garnet Wolseley, when he learnt, on his return march from Coomassie, by the arrival of Captain Sartorius in his camp, where Glover's force then actually was, what it had been enabled to achieve, and of what further service it was immediately capable, bore testimony to the valuable aid Captain Glover had afforded him. There had been a time, we suspect, when they did not exactly understand each other's purposes; but Captain Glover, on receiving Sir Garnet's orders while at the Coast, at once did his duty, without remonstrance or hesitation. This example of prompt obedience to superior official authority—this frank, unselfish, ungrudging surrender of his own plans, for which he had made himself personally responsible, and of his own pretensions as an experienced agent of the Colonial Office—is highly creditable to a naval or to a military man. The details of Captain Glover's expedition, though partly stated in the despatches lately published, have not yet been fully studied. They will doubtless obtain more attention at a future time. Captain Glover is on his way home, and he will be received at Liverpool with a deserved welcome. Among the officers who accompanied or followed him in his difficult march through the East Akim country to that of the Ashantees we should remember the names of Dr. Rowe, Colonial Staff surgeon, and Lieutenant G. H. Moore, of H.M.S. Druid. It was the last-mentioned officer, with Mr. R. Bannerman, of Accra, that brought up quite an army of Aquapims and Krobos, on the very day Sir Garnet Wolseley burnt Coomassie, to join Captain Glover's band of Houssas in the Ashantee city of Dwabin, one day's march from King Coffee's metropolis and from the homeward route of our troops. If any misfortune had delayed Sir Garnet's movements in the second week of February the General would have been glad enough of Captain Glover's ready help.

The large Engraving, from the sketch drawn at the time by Mr. Melton Prior, our Special Artist with the expedition, shows the entry of Sir Garnet Wolseley and his staff into Coomassie, on the evening of Feb. 4. They had in the morning fought the battle of Ordah-su, at which King Coffee was present, and had, in the afternoon, made a toilsome march, crossing the deep swamps that surround the Ashantee capital, to reach Coomassie by nightfall. Only the General and two of the officers who accompany him are seen to be riding on mules; in that country no horses were to be procured. Our soldiers and sailors had brought in a large quantity of the muskets thrown away or yielded by the enemy, and we see them destroying these weapons by smashing them on the ground in the streets of the city, which was a very good way to let the Ashantees know, by ocular demonstration, the failure of their vaunted arms. The townspeople were, of course, obliged to give up what arms they had, but were not otherwise molested during our brief stay.

Our Parliamentary chronicle records the thanks of the two Houses, voted on Monday, to the commander, officers, soldiers, sailors, and others employed in the Ashantee War. The entertainment of Sir Garnet Wolseley and others by her Majesty the Queen at Windsor, after the review on Monday, is mentioned in our Court news. The Lord Mayor and Lady Mayoress, at the Mansion House, on Tuesday evening, entertained those gallant officers, with a very numerous company, and with their Royal Highnesses the Prince of Wales, Prince Arthur, and the Duke of Cambridge. Mr. Gathorne Hardy, the Secretary of State for War; Mr. Ward Hunt, First Lord of the Admiralty; and Lord Cardwell, the late War Minister, were present. The speech of Sir Garnet Wolseley, when his health was drunk, was listened to with great interest.

The London Gazette of Tuesday announced the promotion of Colonel Sir Garnet Wolseley, who had, while on the Gold Coast, held local and temporary rank, to the full rank of Major-General. The rank of K.C.B. is conferred upon him, as well as upon Captain John E. Comerell, R.N., V.C.; Captain Wm. N. Hewett, R.N., V.C.; Colonel Sir Archibald Alison, Bart.; Colonel John Chetham M'Leod, 42nd Highlanders; and Deputy Surgeon-General Anthony Home, V.C. Five-and-twenty officers of the Army and Navy get the rank of C.B., and twice that number are promoted in their services. Amongst them we are glad to notice Colonel Festing, R.M.A., Captain Fremantle, R.N., Captain Percy Luxmoore, R.N., Captain Grubbe, R.N., Staff-Surgeon Henry Fegan, M.D., R.N., Lieutenant John Hext, R.N., and others of the naval service. Some of our sailors and marines really did half the work of the war, both on land and on water. They began six months before the first British soldier landed at Cape Coast Castle. They were "in at the death" when Coomassie fell and the Ashantee King was conquered.

THE SIEGE OF BILBAO.

The Carlist civil war in the northern provinces of Spain has, during this week and last week, been raging more fiercely in the neighbourhood of Bilbao and the Somorrostro district, north-west of that town, extending towards the sea. The army of Don Carlos, under a veteran soldier, General Elio, who has great influence among the people of the Basque provinces, is entrenched in a strong position on Monte Abanto, and is engaged in the siege of Bilbao. A new attempt to raise the siege, former attempts having failed, is now made by Marshal Serrano, the military Dictator of the Spanish Republic, with an army of 30,000 men and forty guns. There was severe fighting on three days of last week, from the 25th to the 27th ult., but the Carlists still held the lines of Somorrostro, and persisted in the siege. The town of Bilbao has been cruelly bombarded by their artillery. This town, a scene in which forms one of our illustrations, is the capital of Biscay. It has a population of 15,000 or 20,000, with some shipping trade. It is situated on the river Nervion, or Ibaizel, six miles from the sea; but the channel up the winding river is so embarrassing to masters of ships that it is said to have given rise to the old English proverbial phrase, "in the Bilboes," for an awkward position of constraint. Bilbao has often suffered the havoc and alarms of war. In 1835 it was besieged by Zumalacarreaguy, on behalf of the old Don Carlos, during sixty days, when its defence was assisted, with eventual success, by some English sailors under Captains Ebreworth, Lapidge, Henry, and Lord John Hay. It was a thankless and profitless service, like all that England has done for Spain, whose factions, Royalist or Republican, must now be left to fight their own battles.

FOREIGN AND COLONIAL NEWS.

FRANCE.

Thursday, April 2.

The elections of Sunday last in the departments of the Gironde and the Haute Marne have resulted, as anticipated, in Republican triumphs. The Bonapartists have suffered a severe defeat in the former department, where they seemed to consider themselves certain of success. General Bertrand, their candidate, who came forward not merely as an advocate of free trade, but boldly announced himself as a partisan of the Empire and of the "appel au peuple," only succeeded in obtaining about 47,000 votes; while M. Roudier, the Republican nominee, polled over 73,000. In the Haute Marne, which has of late passed for a stronghold of Orleanism—the Prince de Joinville being one of its representatives in the Assembly—the victory of M. Danelle-Bernardin, a supporter of M. Thiers, is extremely significant. At the general elections of 1871 the Monarchical candidates polled some 45,000 votes in the Haute Marne, against 17,000 given to those who came forward as Republicans. Now, however, the result is very different, M. Bernardin defeating the Monarchical nominee by a majority of more than 11,000.

The National Assembly has adjourned until May 12, having previously voted a succession of bills after little or no discussion. The most important was the Government measure postponing the elections for the municipal councils, which met with much opposition, but was eventually passed by 334 votes to 115—nearly half the Chamber abstaining from taking part in the vote. M. Thiers addressed the Assembly for the first time since his overthrow during the debate on the new fortifications of Paris, when he remarked that he had not troubled the Chamber since his resignation, adding that he had no intention of speaking on political subjects. The defences of Paris, however, were linked, so to say, with the safety of the country, and it was that which led him to mount the tribune. The ex-President then proceeded to criticise the scheme brought forward by the Army Committee, which, he said, would entail excessive expenditure, and would make the capital the one great entrenched camp of the country, besides necessitating a most formidable army for its defence. His own system consisted in fortifying certain heights in the vicinity of the present fortifications, in order to protect Paris against a bombardment. He concluded a most forcible speech by asking for an adjournment for six weeks to allow of the Government scheme being carefully examined, and quitted the tribune amid the loud plaudits of the Left. General Chabaud-Latour replied, and, after a short debate, the Army Committee Bill was eventually agreed to by a majority of 196.

The same day's sitting was enlivened by a stirring and unlooked-for incident. Following up the attacks recently made by Legitimist deputies against the Septennat, M. Dahirel—a staunch supporter of Henri V.—presented a bill enacting that on June 1, 1874, the Assembly should decide by a public vote between the Monarchy and the Republic. The announcement of this motion occasioned great tumult, which increased when M. de Kerdrel rose, and, while proclaiming himself as good a Royalist as M. Dahirel, protested that not a single hour could be subtracted from Marshal MacMahon's seven-years' lease of power, unless—and this afterthought drew forth an explosion of laughter from the Left—the Marshal himself chose to resign. M. de Kerdrel demanded urgency for his proposition, which was opposed by the Duc de Broglie, who remarked that no one had the right to interpret the intentions of the Marshal, who was bound by his own words alone. The proposition was eventually negatived by 330 noes to 256 ayes.

The last acts of the Assembly before adjourning were to confirm the Ducs d'Alençon and de Penthièvre in their military and naval ranks, and to authorise the Government to remove the sequestration placed upon certain landed property belonging to the late Emperor Napoleon.

M. Hugelmann, a Bonapartist journalist and police spy, some time editor of the Nain Jaune and the London Situation, and whose name used to be frequently mixed up in the scandals of the Second Empire, has been condemned to five years' imprisonment by the Paris Court of Correctional Police, on various charges of swindling and extorting money by threats.

SPAIN.

We are without any precise information as to the fighting at Somorrostro. As usual, both sides claim the victory; but, on a comparison of the telegrams from different sources, we incline to the belief that the Republicans have the best of it. They have carried some strong redoubts of the Carlists; but, on the other hand, the main position of the latter is intact, and the siege of Bilbao has not been raised. Such, at least, was the state of things when we went to press on Wednesday with our early edition.

ITALY.

After the transaction of various business, the Parliament adjourned last Saturday until April 14.

The Pope received the students of the Catholic University of Rome on Tuesday, and made them an address, praising their fidelity to religious principles and recommending to them a zealous pursuit of their sacred studies. The Papal Consistory has been postponed until after Easter.

The band led by the notorious brigand chief Donato has been destroyed by the Government troops. The province of Catanzaro is thus completely freed from brigands.

HOLLAND.

A despatch from Acheen, dated the 24th ult., announces that Gighen has recognised the Dutch sovereignty, and that the submission of other chiefs is probable. They are only prevented, it is said, from yielding allegiance by the fear that the Dutch will shortly take their departure.

GERMANY.

In the German Parliament, on Saturday last, the bill establishing civil marriages throughout the empire was read the third time; and, other business having been disposed of, the House adjourned until the 9th inst.

An interview which took place lately between the Emperor William and Herr Forckenbeck having ended in his Imperial Majesty charging him to act as an intermediary in the present Parliamentary difficulties, Herr Forckenbeck, upon the evening of the same day, summoned a meeting of members supposed to be inclined to vote in favour of the Governmental measures, the result of which has been stated to have been most satisfactory. Official personages now feel confident that a majority will be obtained for the bills, the success of which the Emperor has so much at heart.

It is stated that Prince Bismarck has made a speech to two Conservative members of the German Reichstag, in which he expressed his disapprobation of the attitude adopted by that body, declaring that the present state of things was fatal to the best interests of the empire.

Without disturbance, the Roman Catholic Archbishop of Cologne was arrested on Tuesday morning.

DENMARK.

A brilliant masked ball was recently given by the King at the Palace of Amalienborg, being the first fête of this character which has been given by the Danish Court since the year 1803, in the reign of Christian VII.

The Diet has finally adopted the estimates and financial law for the current year. The proposal of the Government to increase the salaries of Government officials was not agreed to, but a resolution was passed requesting the Ministry to lay before the Diet on its reassembling in October a proposal to improve the pecuniary position of all public functionaries, the provision to be retrospective. The Minister of Finance agreed to this resolution. The Diet has adjourned.

AUSTRO-HUNGARY.

In the Lower House of the Austrian Reichsrath, on Saturday last, a number of deputies submitted a resolution calling upon the Government to bring in a bill for the expulsion of the Jesuits, and all religious orders affiliated to them, from the Austrian empire.

GREECE.

The Bulgarian Ministry, having lost its majority in the Chamber, has tendered its resignation, which has been accepted by the King. After the resignation of M. Bulgaria, the King requested M. Deligeorgis to form a new Cabinet; but, on the failure of the latter in his efforts to obey the Royal command, M. Bulgaria has consented to retain office.

TURKEY.

The new Budget very nearly shows an equilibrium of receipts and expenditure.

A movement to vary the succession to the Turkish Throne is being initiated by the Grand Vizier. He has invited the commanders of the different army corps to express their opinions on the popularity of such an alteration.

The difference between Great Britain and Turkey in the Lahej affair has been settled, the Turkish Government having telegraphed to the commander of the Turkish troops in Yemen to deliver up the son of the Sheikh of Alown to the British authorities.

Rashid Pasha invited all the foreign representatives to a conference at his residence, to consider the letter of M. de Lesseps to the Porte declaring that he will obey the orders of the Porte, but will hold the Turkish Government responsible for the loss that the new method of collecting the dues may occasion to the Suez Canal Company. M. de Lesseps estimates this loss at £30,000 monthly. The conference had no result.

The Sublime Porte has decreed that a junction between the Turkish and Servian Railways shall be made by way of Niche.

AMERICA.

The Senate has passed a resolution concurring with the House of Representatives in fixing the limit of the legal-tender circulation at 400,000,000 dols. By 28 votes against 23, it has rejected a resolution proposing to appoint January, 1876, as the date for the resumption of specie payments.

Gold sales are to be resumed by the Washington Treasury. Mr. Richardson has ordered sales to the amount of five million dollars for this month.

The House of Representatives has, by 121 to 116, passed the Granges Bill creating a board of nine commissioners, to be appointed by the President, to regulate railway transportation charges.

Virginian bondholders have found a gracious recognition in the Governor's message to the State Legislature. He recommends that they be paid 4 per cent of their overdue interest, and have the remainder equitably arranged for.

CANADA.

A telegram from Ottawa gives the substance of the speech made by the Governor-General in opening the Dominion Parliament. He promises that a new electoral bill shall be introduced for establishing vote by ballot. The other measures promised are an insolvency bill, a bill respecting the militia, the bills on the construction of the Pacific Railway, and the improvement of the canals and other public works. The speech announces that negotiations are in progress for the renewal of the Reciprocity Treaty with the United States. It expresses regret at the fact that the revenue for the current year shows a deficiency needing a new fiscal arrangement, but congratulates Parliament upon the steady progress of the country.

Sir John Macdonald has resigned the leadership of the Opposition.

Mr. David Christie, of Ontario, has been appointed President of the Senate; and Mr. Timothy Anglin, of New Brunswick, has been elected Speaker of the House of Commons.

AUSTRALIA.

The first batch of elections show a majority against the Government's constitutional scheme.

The English Eleven won the cricket-match at Adelaide in one innings. They embarked for England by mail steamer on the 28th ult.

Rochefort, Groussat, Gourde, Ballière, and two other Communist prisoners have escaped from New Caledonia. They left as stowaways on board a vessel bound for Newcastle, New South Wales. They had reached Sydney, and were to leave immediately for Europe.

INDIA.

A telegram from Calcutta states that Sir George Campbell, the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal, will leave for England in April, his health not permitting him to remain in India during the hot season.

A few particulars relating to the Bengal famine are given below.

Fifty-eight Mohammedans, who were implicated in the recent riots against the Parsees at Bombay, have been sentenced to five years' imprisonment.

The treaty concluded between Yarkund and the Indian Government provides for unrestricted trade, the transit of goods at a moderate tariff, and the appointment of representatives of the contracting parties at Yarkund and Calcutta.

THE FAMINE IN BENGAL.

The telegraph reports of this week from Calcutta tell us that the relief operations of Government are ahead of the famine everywhere, except in portions of Tirhoot, where lost ground is also being recovered. It is stated that 120,000 tons of Government grain have been stored in the famine districts, and 80,000 tons are in transit, the railways conveying 35,000 tons daily. Above 700,000 persons are employed on the relief works, and 10,000 are receiving charitable relief. No deaths are anywhere reported, except in Tirhoot, where inquiry shows that few are attributable to starvation.

At the weekly meeting, on Monday, of the Mansion House Indian Relief Fund Committee the Lord Mayor read a letter, dated March 6, from the Hon. Mr. Schalk, the chairman of the Central Relief Committee at Calcutta. Besides inclosing a selection of extracts concerning the state of the districts affected, it contained a warm acknowledgment of the large sums so generously subscribed by the citizens of London for the relief of Indian distress. The Lord Mayor said the fund was receiving from the public at present about £7000 a week, and the committee had now in hand upwards of £6000. He was glad to find that the country towns, York, Manchester, Salford, and other important northern communities, had at length joined them in raising relief for the sufferers.

The great difficulty felt in Bengal is that of conveyance into every district for the rice and grain of other kinds which are actually in store to a sufficient amount for present need. The vehicles, whether on land or water, available for this purpose, off the lines of railroad and other main traffic, are of the rudest construction. We lately gave an illustration of the kind of barge in native use to be found on the rivers and canals of India; we now present one of the bullock-carts or "hackeries," which are equally slow and clumsy. Both are from sketches made in that country by Mr. William Simpson, our well-known travelled Special Artist. His collection of other sketches and finished water-colour drawings, now open to public view at the Burlington Gallery, 191, Piccadilly, attracts a daily throng of visitors. They are at once pleased and instructed by the immense variety of scenes, figures, costumes, and actions, in many different parts of Europe, Asia, Egypt and Abyssinia, Japan, and North America, so truthfully and forcibly portrayed. As a comprehensive study of geography, ethnology, and contemporary history, it would be very useful to follow Mr. Simpson's "Round the World" with the reading of some recent books of travel, one of which should be his "Meeting the Sun." He is a modern Ulysses, of the pencil and sketch-book.

Qui mores hominum multorum vidit et urbes.

A Germano-Belgian alliance is announced, the eldest son of the Duke and Duchess of Saxe-Coburg being about to marry Princess Louise, daughter of King Leopold.

By telegraph from Yokohama tidings have reached us of a great calamity, involving the loss of eighty-nine lives. It appears that, during rainy weather, the steamer Nil struck on a rock, and then, backing into deep water, went down by the head. Only three of the crew and one passenger were saved.

Some official correspondence between the British and Russian Governments on the subject of Central Asia has been published. The correspondence has been exchanged since the treaty of Khiva was concluded. Prince Gortschakoff, in reply to a despatch of Lord Granville, states that Russia continues to regard Afghanistan as entirely beyond its sphere of action. It has no intention of undertaking an expedition against the Turcoman tribes; but, should the latter attack or plunder, the Russian Government would be compelled to punish them. It would be for the Emir of Cabul to make the Turcomans understand that if they provoke rigorous measures by acts of depredation they have nothing to expect from him. "The Indian Government," adds Prince Gortschakoff, "is certainly in a position to give him this advice in a form which will ensure its effectiveness."

In a letter to the Grand Duke of Saxe-Weimar, Herr Gerhard Rohlfs, the German explorer in the Libyan desert, expresses himself highly satisfied with the result of his visit to the oasis Dachel. He has discovered some remarkable formations of rocks, of which Herr Remelé has taken good photographs. He has also uncovered some interesting ancient tombs. In one of the caves Herr Rohlfs found seven mummies in a perfect state of preservation, covered merely by a mat, and in a sitting posture. One of these, the mat, a wooden figure, and an urn he has removed from the cave, and hopes to be able to bring to Germany, if the Khedive permits. He has also secured some other interesting objects, but he expresses apprehension that the violent rain from which Dachel has suffered since his departure may have destroyed the articles, the mud buildings in the place affording very insufficient shelter from the downpour.

NATIONAL SPORTS.

OXFORD VERSUS CAMBRIDGE.

There can be no question that the spectators at the Inter-University boat-races last Saturday, were fewer by many thousands than on the last three or four occasions. The towing-path was never inconveniently crowded, and the return passage over Hammersmith Bridge, so dreaded by the weaker sex, was accomplished with ease. This apparent diminution of interest was partly owing to the fact that eleven o'clock in the morning is the most inconvenient hour possible for business men, and partly that the race was regarded as a certainty for Cambridge. The Oxford boat was the first to appear, but Cambridge was not long behind, and at fourteen minutes past eleven they were ready for the start. The reaction in favour of Oxford, which had been so marked during the week, had quite subsided, and frequent offers of 3 to 1 on Cambridge met with no response. In the first half-dozen strokes the light blue oars showed slightly in advance, Rhodes setting a stroke of 38 to the minute, while Way was pulling 39; both, however, soon settled down to 35, and opposite Craven Cottage Cambridge had drawn clear. Way then quickened a little, and, on shooting Hammersmith Bridge—reached in 8 min. 27 sec.—was only half a length behind. As they passed the Doves, Oxford shot to the front, and a desperate struggle commenced. The rough water in Chiswick Eyot suited the Oxford boat to perfection, and it held a lead of half a length until passing the Bathing Creek, where Rhodes quickened up to 37, and in a very few strokes was a length in front. The race was then really over, as Cambridge led through Barnes Bridge by two lengths; and, though Way made another desperate effort, his crew were all to pieces, and suffered a three-lengths' defeat, in 22 min. 39 sec.—the slow time being fully accounted for by a strong wind and sluggish tide. After the long catalogue of misfortunes, which culminated in the loss of the toss, it was almost impossible that Oxford could win, and the crew deserve the greatest credit for the good fight they made up to the point when their want of condition told its inevitable tale. Too much praise cannot be given to Way, who, though far the lightest man in the boat, worked like a giant; while Rhodes, the rival stroke, showed rare patience and judgment throughout the race. We append the names of both crews, with the weights taken when they last scaled:—

The Sports took place, as usual, at Lillie-bridge on the day preceding the boat-race, and, after a fine struggle, Oxford just won, by scoring five events against four. The running was scarcely up to the usual average of University men; but both the high and broad jump and throwing the hammer produced splendid performances, as M. J. Brooks (Oxford) jumped 5 ft. 10 in.; E. J. Davies, who has for some time been quite unrivalled as a broad jumper, exceeded all his previous efforts by clearing 22 ft. 10½ in.; and G. H. Hales threw the hammer 126 ft. 9 in., which is fully a yard more than any amateur has previously accomplished. The one hundred yards produced the unusual spectacle of three men running a dead heat. In the run off M. G. Glazebrook (Oxford) got the best of the start, and at half distance led by fully two yards; but E. J. Davies (Cambridge) gradually crept up, and won by a foot. The quarter mile was an easy win for G. A. Templer (Cambridge) in 51 4-5 sec.; and E. A. Sandford (Oxford) had all his own way in the mile. When eight events had been contested, each side had won four, so victory was solely dependent on the result of the three miles. Oxford was fortunate in possessing an unusually good man in W. R. H. Stevenson, who won very easily. The time was not particularly fast; but he runs in capital form, and appears to be a thorough stayer.

The double-handed billiard-match took place at St. James's Hall on the night of the boat-race, and the single game came off at the same place on Monday evening last. E. A. Wanklyn (Christ Church) and J. M. Morris (Stirling) University played for Oxford, against C. E. Jolliffe (Trinity) and J. G. Carter (St. John's). The play was exceedingly poor in the double game, which may be imagined from the fact that scoring 500 points took the Oxford men, who eventually won by 50, no less than 3 hours 25 min. Wanklyn and Jolliffe, the winners of the Cues at their respective Universities, met in the single match, when Wanklyn showed much improved form. Certainly his best break was only 42; but he made some capital winning hazards, and won by no less than 230 points, in 1 h. 55 min. Jolliffe occasionally played some pretty cannons, but he was quite over-matched, and frequently missed the simplest strokes.

On Monday a football-match was played at Kennington Oval, under Association Rules. The boisterous weather prevented very accurate kicking; and, after a good struggle, Oxford obtained the only goal of the afternoon, and won.

The double-handed racket-match was played on Tuesday afternoon at one of the courts belonging to Prince's Club. The players were H. O. Milne and T. S. Pearson for Oxford; while E. J. Sanders and J. M. Batten wore light blue. Oxford almost invariably wins the racket-matches, and this year proved no exception to the rule, as Milne and his partner secured the first, second, fifth, and sixth games, and thus won the match by four games to two. On the following day Milne beat Sanders pretty easily in the single match by winning the first, second, and fourth games. Milne's volleys were splendid, and Sanders showed great judgment in placing the balls; but neither man served particularly well; indeed, Pearson is far the best of the four at this very important branch of the game.

An account of the chess-match appears in another column.

The hostility between the authorities at Lincoln and Liverpool is much to be regretted, as not only does it injure the sport at both places, but those who have assisted at the Lincoln Handicap lose the first day at Liverpool, and only witness the Grand National by a forced march. It might surely be arranged either that Lincoln should begin on the Monday, or that the Grand National should not be run until the Friday. Twenty-two came to the post for that race; and though it was not quite such a chapter of accidents as the Royal Steeplechase at Bristol, last week, still there were a considerable number of casualties. At the very first fence Last of the Lambs (10 st.) and Congress (11 st. 4 lb.) fell, and at the second jump Paladin (10 st. 3 lb.), Lord Colney (10 st.), and Vintner (10 st. 3 lb.) also came to grief. The last mentioned was third favourite, and, from his admirable fencing through the heavy ground at Bristol, he was considered certain to get over the country in safety: Mr. Crawshaw, who rode him, unfortunately had a very heavy fall, and splintered his collar-bone. On jumping into the course for the first time Eurotas (11 st. 8 lb.) lay well in front, and Captain Macchell's three were about last. Shortly after this, Fantôme (10 st. 10 lb.) fell and threw Page, who, however, escaped unhurt. The lot took closer order in the second round, and just before reaching the racecourse Casse Tête (11 st.) and Bretby (10 st.) both fell, the mare having broken down so badly that she is not likely to run again. A little further on Columbine (10 st. 6 lb.) also broke down, leaving Merlin (10 st. 7 lb.) and Chimney Sweep (10 st. 2 lb.) in front, while Reugny (10 st. 12 lb.) had gradually drawn up into third place. As they entered the straight, Chimney Sweep took the lead; but two hurdles from home it was apparent that Reugny had the race in hand, and, coming away after the last jump, he won as he liked by six lengths. Thus Captain Macchell and Mr. J. M. Richardson won their second Grand National in succession, and, by his masterly performances on Disturbance and Reugny, the latter has stamped himself as about the best gentleman jockey of the day. Chimney Sweep was second and Merlin third. Defence (11 st. 13 lb.) and Disturbance (12 st. 9 lb.) ran wonderfully well under their heavy weights—indeed, the last-mentioned could probably have been ridden into a place; but Eurotas, though he went the course without a mistake, was never dangerous. The minor events of the meeting need little comment. Lowlander secured the two chief hurdle-races, and promises to do great things in his new line of business; and Laburnum has taken so kindly to jumping that he may develop into a steeplechaser of the highest order. There were also two or three very interesting flat races, in one of which Tangible showed that he retains all his brilliant speed of last year. The unusually large field of thirteen came out for the Liverpool Spring Cup, which was won rather easily by Cingalima (6 st. 12 lb.). Wedmore (7 st. 6 lb.) started a very hot favourite at 6 to 4, and it is therefore needless to remark that he finished nearly last.

We much regret to record that Lord Rossmore died on Saturday morning last from the effects of internal injuries which he received by a fall when riding at the Windsor Military Steeplechases on the 20th ult. His Lordship was not twenty-three years of age. By a somewhat singular coincidence, he broke his collar-bone in the same race and at the very same fence about three years ago.

On Monday the University Athletes met the pick of the London and provincial runners at the amateur championship sports at Lillie-bridge, when some very interesting competitions took place. E. J. Davies (Cambridge) and G. A. Templer (Cambridge) repeated their victories of the previous Friday in the broad jump, one hundred yards, and quarter mile, J. Potter (London A.C.) running second to both of them. M. J. Brooks (Oxford) actually exceeded his previous fine performance by jumping 5 ft. 11 in., a height which, we imagine, will not be surpassed for a long time. W. F. P. Moore, A.A.C., made the excellent "put" of 39 ft. 11 in., beating both University cracks easily. The chief honours of the day, however, fell to W. Slade (London A.C.), who won both the one-mile and four-mile races. He ran the longer distance in 22 min. 50 sec., a time which no amateur except J. Scott has ever accomplished, and, as he came up the straight at a tremendous pace, and pulled up full of running, there is no doubt he will do much faster time, especially as the wind was very high and he had never run anything like the distance in practice. We had nearly forgotten to mention that E. Woodburn (Ulverston C.C.) won the pole-jump with a leap of 10 ft. 7 in., which is the best on record. The events were pretty equally divided, as London won four, Oxford four, and Cambridge three.

The billiard-match between S. W. Stanley and W. Timbrell, for £500 a side, took place at Liverpool last week. Both men are famous at the spot stroke, and some very large breaks were anticipated; but neither played in his best form, and Stanley, who never made more than 99 off the balls, was beaten by 114 points. Timbrell made one good break of 186, which included thirty-nine and nine spots. John Roberts, jun., an ex-champion, has recently been playing exceedingly well, and last week, in a match against Cook, made the splendid break of 800 points, which is second only to Cook's famous 936.

The Lord Chancellor has reported to the House of Lords that the claims of the Earl of Mayo, the Earl of Lisburne, and Baron Garvagh to vote at the election of representative peers for Ireland have been established to his satisfaction.

A corporal in the 1st Clackmannan Rifle Volunteers was last week sued for 10s. before the Sheriff by his commanding officer, for being inefficient during the past year, and thus causing the corps to lose his capitation grant. The Sheriff granted a decree.

Hydrophobia has visited the kennels of Earl Fitzwilliam, and several valuable hounds in his pack have had to be destroyed.—Several hounds belonging to a gentleman at Billericay have been killed by poison, which has somehow been introduced into the kennel.

Bicton, the seat of Lady Rolle, near Exmouth, was on Monday in great danger of being destroyed by fire. The servants' dwellings and the conservatories were burned out, and some damage was done to the mansion. It is feared that some works of art are lost, but the furniture and valuable paintings were removed.

The weekly return of metropolitan pauperism shows that the total number of paupers last week was 106,480, of whom 36,534 were in workhouses, and 69,946 received outdoor relief. Compared with the corresponding weeks in 1873, 1872, and 1871, these figures show a decrease of 10,169, 11,795, and 35,981 respectively. The number of vagrants relieved on the last day of the week was 654, of whom 449 were men, 162 women, and 43 children under sixteen.

The abstract accounts of the receipt and expenditure of the Commissioners of her Majesty's Woods and Forests for the year ended March 31, 1873, have been issued. The income of the Land Revenue during the year was £418,697; that of Windsor parks and woods, £6152; and of the Royal forests and woodlands, £34,054. The total receipts from these sources, including a balance of £20,298 brought forward, amounted to £479,902. The expenditure amounted to £80,448, and of the net revenue £375,000 was paid over to the Exchequer as surplus, and £24,453 returned as a balance. The rents and royalties, &c., received during the year on account of "the mines account" amounted to £42,457, and the expenses to £4153.

The regulations for the Australian mails have been relaxed. Any correspondence for Tasmania which may be addressed either "via San Francisco" or "via Singapore and Brisbane" shall be so sent; for New South Wales and New Zealand it may be sent "via Point de Galle and Melbourne" or "via Singapore and Brisbane;" for Victoria and South Australia, "via San Francisco;" and for Queensland, "via San Francisco" or "Point de Galle and Melbourne"—in addition to the ordinary routes. Mails for Western Australia are forwarded solely by "Point de Galle and Melbourne."—It is also announced that a fortnightly service between New York and Bermuda is to be established on April 16, correspondence for which must be addressed "via New York."

SKETCHES IN PARLIAMENT.

Beyond all doubt Lord Cairns acts the part of the Lord High Chancellor of England occupying the woolsack, with great effect. His tall, lithe figure, his stately but yet gracious manner, and the clearness of his voice redeem even the performance of the merely formal duties of President of the Chamber from commonplace; and when he has to read a message from the Throne or a Queen's speech and when he has to make a statement like that on the Land Transfer question, his "Lyndhurst-like" elocution is most agreeably conspicuous. The Upper House has been comparatively quiescent since the first working night of the Session, but it is notable that the Duke of Richmond retains the Conservative leadership in that Chamber, the appearance of Lord Derby in that character in the debate on the Address being merely temporary. That noble Earl is said to be the incarnation of common sense, and is nothing if not practical; and doubtless he is as well aware as all those who have studied his developments that he has not the promptitude of speech and the rapidity of perception which are necessary to a leader even in the Lords, and so he has judiciously declined to take that position upon him, though it was pressed on him long ago. It is to be observed that the custom introduced by the late Government of putting forward the younger subordinate officials, which made the Marquis of Lansdowne, the Earl of Camperdown, and the Earl of Morley frequent respondents to questions, has been at least partially adopted by the present Ministry; for the Earl of Dunmore, who is only a Lord in Waiting in the Queen's household, has been employed to deal with the less weighty matters which have as yet come before the House. The country, and Ireland in particular, may be congratulated on the fact that the Earl of Leitrim is in excellent preservation, and has already begun that habit—delightful to the Lord Chancellor and the one other peer, who are obliged to remain to keep a House—of soliloquising upon a local or personal matter for periods varying from three quarters to an hour and a half.

It is not to be presumed that because they are in adversity the members of the late Government have ceased to be objects of interest, and therefore it may not be out of place to mention that Mr. Gladstone, for the most part, has forsaken the House, and when he does come in stays but a few minutes. The appearances of most of his late colleagues have been fitful and not prolonged, perhaps Mr. W. E. Forster being the most constant, supported by Sir Henry James and Mr. Knatchbull-Hugessen. As to Sir William Vernon-Harcourt, he has never but once perched on the front Opposition bench. It is remarkable, too, that the attendance of the departmental members of the Government is very slack; they are there if they are likely to be wanted; but mostly they are absent, presumably in their bureaux, being coached up in the technicalities of their offices by the permanent officials. However, when they have to reply to interpellations, though usually premising that as yet they are in the natural state of bewilderment necessarily coincident with their novitiate, they show sufficient aptitude at response, and, above all, a terseness, a brevity, and a clearness which contrast with the system, which prevailed in the former Ministry, of turning answers to questions into long speeches, beginning with the creation of the subject referred to, and exhausting its history even to the very moment that they are speaking of it. The greatest sinners in this respect were Mr. Gladstone, Mr. W. E. Forster, and Mr. Bruce, who indulged in a copious rotundity of speech which converted the dealing with a simple interpellation into a small debate. Always tactical and conciliatory, Mr. Disraeli seems more careful than ever to preserve that manner; and in one or two instances where he has had to refuse requests he has so managed that the postulants seemed as gratified as if their wishes had been complied with. In particular, Mr. Cross, the new Home Secretary, has caught the right tone and manner in answering awkward questions an instance of which was to be found when he was replying to Mr. Anderson's lumbering inquiry whether an amnesty was about to be granted to the Fenian convicts now undergoing various terms of penal servitude. In three sentences he gave all necessary details; and in one, decisive, emphatic, and with fewest possible words in it he signified that there was no such intention. It was a model reply to a question on a rather prickly subject. Perhaps an exception to the Ministerial facility in dealing with interpellations is to be found in Mr. Bourke, whose communications are not more than whispers, available only to the First Clerk at the table; but it may be of no consequence after all.

Notwithstanding his palpable defeat a few days before, on a question touching the Ballot Act, Sir Charles Dilke bravely brought on a motion for overhauling the whole of the machinery and working of the new system of voting. Certainly he maintained himself like a good man struggling with difficulties; though of necessity and insensibly perhaps, he was not so dominant and asserting as he usually is, and, that being so, his speech was one of the best he has yet delivered. His case was put with great lucidity, and illustrated fully, even to redundancy; and it was somewhat amusing to see an extreme Radical pulling to pieces a measure founded on one of the points of the "Charter," if anybody remembers what that was. To be sure, he was not assailing the principle, but desiring to perfect its working of the ballot; but from some of the few ironical cheers which the Conservatives gave out, it might have been thought that they conceived that the situation of Sir Charles was an anomalous one. It was something in this vein that Mr. C. E. Lewis treated the subject, and he contrived, even humorously, to make one of the great measures of the late Government look very small. Indeed, Mr. Forster, who was the author and nurse of the statute, was not very confident on its behalf; while, as to the Ministry, not a word was said by any of them, and the discussion, which did not retain even many of the new members, died of inanition.

Nothing could have been more facile and uninterrupted than the passing of certain money bills of the Government, which has enabled them to have in hand such funds as will render them utterly independent of the Legislature for two months. The East India Loan Bill, after its first propounding by Lord George Hamilton, had gone on with flowing ease until its third reading, when Sir Seymour Fitzgerald intervened. It may or may not be remembered that this gentleman was Under-Secretary for Foreign Affairs in the two former Tory Governments, and that he has held a pro-consulship in the East, having been Governor of Bombay for five years. People outside, and doubtless he himself, expected that he would have been included in the present Ministry, even in the Cabinet perhaps; but somehow this has not come to pass, and the right hon. gentleman has passed from an almost viceregal throne to a very high back bench in the House of Commons, where he is not conspicuous, and even not generally distinguishable. In all this cynical persons may find a reason for his having been very critical, his criticisms being sharpened by the sub-acidity of his manner on the Administration of India in regard to the Bengal famine.

In what may be called his perkier manner, Mr. Grant-Duff repelled the more than insinuation of mal-adroitness, if not something else, on the part of the late Government; while Lord George Hamilton retorted with a vigour and point which were intensified by the calmness of his voice and manner. There were some of the returned Indians in the House who would fain have brought on a debate—notably Mr. Dickinson, who is an acrid fault-finder about most things—but several of the more judicious and weight-carrying members deprecated that course so much that discussion was stifled.

If, as is commonly supposed, the present Session is to be remarkable for do-nothingness, it will, at least, be notable for there having been sittings of the Legislature on two consecutive Saturdays in the month of March.

It has been the fate or the fortune of Mr. Disraeli, for the second time, officially, to move a vote of thanks to the forces engaged in a successful expedition. Evidently he has not forgotten, though most people may, the stilted rhetoric which marred his speech when he was Parliamentarily celebrating the triumph of our arms (and legs) in Abyssinia. He may have remembered the peculiar effect on the House of such phrases as that "the elephants of Asia had borne the artillery of Europe over African passes which might have startled the trapper and the hunter of the Alps," and that "the standard of St. George had been planted in the mountains of Rasselas;" and he took good care now to indulge in no such incongruous rhodomontade. His address was a sketchy narrative of the operations in Ashantee from their very beginning to the moment when the last British soldier left the Gold Coast; and if there was occasionally a little floweryness in his description of the natural features of the country, as illustrating the difficulties which the troops had overcome, why, it must be taken as the inevitable accompaniment of speeches of this kind, which Mr. Disraeli has prepared, rounded, and polished, and delivers with a deliberation which shows that he does not affect to be impromptu. There was a subduedness, almost a touch of melancholy, about Mr. Gladstone's manner in seconding the motion; but his eulogy was warm, and especially apt when he spoke of the special characteristics of Sir Garnet Wolseley and the extraordinary coincidence between the conception and the execution of his plans. It may have been the tone adopted by the two leaders—the one measured and almost solemn, the other, as has been said, subdued—which influenced the House; but it can hardly be said that the proceedings elicited any boisterous enthusiasm.

PARLIAMENTARY SUMMARY.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

Yesterday week the Attorneys and Solicitors Bill and the Consolidated Fund (£1,422,797 14s. 6d.) Bill were read the second time, and, the standing orders being suspended, the second measure was read the third time and passed. The East India Loan Bill was read the first time.

The House met at half-past twelve o'clock on Saturday, when the Royal assent was given by Commission to the Consolidated Fund (£1,422,797 14s. 6d.) Bill. The East India Loan Bill and the Consolidated Fund (£7,000,000) Bill were then read the second time, and, the standing orders being suspended, were also read the third time and passed.

On Monday the Royal assent was given by Commission to the Consolidated Fund (£7,000,000) Bill and the East India Loan Bill. The Royal Commissioners were the Lord Chancellor, the Marquis of Exeter, and Lord Skelmersdale. The House was well filled. The Prince of Wales, the Duke of Edinburgh, and the Duke of Cambridge were early in their places; and several ladies occupied seats in the side galleries. A vote of thanks to Sir Garnet Wolseley and the forces engaged in the Ashantee War was moved by the Duke of Richmond, seconded by Lord Granville, and supported by the Duke of Cambridge. The motion was agreed to amid loud cheers. Their Lordships adjourned over the Easter holidays, until the 14th inst.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Yesterday week Mr. Cross, in reply to Mr. Anderson, stated that the Government does not intend to interfere with the due course of law in the case of the Fenian prisoners now under sentence of penal servitude. On the motion for the third reading of the East India Loan Bill, Sir Seymour Fitzgerald criticised Lord Northbrook's conduct with respect to the famine in Bengal. He approved of recent measures, but he thought the Viceroy had incurred great responsibility by refusing to prohibit the exportation of rice, and contended that by his slowness to appreciate the true nature of the calamity he had contributed to aggravate it. Mr. Grant-Duff said he was quite prepared to defend the Duke of Argyll and Lord Northbrook at the proper time, and Mr. Whitbread protested against a premature condemnation of the Viceroy before the House was in possession of the necessary information. Sir George Balfour and Mr. Laing also joined in opposing a discussion which could only embarrass the Government in India. Mr. Dickinson thought the operation of the bill ought to be limited to the duration of the famine. Lord George Hamilton said that the bill was limited to five years; and, with regard to Lord Northbrook's conduct, he observed that it must be judged by time and the result, and it would be presumptuous now to anticipate a verdict. Mr. Torrens and Mr. Denison made some observations, and the bill was then read the third time and passed. On going into Committee of Supply Sir Charles Dilke called attention to a number of minute deficiencies and defects in the Ballot Act, and contended that a Select Committee ought to be nominated to inquire into the subject. He had a motion for a Select Committee on the paper, which, however, he withdrew, since both the Treasury and front Opposition Benches seemed disinclined to accept it. After some other members had spoken, Mr. Forster said that he thought inquiry would be desirable, but not until the Judges had reported on the pending election petitions. The Consolidated Fund (£7,000,000) Bill was read the third time and passed, and the Middlesex Sessions Bill was passed through Committee.

The Commons met on Saturday, but merely for the purpose of attending the Royal Commission.

In a densely-crowded House, on Monday, the Prime Minister proposed a vote of thanks to Sir Garnet Wolseley and the forces employed in the Ashantee Expedition, similar to that mentioned in the foregoing summary of the proceedings in the House of Lords. After describing the state of affairs on the Gold Coast which led to the expedition, Mr. Disraeli sketched the progress of the operations which terminated with the capture of Coomassie. He added that he was mistaken if these were not feats of arms that would not be easily forgotten by the country. It was a vulgar error to associate military glory only with armies of great size—that was not a just view; and, without wishing to exaggerate the gallant deeds of which we were naturally proud, he thought he might say of them truly that they were deeds which had thrilled the hearts of households, and which, by the examples they offered of energy and endurance, were calculated to sustain and strengthen the tone of national feeling. Mr. Gladstone, in seconding the motion, referred to a remark of Mr. Disraeli to the effect that at the time when Sir Garnet Wolseley quitted England the plan of the Government was to prosecute hostilities by means of native levies, and said that in so speaking the right hon. gentleman had gone a little beyond, and at the same time had a little fallen short of, an accurate description of the views of the Government at the time. It would be strictly correct, however, to say that at that moment the Government had scarcely what could be called a plan, for he felt bound to admit that, until Sir Garnet Wolseley had reached the Gold Coast, the amount of information which they possessed, and which was to form the basis of any determination they might arrive at, was deplorably scanty. There were very few examples of cases in which the plan of a difficult operation had been so completely conceived beforehand, and, after being so completely conceived, had been executed so exactly in the manner in which it was conceived. After a few words from Colonel Loyd-Lindsay, Dr. Lush, Admiral Sir E. Wilmot, Mr. Goschen, and Colonel North (who aptly described the expedition under the circumstances in which it found itself as "a forlorn hope on a large scale"), the motion was adopted by acclamation. The House then went into Committee of Supply, and Mr. Hardy, Secretary for War, moved the Army Estimates, which, he explained, were, except as to a few minor details, in substance those of his predecessor. The motion having been put that the number of men be 128,994, Sir W. Lawson moved to reduce the number by 10,000. After considerable discussion his motion was rejected by 256 to 45. The vote of men was then agreed to, as was a vote of £2,434,500 (in addition to £2,000,000 already voted on account) for pay allowances and other charges. On the motion of Mr. Hunt, a vote was taken for 60,000 men and boys to be employed for the sea and coastguard services for the year ending March 31, 1875, including 14,000 Royal Marines (in Committee of Supply), being the same as last year. The right hon. gentleman observed that he should be prepared to make his exposition of the Navy Estimates on the 20th inst. The Public Works Loan Commissioners Bill and the Cattle Diseases (Ireland) Bill were read the second time.

The report of the Committee on Privileges, appointed to inquire into the commitment of Mr. Whalley for contempt of Court, was on Wednesday brought up and read at the table, the conclusion arrived at being that the matter was not one which demanded the attention of the House. Mr. Russell Gurney having urged that the expenses of the obsequies of Dr. Livingstone in Westminster Abbey should be borne by the public, Mr. Disraeli promised that the proposal should be considered by the Government. The Middlesex Sessions Bill was read the third time and passed, and the Public Works Loan Commissioners (Loan to School Boards) Bill and the Cattle Diseases (Ireland) Bill were passed through Committee. The Local Government Provisional Orders Bill was read the second time, and the Mutiny Bills were brought in and read the first time. The House then adjourned for the Easter recess till Monday the 13th inst.

METROPOLITAN NEWS.

At the annual general meeting of the Royal College of Physicians of London, held on Monday, Sir George Burrows, M.D., F.R.S., was re-elected president of the college.

The twelfth series of the Lambeth Baths winter meetings for the working classes was brought to a close last Saturday evening, when Mr. Morley, M.P., presided at a social gathering, at which a report containing satisfactory statements was read.

A witness has appeared before the Epping Forest Commissioners who remembers having seen a herd of deer in the forest fifty years ago. He had himself shot all kinds of game in it from the time when he was twenty years of age.

Mr. Daniel Maude, who recently retired from the office of magistrate at the Greenwich Police Court, died on Tuesday morning, at his residence at Blackheath, in his seventy-third year. The death is also announced of Mr. Horace Lloyd, Q.C., a member of the Middle Temple, a gentleman of great scientific attainments as well as of high legal position.

Several of the friends of Mr. Joseph Hatton entertained him at the Westminster Club last week, and presented him with a handsome service of plate (manufactured by Streeter), on the occasion of his retirement from the editorship of the Gentleman's Magazine. The testimonial consisted of a massive claret-jug, with four goblets, and a salver most artistically designed, together with a handsome bracelet for Mrs. Hatton. It is Mr. Hatton's intention to go to the United States.

Dr. Frankland reports, as the result of the chemical examination of the water supplied to the metropolis during March, that all the waters drawn from the Thames and Lea, except that supplied by the New River Company, was "much polluted by organic matter." The water supplied by each of the companies, except the Kent, New River, and West Middlesex, was "slightly turbid, and contained in each case living and moving organisms; it was not fit to be used for dietetic purposes." The Kent Company's deep-well water maintained its usual brightness, purity, and wholesome qualities.

A banquet was given at the Mansion House, on Tuesday, to Sir Garnet Wolseley and the officers of the Ashantee Expedition. About 250 guests were present, including the Prince of Wales, Prince Arthur, and the Duke of Cambridge. His Royal Highness the Commander-in-Chief replied to the toast of "The Army," which was also acknowledged by the Right Hon. Ward Hunt. Sir Garnet Wolseley was enthusiastically cheered in responding for himself and his gallant force. Prince Arthur proposed the health of the Lord Mayor, and Mr. Gathorne Hardy that of the Lady Mayoress and the Ladies. Mr. Ward Hunt returned thanks for the Navy, and Viscount Cardwell for the House of Lords.

Last week 2454 births and 1530 deaths were registered in London. After making due allowance for increase of population, the births exceeded by 31, whereas the deaths were 170 below, the average numbers in the corresponding week of the last ten years. The deaths included 1 from smallpox, 58 from measles, 18 from scarlet fever, 6 from diphtheria, 54 from whooping-cough, 25 from different forms of fever, and 8 from diarrhoea. The deaths referred to diseases of the respiratory organs and phthisis, which in the two previous weeks had been 584 and 649, declined last week to 551, and were 57 below the corrected average weekly number; 239 were referred to bronchitis, 172 to phthisis, and 94 to pneumonia. Different forms of violence caused 54 deaths: 45 were the result of negligence or accident, including 15 from fractures and contusions, 5 from burns and scalds, 7 from drowning, 2 from poison, and 14 (of infants under one year of age) from suffocation. A child, aged three years, was "drowned in a house from the overflow of the tide," at St. Paul's (Deptford); and a woman, aged thirty-three, engaged at lead-works, died, in Limehouse, through "convulsions from lead colic." Four cases of infanticide and 5 of suicide were registered. Three of the deaths from fractures and contusions, resulting from negligence or accident, were caused by horses or vehicles in the streets.

An especial provincial grand lodge will be held at the Guildhall, York, on Thursday next, for the installation of the Earl of Zetland as Right Worshipful Provincial Grand Master of the North and East Ridings of Yorkshire.

FINE ARTS.

WORKS FOR THE ACADEMY EXHIBITION.

We subjoin an enumeration of some of the principal works which may be expected at the ensuing exhibition at Burlington House. All criticism is purposely omitted till the works are exhibited, and thus made, so to speak, public property.

Mr. Millais, R.A.—Two landscapes, one—a study of effect—representing Scotch firs and pines, with a rich foreground relieved against a bright pale sky; the other—a study of colour—representing a cart-load of felled birch timber in an autumnal landscape, the Birnam wood of “Macbeth” forming the background. A life-size figure picture, with an old Arctic Explorer listening to his daughter as she reads over a log-book of a former voyage. Two portraits of daughters of the artist, and a portrait of a lady somewhat in the manner of Gainsborough.

W. P. Frith, R.A.—“Blessing the Children,” an elaborate composition of many figures depicting a Roman Catholic procession at Boulogne. Also four life-size single-figure subjects.

T. Faed, R.A.—The return of a disobedient daughter to her cottage home, a pathetic Scotch domestic scene.

J. R. Herbert, R.A.—“The Sower of Good Seed,” and possibly another small picture.

A. Elmore, R.A.—A scene from “Peveril of the Peak,” and perhaps a head or two.

P. Calderon, R.A.—“The Queen of the Tournament” placing a coronet on the head of a victorious knight in a mediæval hall. A minor subject picture, and a half-length portrait of a lady.

J. C. Horsley, R.A.—“Christ Healing the Sick and Afflicted,” a colossal mural decoration for a lunette in the chapel of St. Thomas's Hospital, painted at the request of the late Sir William Tite. “A Poet's Theme”—i.e., a young lady, in hunting costume of the last century, reading the complimentary verses that the young enthusiast seated at a table has addressed to her. A picture of a young lady sleeping at a sunny oriel, with a cavalier advancing towards her on tiptoe.

E. M. Ward, R.A.—Lady Rachel Russell imploring the life of her condemned husband from the obdurate King Charles II., with dramatic accessory incidents. “Marie Antoinette's Last Sleep before Execution.” “William and Mary Receiving the Lords and Commons,” the original water-colour study for the fresco in the Westminster Palace. Two minor genre pictures.

Mrs. Ward.—“An Incident in the Siege of Latham House”—i.e., a shell bursting in a room near the heroic Countess of Derby and her children.

E. Armitage, R.A.—“A Dream of Fair Women. Second Section, The Women of Greece,” a frieze-like composition of many figures. “St. John Taking Home the Virgin Mary After the Crucifixion,” a pathetic design.

W. C. T. Dobson, R.A.—“Tending Goats,” “The Cottager's Welcome,” and “Nursery Tales.” The last, which is in water colours, we shall engrave.

J. Pettie, R.A.—“A State Secret,” a red-robed cardinal burning some dangerous parchment manuscripts. “Ho, ho, ho!” a young cavalier drawing a caricature of “Old Noll” on a wall, to the great amusement of two older Royalists. “Juliet and Friar Lawrence.”

F. Leighton, R.A.—The guilty Clytemnestra watching on her tower at night for the beacon fires that shall proclaim the fall of Troy; a Greek juggler-girl tossing golden balls; a garden scene in a Moorish house at Granada; and a subject derived from the artist's recent visit to Damascus.

Mr. Hook, R.A., will probably contribute three coast subjects and a Surrey river-scene; Mr. Watts, R.A., a half-length of the Rev. James Martineau, and possibly some other portraits; Mr. F. Goodall, R.A., a Cairene fruit-girl and (if finished in time) a large Egyptian subject combining figures and landscape; and Mr. Andell, R.A., several Highland and one Spanish picture.

Characteristic works may also be expected from the following Academicians:—Messrs. Poole, Lewis, Cooper, Cope, Cooke, F. R. Pickersgill, and Hart; whilst portraiture will be represented by the president, Sir Francis Grant, and Messrs. Richmond, Wells, and Sant.

J. E. Hodgson, A.R.A.—“Returning the Salute,” a scene in the port of Tangier, with a black slave being compelled to fire a rusty old gun in answer to the salute of H.M.S. Sultan in the offing; “A Fish Market in Western Algeria,” “An Algerian Knife-Grinder.”

W. F. Yeames, A.R.A.—“The Little Suppliants”—a scene in the Bargello, with the podestà descending a flight of steps to the right of the quadrangle; young ladies preparing “Pulpit Decorations,” “A Christening Party,” and “The Hall at Cotheloe.”

E. J. Poynter, A.R.A.—Two classic groups.

H. S. Marks.—“Capital and Labour”—a scene on the scaffold of an unfinished building, indicative of a “strike” in the Middle Ages; “A Quart of Ale is a Dish for a King”—a mail servant supplying the same to wandering minstrels; “Winter,” one of a series of four large mediæval designs intended for a billiard-room, illustrative of “The Seasons.”

G. D. Leslie.—“Pot-Pourri”—two young ladies mixing dried flower-petals, herbs, and roots for china vases as a chamber perfume; “The Nut-Brown Maid.”

E. Nichol, A.R.A.—“When He has Nothing else to Do”—an old Scotchman knitting outside his cottage.

H. W. B. Davis.—Three landscapes on the neighbouring French coast, with cattle.

V. Cole, A.R.A.—A large, sunny, richly-wooded Surrey landscape; and a smaller landscape, with the morning sun dissipating mist and hoar-frost.

H. O'Neil, A.R.A.—“Ophelia” and several Scotch landscapes.

The large picture upon which Mr. F. Walker was engaged last year will, we believe, appear in the forthcoming exhibition; and Sir John Gilbert will, we understand, contribute, but we have not ascertained the subjects of his pictures.

Many works by “outsiders” will probably prove important. Our space, however, admits only of the mention of a few.

Alma Tadema.—“A Roman Painter's Studio,” with connoisseurs inspecting a picture. The principal figure is a portrait of M. Gambart, for whose villa at Nice the work was executed. A Roman female figure feeding fish. “Joseph Presiding over Pharaoh's Granary.”

J. Tissot.—An afternoon ball on board a British man-of-war off Cowes. “Visitors to London,” a scene under the portico of the National Gallery.

G. H. Boughton.—“A Pilgrimage in the Spring”—illustrative of Chaucer.

J. B. Burgess.—“A Visit by English Ladies to a Moor's House in Algiers.”

J. Brett.—Two coast scenes from the Scilly Isles.

E. Crowe.—Incidents indicative of the life of the Wigan factory-girls.

W. Gale.—Two scenes from the East, and a home subject.

P. Graham.—Waves breaking at the base of the Sutherlandshire cliffs, and a Scotch mountain side wreathed with silvery mist.

V. Princep.—“The Morning of the Race”—a party of gipsies sleeping near Newmarket-heath; a London milkmaid; and two portrait works.

W. B. Richmond.—“Prometheus Bound to the Rock.”

Heywood Hardy.—Ulysses, when driving a plough in feigned madness, avoiding to pass over his infant son, Telemachus.

F. Holl.—“Deserted,” a policeman taking charge of a foundling.

R. Lehmann.—Full-length portrait of Sir William Ferguson lecturing on the extraction of the scapula, painted for the College of Surgeons. A half-length of our late Persian Minister, one of the principal figures in the artist's large picture of the Persian concession to Baron Reuter.

B. Rivière.—Apollo charming the beasts of the forest with his lyre. A sleeping lioness.

M. Stone.—“A Golden Sorrow,” a young, childless widow peering wistfully at a rustic couple with their children.

G. A. Story.—“Grandmamma's Christmas Visitors.” A procession of girls of the Bluecoat Charity at Canterbury.

F. W. W. Topham.—Subjects from Assisi and Florence.

D. W. Wynfield.—“A Visit from the Inquisition” to a Protestant family engaged in the communion service. “A Lesson in Deportment,” a scene in a young ladies' school.

P. R. Morris.—“The Journey's End.”

Haynes Williams.—“Billeted,” a Spanish incident.

James Danby.—A sunset seascape—Pirates Attacking a Merchant-Vessel.

Figure subjects of interest may likewise be looked for from Messrs. Fildes, A. Moore, L. J. Pott, C. Green, E. Frere, J. W. Hennessy, F. Verhas, and Hayllar; and landscapes from Messrs. A. MacCallum, J. MacWhirter, Leader, C. Hunter, Van Luppen, De Haas, and De Schampheleer.

The exhibitions of the Society of British Artists, Suffolk-street, at the French Gallery, Pall-mall, and at Mr. McLean's, Haymarket, opened on Monday last. We must reserve our notices till next week.

MUSIC.

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA.

Our record this week begins with a notice of Mr. Gye's establishment, the new season of which opened on Tuesday evening, according to long previous announcement. Of the prospectus of arrangements and engagements we gave a summary three weeks ago.

The opera chosen for the opening night was “La Traviata,” and the occasion brought forward a new prima donna, whose name had not been included in the programme. Mdlle. Heilbron comes, with good prestige, from the Théâtre Italien, Paris, and her performance on Tuesday, as Violetta, fully confirmed the previous favourable reports. Her voice is a brilliant soprano, of high range (reaching to D flat in alt). She executes florid passages with facility, and can also declaim with earnestness and pathos. All these qualities were successfully displayed in the scene “Ah! fors'è lui,” which closes the first act. The admirable delivery of this important piece called forth such continued applause as to necessitate the reappearance of the singer after the fall of the curtain. The success thus established was maintained by the genuine feeling evinced by Mdlle. Heilbron in the duet with the elder Germont; in the scenes with her lover, Alfredo; and, indeed, up to the close of the opera. There can be little doubt that the performances of Mdlle. Heilbron will prove attractive during her limited stay here. Tuesday's cast of “La Traviata” was the same—irrespective of the heroine—as that of last season, including Signor Nicolini as Alfredo and Signor Cotogni as the elder Germont. Signor Vianesi was the conductor of the evening, at the commencement of which the National Anthem was given by band and chorus.

The interior of the theatre has been thoroughly restored to its original freshness and beauty.

On Thursday “Crispino e la Comare” was announced, with the first appearance here of Mdlle. Marimon (formerly of Her Majesty's Opera); and for to-night (Saturday) “La Traviata,” with the second appearance of Mdlle. Heilbron.

HER MAJESTY'S OPERA.

“Lucia di Lammermoor” was given here on Thursday week, with Mdlle. Alwina Valleria as Lucia, and the new baritone, Signor Galassi, as Aston. The lady, who was one of the débutantes of last season, has gained in vocal and dramatic power, and accordingly produced a still more favourable impression on her reappearance; Signor Galassi having confirmed the good opinions formed of him on his first appearance in the previous week. Signor Naudin was the Edgardo, and the subordinate characters were filled by Mdlle. Bauermeister and Signori Rinaldini, Campobello, and Casaboni.

On Saturday “Fidelio” was the opera, with the well-known performance of Mdlle. Titens as the heroine—one of the finest of her many fine impersonations. The occasion brought forward another of the new singers promised in Mr. Mapleson's prospectus—Herr Conrad Behrens, a genuine basso, whose resonant voice, earnest style, and capital acting were successfully displayed as Rocco, especially in the dungeon scene. Mr. Mapleson may be congratulated on the acquisition of an artist who promises to be a valuable addition to the company of Her Majesty Opera. The performance of “Fidelio” now referred to was excellent in almost all its details, and especially so as regards the principal character—that of Leonora, the devoted wife, who traces her husband to the dungeons of Don Pizarro's castle, and rescues him from imprisonment and assassination. Often and admirably as Mdlle. Titens had previously rendered this important part, never did she appear to greater advantage in it than on Saturday, when her acting and singing were of the highest order of dramatic and vocal art, as exemplified in the great scena known as the “invocation to Hope,” the duet sung with Rocco when set by him to aid in digging the grave intended for the doomed Florestan; in the magnificent quartet—for these characters and Don Pizarro, in which the wife discloses herself to her husband, and opposes a pistol to the assassin's dagger—in these and other instances the performance of Mdlle. Titens produced a thrilling effect on the large audience by which Drury-Lane Theatre was filled. Signor Urio sang the recitative and aria of Florestan with good effect, the cast in other respects having been nearly the same as in previous seasons. Mdlle. Bauermeister and Signor Rinaldini were again thoroughly efficient, respectively, as Marcellina and Jacquino. Signor Catalani proved himself a satisfactory representative of Don Pizarro, although suddenly called upon to replace Signor Agnesi in the part; and Signor Campobello sang well the music of Il Ministro.

The last of the four overtures (that in E) which Beethoven composed successively for “Fidelio” was played before the opera, and the third and grandest of all (in C) was given between the acts, its splendid execution having necessitated its repetition, another encore having been that of the quartet (canon) in the first act. Sir M. Costa conducted, as usual.

On Tuesday “Norma” was announced, with a new Orovoso in the person of Signor Costa, of whom we must take another opportunity to speak. On Thursday a repetition of “Fidelio” was announced; and for to-night (Saturday) “Rigoletto,” with the second appearance of Mlle. Lodi.

The British Orchestral Society gave the fifth concert, and last but one, of the second season, on Thursday week, when a new symphony by Mr. G. A. Macfarren, composed specially for this society, was successfully produced. Throughout the work there is much to admire, both in subject and treatment; while it must be admitted that the two principal portions, the first allegro and the finale, are over prolonged and occasionally laboured. The slow movement, a serenade, contains some flowing and melodious writing, with good orchestral contrasts; and the “gavotte” and “musette,” which stand in place of the usual minuet (or scherzo) and trio, pleased so much by their reflection of the antique character of those forms, that they had to be repeated. The symphony was much applauded, and the composer called forward. The other orchestral pieces were Mendelssohn's overture to “Iluy Blas,” that by Sir W. S. Bennett entitled “Paradise and the Peri,” and Nicolai's to “The Merry Wives of Windsor,” the instrumental selection having been completed by a difficult (but uninteresting) concerto for the violoncello by Kummer, finely played by Mr. Edward Howell; and a romance and spirited tarantella for violin, by Mr. Berthold Tours, admirably executed by Mr. Carrodus, who had to repeat the latter movement. The vocalists were Misses Rose Hersee and Lucy Franklin and Mr. Maybrick. Mr. G. Mount conducted, as usual.

The Crystal Palace Concert of Saturday (the twenty-second of the present series) brought forward an overture by Herr Carl Reinecke, belonging to his operetta, entitled “An Adventure of Handel.” The piece is bright and melodious, and includes an effective treatment of the well-known air, “The Harmonious Blacksmith.” Mr. Oscar Beringer gave a brilliant performance of Liszt's “Concerto-Symphonie” for pianoforte (with orchestral accompaniments), the instrumental selection having been completed by Beethoven's overture to “Coriolan,” and his septet—the latter with all the stringed instruments of the band. The vocalists were Madame Noriny—a débutante who was favourably received—and Mr. Santley.

The sixteenth season of the Monday Popular Concerts closed, this week, with the usual special performance for the director's benefit. The programme, as customary on these occasions, was of unusual length and variety. The instrumental music included the co-operation of Madame Norman-Néruda and Herr Joachim as solo violinists; and Miss Agnes Zimmermann, Mr. Charles Hallé, and Mr. Franklin Taylor as pianists. Mr. Santley was the solo singer; and the vocal music comprised some national part-songs, very effectively given, by the Swedish ladies' quartet, who were encored in one of their pieces. Sir Julius Benedict conducted. These interesting and important concerts will enter on their seventeenth season in November.

A concert was given last week, at the residence of Mr. Lehmann, in Berkeley-square, for the purpose of augmenting the funds of the Mendelssohn Scholarship, so as to provide for more thoroughly carrying out the original intentions than was found practicable with the limited capital (£1855) hitherto available. An interesting selection of music was performed by eminent artists, Sir Julius Benedict having officiated as conductor; and the result will, no doubt, contribute towards the desired end, although leaving room for still further aid.

This week has been a busy one with sacred as well as with secular music. Every evening has been devoted to concerts of the former class at the Royal Albert Hall, where “The Messiah” was given on Monday, and is to be repeated to-night (Saturday), Mendelssohn's “Hymn of Praise,” and Rossini's “Stabat Mater” having been announced for Tuesday, and Bach's “Passion-Music” (St. Matthew) for Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday. On Tuesday evening a special service was held at St. Paul's Cathedral, Bach's “Passion-Music” having formed a portion thereof, in accordance with its original purpose; and on Wednesday afternoon a similar service, with the same music, took place in Westminster Abbey. On Wednesday evening the Sacred Harmonic Society gave their forty-second annual Passion-Week performance of “The Messiah,” and for yesterday (Good Friday) sacred concerts were to take place at the Crystal Palace and at the Standard and Queen's theatres.

THEATRES.

A young lady, a pupil of Mr. Ryder's, made her appearance, as Julia, in “The Hunchback,” on Saturday. Miss Leighton has decided qualifications for the stage, and as an elocutionist does credit to Mr. Ryder's teaching. She was ably assisted by Miss Bessie Edwards in the character of Helen, and by Mr. Ryder himself in that of Master Walter.

A revival took place at the Adelphi on Saturday, under a modified title—“The Prayer in the Storm; or, The Thirst for Gold.” Miss Genevieve Ward played the dual part of Blanche de Valois and Unarita. Mr. James Fernandez most effectively supported the rôle of Pedro. Mr. Brittain Wright as Guillot was as comic as he could be. Indeed, the whole was respectably cast. The musical arrangements were good, and the scenic effects carefully prepared, particularly those of the breaking up of the sea of ice.

Mr. George Dance's farce of “Petticoat Government” has been revived at the Vaudeville, and Mr. William Farren has appeared in his father's character of Hecio, with his usual success in such assumptions. Mr. Edmund Falconer's “Eileen Oge” has also proved successful at the Standard, and commanded admirable audiences. “The Peep of Day” has been acted during the present week. The oratorio of “The Messiah” was announced for Good Friday.

The petition lodged by Mr. Evelyn Ashley against the return of Mr. Baillie Cochrane has been withdrawn.

The head of the regimental Cashmere goat, the gift of her Majesty to the 23rd Royal Welsh Fusiliers, which died on the Gold Coast during the war, and was brought to England in H.M.S. Tamar, has been handed over by the officers of the regiment to Mr. Emanuel, of The Hard, Portsea, to mount as a regimental memento of the Ashantee War. The same firm has had charge of the plate belonging to the 42nd Regiment during their absence.

The revenue returns for the year, as well as for the quarter ending March 31, were issued on Tuesday evening. The total income for the financial year was £77,335,657, a net increase of £726,887 on the figures of the previous year. The items of increase are—excise, £1,387,000; stamps, £603,000; post office, £972,000; telegraph service, £195,000; miscellaneous, £85,000. On the other hand, there has been a falling off in the customs to the extent of £694,000; land tax and house duty, £13,000; income tax, £1,809,000. The revenue for the quarter has been £24,547,064, a net decrease of £377,020 as compared with the corresponding period of last year.

THE ALEXANDRE NEW SEVEN-GUINIA ORGAN HARMONIUM. Solid Oak Case. Five Octaves, and Two Footboards.

The ever-increasing musical culture in all classes of society has created a demand for new and improved instruments of a superior quality to those hitherto manufactured. The instruments now offered to the public will be found devoid of all that has hitherto been considered objectionable as regards tone. This end has been obtained by using a larger and thicker tongue, and a new system of voicing, which renders the quality rich and crisp.

Another advantage in the new system is the increased strength of the reeds, and diminished liability to go out of tune by forcing the bellows.

The new system is applied to all the large instruments with still greater effect, and without extra cost.

MR. W. H. SMITH, M.P., FINANCIAL SECRETARY TO THE TREASURY.

LAUNCH OF THE FARADAY, TELEGRAPH CABLE SHIP.

MR. W. H. SMITH, M.P.

This gentleman, who has during the last six years been one of the two Parliamentary representatives of Westminster, and has taken office as Secretary to the Treasury in Mr. Disraeli's Government, possesses the confidence of a large number of his fellow-citizens on account of his liberality of sentiment, his moderation and sound good sense. He is a son of the late Mr. William Henry Smith, the founder of that great business the sale and circulation of newspapers throughout the kingdom, to which are added the bookselling trade at nearly every railway station, and the management of a railway circulating library, besides an extensive advertising agency. The firm is styled that of Messrs. William Henry Smith and Son. Its well-known head-quarters are in the large stone house, 186, Strand, at the corner of Arundel-street; and its smart red dog carts, laden with freshly-printed papers, are to be met swiftly traversing every quarter of London at certain hours of the day. The subject of this memoir was born in Duke-street, Grosvenor-square, in 1825. He has long devoted a portion of his time to the public service as a magistrate for Hertfordshire, in which county he has a residence near Abbott's Langley; as one of the Council of King's College, London; and a member of the London School Board. The disputed questions concerning popular education have received his particular attention, and he might not unfitly have been appointed Vice-President of the Committee of Council. Mr. Smith is, of course, a Liberal Conservative, and a firm supporter of the Established Church. He contested the election for Westminster in 1865, against the late Mr. John Stuart Mill, but was defeated on that occasion. In December, 1868, he was returned for this constituency, which has again sent him to the House of Commons in the present year. His appointment in the new Ministry is popular, and we believe it is likely to prove useful.

The portrait is from a photograph by Mr. Lombardi, of Brighton.

THE FARADAY CABLE-SHIP.

A large iron steam-ship, named after that most eminent natural philosopher, the late Professor Michael Faraday, was launched, on Feb. 17, at Lower Walker, near Newcastle-on-Tyne, from the building-yard of Messrs. C. Mitchell and Co. Our Illustration has been deferred till now for want of space. The Faraday has been built to the order of Messrs. Siemens Brothers, of London, for the purpose of laying the Atlantic cable of the Direct United States Cable Company and other cables. This vessel is 360 ft. long, 52 ft. beam, 30 ft. deep, and measures 5000 tons gross register, but will carry about 6000 tons dead weight. The iron hull has been built under the inspection of Lloyd's agents, and obtained the highest certificate of classification. But the ship receives enormous additional strength from her peculiar structure. This consists chiefly of three enormous cable-tanks, constructed of plate-iron, and forming a series of double arches, supporting the sides of the vessel. These tanks are also united to, and to the general fabric of the hull, by five iron decks. The upper and main iron decks are supplemented by the usual decks of wood for the comfort and convenience of those on board. The vessel is double-bottomed, the space between the two bottoms being a network of iron girders for carrying the cable-tanks, and at the same time giving longitudinal strength to that portion of the hull. The space is further utilised for carrying water-ballast, to trim the vessel as the cable is run out, and also to enable her to make a voyage across the Atlantic without any cargo or other weight on board beyond fuel. A very complete and well devised system of valves, cocks, pipes, and auxiliary engine power has been introduced into the vessel for filling and emptying any single compartment of the double bottom, or for flooding any one of the cable-tanks. The whole system is under the control of the engineers, and is worked from the engine-room.

In outward appearance the Faraday is unlike other ocean steamers, her bow and stern being of the same form. She is also provided with a rudder at each end, the whole being so arranged that the vessel may be navigated ahead or astern, as desired, when paying out or picking up a cable. The steering is accomplished by means of a steam-engine placed amidships; and, to provide against accidents, each rudder is supplied with strong screw steering gear, worked in the usual manner by manual power. The anchors and cable chains are worked by Harfield's steam windlass, and all heavy labour about the vessel is performed by steam apparatus placed in various positions along the deck. The Faraday is rigged in the most approved manner of ocean steamers; and, for the accommodation of the large staff of officers, electricians, and crew, amounting to about 150 persons, the vessel is fitted up with the cabins and all other appliances of a large passenger-steamer, in addition to those of a cable-ship.

The Faraday will be propelled by machinery on the compound surface condensing principle, manufactured by Messrs. T. Clark and Co., of Newcastle. There are two distinct sets of engines, each working a separate screw, the vessel being thus provided with two propellers, usually called twin screw. The object of this arrangement is to obtain steering or manœuvring power, which is a very important condition in cable-laying. Each set of engines is placed vertically over the shaft, and has two cylinders, one high pressure and the other low pressure, by which great regularity of motion is obtained; and, by a high degree of expansion in working the system, an important economy of fuel is effected. By these means this great vessel is enabled to carry her immense burden of cable at an expenditure of fuel which would have seemed impracticable a few years ago.

The deck machinery required for paying out and picking up cables is manufactured by the Vulcan Foundry Company.

Mr. Plimsoll, M.P., was on Saturday evening presented with an address from various trades in Liverpool connected with the shipping interest, in which the hon. gentleman received a hearty welcome to that town.

The annual report of the directors of the National Gallery shows that the only picture purchased last year was the composition in chiaroscuro known as "The Triumph of Scipio," by Andrea Mantegna, which was purchased, in May last, for the sum of £1500. The bequests have been a portrait of Jane Elizabeth, wife of the fifth Earl of Oxford, by John Hoppner, R.A. (1759-1810), bequeathed by her daughter, Lady Langdale; and a river scene by Jan Looen (1659), Dutch school, bequeathed by the widow of Mr. Jewer Henry Jewer. Nine pictures which had become disfigured and obscured by cracks have been carefully repaired and re-varnished; and eight pictures have been protected with glass, making the total number of oil and tempera pictures so protected 313—more than a third of the whole collection. The number of persons who visited the galleries at Trafalgar-square and South Kensington on the public days during the year 1873 was 836,194 at Trafalgar-square, and 859,037 at South Kensington. The daily average attendance at Trafalgar-square for 1873 was 4410, the average for 1872 having been 4242.

NEW METEOROLOGICAL INSTRUMENT.

It will be interesting to our scientific readers to have a description of a new self-recording thermometer that has just been invented by Messrs. Negretti and Zambra, the well-known opticians.

This instrument is totally different from any other hitherto made, and is devised for the purpose of recording the exact temperature at any depth of the ocean, or for taking observations on land at any hour during the day or night.

Self-registering thermometers have been long used in deep-sea investigations, but they only give the temperature somewhere between the top and bottom of the ocean, and not at any particular spot. The instrument of which we now give an Illustration will show the exact temperature at any spot it may be desired.

In shape it is like a syphon with parallel legs, as in the annexed figure. In order to obtain a reading, the thermometer is made to revolve once on a centre, first bulb uppermost, and afterwards bulb downwards: this causes the mercury which was in the left-hand column to pass round the bend into the right-hand tube, where it remains, indicating on a graduated scale the exact temperature at the time it was turned over. The engraving shows the position of the mercury after it had been turned over. The contrivance for effecting this object may be described as a short length of wood or metal, having attached to it a small rudder or fan. This fan is placed on a pivot in connection with a second, and on this second pivot is fixed the thermometer. The fan or rudder points upwards in its descent through the water, and necessarily reverses its position in ascending. This simple motion or half turn of the rudder gives a whole turn to the thermometer. This mode of turning would be for sea purposes; but for atmospheric observations the thermometer is connected with a small clock or alarm, and can be made to turn over at any hour determined upon in the same manner as an alarm is set for going off at a certain hour. It may be said that we have, for the first time, an instrument which requires upsetting in order to obtain a correct observation.

A paper was read at the Royal Society, by Dr. Carpenter, on this instrument, and he stated that it was perfect.

ROYAL INSTITUTION LECTURES.

FERNS, HORNETAILS, AND CLUB-MOSSES.

Professor Williamson began his fifth and concluding lecture on Cryptogamic Vegetation, on Thursday week, with an account of the development of the ferns. These have a rhizome or root-stem which creeps below or upon the ground, or rises like the trunk of a tree, sometimes to a great height. The leaves or fronds, growing out of vascular bundles in the stem, are very variable in size and shape, and not only perform the functions of ordinary leaves, but also bear the fruit or buds in clusters, each cluster containing many sporangia, and each sporangium inclosing numerous uniform spores. Though there is very great diversity in the size of plants of this order, yet there is very little difference in the size of the spores. In due time the sporangium bursts, and the spores are scattered far and wide. When the spore germinates it breaks through the outer membrane, and puts forth a tubular prolongation, which increases until a small green substance appears, termed the prothallus, on the under surface of which are formed the antheridia and the pistillidia, from the latter of which proceeds the true fern. When the prothallus has done its work it perishes. In relation to the complicated structure of ferns, the Professor alluded to the larger species, ancient and modern. He then adverted to the equisetums or horse-tails, which are allied to the ferns, but present striking differences. They have slender, hollow-jointed stems, each joint terminating in a toothed membranous sheath, composed of elementary leaves. The fruit or bud is produced in terminal cones, composed of numerous stalked scales, each of which bears on its under surface a circle of sporangia, closely packed with uniform spores. These spores have a spiral covering, which, when they are ripe, breaks up into four threads called elaters, bodies which are remarkably sensitive to moisture. When placed under the microscope and gently breathed upon their movements were said to appear very ludicrous. The singularly various provisions made in the cryptogamia for dispersing the germs were described as truly wonderful. The lycopods or club-mosses were next considered. They have solid stems, composed of an axis of spiral vessels, surrounded by a thick cortical cellular layer, round which the leaves are arranged. The fruit is produced in terminal cones, composed of scales, each of which bears a small sporangium full of spores. Some species have two kinds of spores—microspores and macrospores—which appear in fossil specimens. In describing in detail the structure and development of these very interesting orders of plants, Professor Williamson referred to numerous large diagrams and to some specimens, and, in concluding, stated that the very ancient forests of which the coal formation is composed almost wholly consisted of cryptogamia, and that the existing members of this class present a striking example of the persistence of vegetable types from the earliest ages of the globe to the present day.

PHYSICAL HISTORY OF THE RHINE.

Professor Ramsay, V.P.R.S., Director-General of the Geological Survey of the United Kingdom, at the Friday evening meeting on March 27, began his discourse by expressing the great interest which he had always felt in the history of rivers, and stating that he had devoted very much attention to the Thames and the Severn, and that last year he had resumed the exploration and study of the Rhine. He then referred to a large map and diagrams, by means of which he described the present course and chief physical features of the river. The origin of certain Alpine lake basins he attributed to the ancient action of glaciers; but this idea with regard to the valley of the Rhine he immediately gave up. Such glacial action did not extend so far as to fill with a great glacier the whole plain of the Rhine between the land and the sea. He then rapidly sketched, according to the nebular hypothesis, the gradual formation of mountain chains by the shrinking of the earth's crust and its consequent contractions, and its connection with the present history of the Alps; after which he described the occasional sub-tropical climate of Switzerland in the Miocene age, with faunas and floras corresponding to it, of which abundant evidence is furnished by fossils. Professor Ramsay then adduced reasons for his opinion that during portions of the Miocene epoch the drainage through the great valley between the Schwarzwald and the Vosges ran partly from the north into the area now occupied by the Swiss Miocene rocks. Then came renewed physical disturbances of the Alps, which closed the Miocene epoch, the rocks being raised from 1200 ft. to 5800 ft. above the level of the sea. The Jura was then raised; denudations followed; the Mainz basin was isolated, and a great inclined plain was formed, sloping north from Jura to Mainz. A new and reversed drainage from south to north began; so that, after passing through the hill country between the Lake of Constance and Basel, a river flowed along an elevated inclined plain formed of Miocene deposits, of which remains, in the form of flat-topped hills of Miocene rocks, still exist at the sides of the valley between Basel and Mainz. At the same time the Rhine flowed in a minor valley through the upland country formed of Devonian rocks, which now constitute the Taunus, the Hunsrück, and the high land lying towards Bonn. By the ordinary erosive action of the great river the gorge was gradually formed and deepened to its present level. In proportion as the gorge deepened, the marshy, flat Miocene strata of the area were also in great part worn away, leaving the existing plain, which presents the deceptive appearance of having once been the site of a great lake. The Professor did not think that volcanic action had anything to do with the formation of the gorge of the Rhine. The Miocene strata lay in an approximately horizontal direction, and were not tilted in such a manner as to suggest that their absence in the basin was due to any disturbance of the strata. They must have been scooped away by the action of flowing water. In reference to the tributary rivers of the Rhine, he said that, as the plain was lowered, the Neckar and other rivers were also lowered, and as the gorge was depressed the same took place with the Moselle and other streams. It is by the study of these changes, in this and other regions, that the history of great Continental areas of drainage is arrived at. In conclusion, the Professor said that the formation of the Rhine valley, although it occupied several long ages of time, was but a brief episode in a comparatively modern part of geological history. Dr. Warren de la Rue, F.R.S., vice-president, was in the chair.

MR. WOOD'S DISCOVERIES AT EPHESUS.

Mr. Charles T. Newton, in his third and concluding lecture, on Saturday last, gave an account of Mr. Wood's operations at Ephesus, from the year 1863 to the present year. The consumption of so much time was caused partly by the unhealthiness of the place, which, during the summer months, is hardly habitable, and partly through the inadequacy of the means which, for some time, were at Mr. Wood's disposition. His original purpose was the exploration of the Temple of Diana; but, as, at first, there seemed to be no clue whatever to the discovery of its site, he, at Mr. Newton's suggestion, explored the small musical theatre (Odeum), where he found part of a statue of Lucius Verus, and four letters addressed by Antoninus Pius to the people of Ephesus. These letters form the chronological basis of the life of the rhetor Aristides by Mr. Waddington. Mr. Wood then made an excavation in the Great Theatre, where he found, built into the proscenium, a number of decrees of the people of Ephesus, made in the fourth century B.C., which, as was shown in the first lecture, throw light on the history of the city, and were, without doubt, wall-stones from the cells of the second Temple of Diana, as appears from their context. In this theatre was also found the long description containing the dedication by Salutaris of a large sum of money and many statues to the goddess. In this inscription, as pointed out in the second lecture, the procession on the birthday of the goddess was ordered to pass from the temple through the Magnesian gate to the theatre, and then back to the temple through the Korossian gate. Mr. Wood, having found two gates which appeared to correspond with the relative position of the two named in the inscription, determined to trace the line of road going out of the city from each gate, in the hope that they would converge to a point where he should find the temple. Outside the Magnesian gate he traced for some time the piers of the portico built by Damianus, in the second century A.D., for the protection of those who took part in the processions. This portico ran parallel to a road flanked on each side by tombs of the Roman period. Outside the Korossian gate was a similar portico and road, flanked by tombs. After tracing these roads for some distance, their track was lost. Mr. Wood then began sinking holes in the plain, and continued till he came upon the angle of the wall inclosing the peribolos round the temple. This was proved by an inscription inserted in duplicate in the face of the wall, which declared that the Emperor Augustus, out of the revenues of the goddess, had placed a wall round her temple and the Augusteum. This was doubtless done when he limited the extent of the asylum. This discovery took place in April, 1869. Mr. Wood then followed the lines of the peribolos wall from the angle till he lost all trace of it, at the same time sinking pits in the ground within the angle. The soil here was a deep alluvial deposit, the ancient remains being found at a depth of 20 ft. It was not till April, 1870, that the true site of the temple was discovered. In March, 1871, the excavation was sufficiently advanced to enable Mr. Wood to guess the direction in which the temple lay, and to purchase all the ground necessary for his excavations. By February, 1872, he was able to send home a large cargo of marbles in H.M.S. Caledonia. In the same year a special grant of £5000 was obtained from Parliament towards the expenses, and from this time the operations were carried on uninterruptedly and on a much larger scale, till they were brought to a close in February last. In a brief summary of the results of Mr. Wood's explorations, Mr. Newton showed the correctness of the notices of the temple by ancient writers, such as the statement of Vitruvius that the temple was dipteral, octastyle, and of the Ionic order; the much-disputed account of Pliny, that thirty-six of its columns were ornamented with reliefs, is fully confirmed by the discovery of various fragments of drums sculptured in relief. Pliny states that the entire temple measured 425 ft. by 225 ft. width, and Mr. Wood finds that the length of the platform on which the temple stood is 418 ft. by 239 ft., measured on the lowest step. This dimension sufficiently agrees with Pliny's 425 ft. for the length, if we supposed him to have used Roman feet; but the width, 239 ft., is irreconcilable with his dimension, and we must suppose some clerical error in the transcript of his text. The intercolumniation Mr. Wood makes 17 ft. 1 in.; the height of the columns, as calculated by the diameter, he finds rather too slender, if we accept Pliny's height (60 ft.). The architecture was coloured, and gold was let in between the joints. Mr. Newton described some interesting relics of the sculpture and architecture of the earlier temple, found in the course of the excavations. The layer of charcoal which, by the advice of Theodoros of Samos, had been laid under the foundations to prevent the damp rising, was still visible in several places under the lowest course of masonry. As these foundations were laid about 580 B.C., the charcoal has remained in its original position ever since. In concluding, the attention of the audience was drawn to the great merit of Mr. Wood, who had carried on his enterprise through an amount of difficulty and discouragement which those only who had been personally engaged in such operations could realise, and his sagacity and intelligence have solved a problem which has baffled archaeologists to the present time.

No lectures will be delivered next week, being Easter week.

On Tuesday, April 14, Professor Rutherford will begin a course of six lectures on the Nervous System; on Thursday, April 16, Mr. Walter Noel Hartley will begin a course of four lectures on the Atmosphere and its Relations to Life; at the Friday evening meeting, April 17, Mr. Wm. Spottiswoode, the secretary, will give a discourse on the Composition of Colours by Polarised Light; and on Saturday, April 18, Professor J. R. Seeley will begin a course of three lectures, the subject of which is not yet announced. The remaining courses will include four lectures by Mr. N. Story Maskelyne on the Physical Symmetry of Crystals; two lectures by Dr. W. H. Stone on the Theory of Musical Instruments, with musical illustrations; and five lectures by Mr. R. A. Proctor on the Planetary System.

THE RETURN OF THE TROOPS.

The arrival in England of the several regiments lately employed in the Ashantee War, the 23rd Welsh Fusiliers, the 42nd Highlanders, and the Rifle Brigade, with the detachments of Royal Engineers, Royal Artillery, Royal Marine Artillery, and Royal Marine Light Infantry, besides many sailors invalided home from their ships on the West African station, was announced last week. Their landing at Portsmouth was in each instance made the occasion of hearty popular rejoicings and of congratulations offered by the municipality of that town, the military garrison, and the commander and staff of the military district. Some account has been given of the reception of the 23rd Welsh Fusiliers when they landed, on Friday, the 20th ult. One of our illustrations now engraved is that of the presentation to this regiment, by the town of Portsmouth, of a fine white goat, with gilt horns and much decorative ribbon, to accompany its march on parade. This animal is to replace the goat presented to the Royal Welsh Fusiliers by her Majesty the Queen, which died at Cape Coast Castle. The arrival of the 42nd Highlanders, on Monday, the 23rd, was a scene of not less interest, and the different incidents which attended their welcome to England are shown in the remaining illustrations.

The "Black Watch," as this regiment has been called since it was originally raised at Dunkeld, among the men of Athol, above 130 years ago, came home in the transport-ship Sarmatian, from Cape Coast Castle. The regiment, which had numbered 687, officers and private soldiers, when it left Portsmouth on Dec. 4, now returned but 568, there being 101 invalids on their way home by other vessels. The following is the exact strength of the 42nd that landed from the Sarmatian on Monday week:—Lieutenant-Colonel M'Leod, Majors Macpherson and Scott; Captains Green, Farquharson, V.C., Bayly, Whitehead, Moore, Kidstone, Creagh, and Furse; Lieutenants Hicks, Aitken, Coveney, Cumberland, Eden, Wauchope, Brophy, Harvey, Scobie, Berwick, Stevenson, Grogan, Moubray, Annesley, McCallum, Sub-Lieutenant Munro, Paymaster Samwell, Surgeon-Major Clutterbuck, Surgeon Troup, Quartermaster Forbes, nine staff sergeants, and 530 rank and file. There were eleven invalids, including Captain Farquharson and Lieutenant Berwick, neither of them as yet fit for duty. It is, however, satisfactory to know that the general health of the regiment greatly improved on the voyage home, though four poor fellows, who were sent on board pitifully weak, gradually sank, and died. Besides the 42nd came Brigadier Sir Archibald Alison, Bart.; Captain Robinson; Lieutenants the Hon. A. H. Grosvenor and Fitzgerald, and one man of the second battalion of the Rifle Brigade; Major Home and Lieutenant Bell, of the Royal Engineers; Lieutenants Knox and Palmer, of the Royal Artillery; Captain Despard and five men of the Royal Marines; Lieutenant Jerrard of the 8th (King's) Regiment; Lieutenant Grant, of the 6th (Royal 1st Warwickshire) Regiment; Lieutenant MacGregor, of the 50th (Queen's Own) Regiment; Assistant Controller Irvine; Captain Brabazon, on special service; and forty men, mostly of the Army Service Corps.

The regiment landed at two o'clock; the arrangements, both as regards the troops detailed for the escort and the guard of honour, and their disposal, were substantially the same as on the Friday before. The only difference was that the first battalion of the 4th (King's Own) Regiment was formed up inside the dockyard, while the 100th (Royal Canadian) held the Hard, outside the gates, and fell in as escort when the 42nd came through. Punctually to the moment the "assembly" sounded, and in a few minutes the men were in their places on the jetty, waiting only for the General to begin their march home. They wore the same clothes they wore on the December morning they left England—the Glengarry, scarlet tunic, trousers of dark-green tartan, and white gaiters; the officers wore patrol jackets, and sword-belts of untanned leather, well coloured now with hard work and hard fighting. The men were in heavy marching order—greatcoat, canteen, and the new valise, which, carried in the small of the back, has superseded the old knapsack. As a body they looked well in health. They were saluted by the 4th Regiment as they crossed the dockyard, whence they marched up the Hard, Ordnance-row, and over the Gun Wharf, to Lombard-street, High-street, and Governor's Green. They were cheered by an enthusiastic multitude along the whole of the route. On Governor's Green they were received by the Mayor and Corporation of Portsmouth, and by Lord Templetown, the Lieutenant-General Commanding the Southern Military District of England. A brief address, commending the regiment, was delivered by Lord Templetown, and was replied to by Colonel M'Leod in a few appropriate words. The Mayor also presented, on behalf of the borough of Portsmouth, an address of congratulation, which Colonel M'Leod likewise acknowledged. The regiment then marched to the Clarence Barracks, where it was to be quartered.

His Royal Highness the Duke of Cambridge, Commander-in-Chief, who had inspected the 23rd Welsh Fusiliers at Shorncliffe on the Saturday, went to Portsmouth, on Tuesday week, to inspect the 42nd Highlanders. The Duke, accompanied by Sir Richard Airey, Adjutant-General, Sir Charles Elicoe, Quartermaster-General, and Colonel Willis, was met by Lord Templetown, in whose carriage he went to Government House. The Royal standard was hoisted on the King's Bastion of the fortifications, and a Royal salute was fired by the garrison and from the Admiral's flagship. The 42nd, in the same dress, tunic and trowsers, were drawn up in double line on the Governor's Green. The Commander-in-Chief and Staff entered the Green on foot, and were received with arms presented, colours lowered, and "God Save the Queen" from the band. His Royal Highness, after greeting Colonel M'Leod, walked down the ranks, and took up his position at the saluting-flag. The ground, which was kept by a party of men from the 100th (Royal Canadian) Regiment, was but thinly attended. None but officers in uniform and privileged persons, mostly ladies, were admitted within the gates. As soon as his Royal Highness was at his place the regiment took open column of companies, and, headed by their band, before whom marched the pipers who piped the Black Watch into Coomassie, went past to the well-known tune of "Highland Laddie," and back again at quarter-distance column to the quickstep of the "Blue Bonnets over the Border." The men were then formed up again in a hollow square, facing inwards, and the Duke, stepping forward into their midst, addressed them. He congratulated the Highlanders on the good work they had done, work which the fortune of war had put into their hands instead of their fellows. He complimented them on their appearance, and told them that they would before long have the honour of hearing from the lips of the Queen herself her opinion of their gallant conduct. The regiment was then marched back to barracks and his Royal Highness returned to town.

The arrival of the Rifle Brigade, second battalion, and some of the Royal Engineers, by the Himalaya, on Thursday week, was another occasion for public congratulations at Portsmouth. Those on board the Himalaya were Colonel Festing, R.M.A., Captain R. O. Jones, and forty-five non-commissioned officers and men of the Royal Engineers; Lieutenant-Colonel Warren, commanding the Rifle Brigade; Majors Stephens and J. C. P. Glyn; Captains Nicholl, Sotheby, Slade, Dugdale, Somerset, Cary, Lascelles, and Cope; Lieutenants the Hon. T. C. Scott, Sackville, Maberly, Hopwood, Thompson (adjutant), Harington, Smyth, Pridaux Brune, the Hon. O. Cuffe; Sub-Lieutenants the Hon. E. Noel, the Hon. O. C. Prittie; Paymaster Harvey, Quartermaster Stanley; Drs. Wiles and Macrobin, with 457 men of the Rifle Brigade; Surgeons O'Brien, Williamson, Gibson, Conyers, Hughes, and Grey, Army Medical Department. Captains the Hon. P. Methuen, Burnet, and Phayre. Lieutenants Pollock, Hare, and Aldridge. Special service officers, Lieutenant Deane, and thirty-six privates R.M.L.I., and the Rev. A. Wallace, whose services as additional Roman Catholic Chaplain were volunteered and were accepted by the Government. Forty-eight invalids of the Rifle Brigade and two of the Royal Engineers were landed for their health at Gibraltar. One died on the 18th inst. of fever. The Rifle Brigade are now in Winchester barracks.

The whole of the troops returned from the Ashantee war, numbering about 1600, were reviewed by her Majesty the Queen, in Windsor Great Park, on Monday last. We shall give some illustrations next week. Her Majesty, in an open carriage drawn by four ponies, was accompanied by the Princesses of Wales, the Duchesses of Edinburgh, and Princess Christian of Schleswig-Holstein. Another carriage contained Princess Louise (Marchioness of Lorne), Princess Beatrice, and Prince Leopold. The lords and ladies in waiting and Lord Cardwell were in the train of Royal carriages. The Prince of Wales wore his uniform as Colonel of the Rifle Brigade, and Prince Arthur that of a Captain in the same regiment; the Duke of Edinburgh wore an artillery uniform. The Duke of Cambridge, as Field-Marshal Commanding-in-Chief, was attended by his staff; the Duke of Teck, the Grand Duke of Mecklenburg, Prince Edward of Saxe-Weimar, and others of the Court were present. The military escort was composed of the 2nd Life Guards. As the Queen drove slowly in front and in rear of the long line the band of each regiment played a march, the men coming to the shoulder as the Queen passed. When the Queen had inspected the troops a hollow square was formed. The Queen and her escort took up their positions in the centre of the square. The troops were addressed on her Majesty's behalf by the Commander-in-Chief. He said he had it in command from the Queen to congratulate the force upon their safe return to England, and to thank them for the bravery which they had displayed. Then came the distribution of the awards "for honour." To Sir Garnet Wolseley her Majesty presented the insignia of the Order of St. Michael and St. George and of a K.C.B. The Queen was pleased to address Sir Garnet in terms of congratulation and compliment. Lord Gifford was then called to the front, and received the Victoria Cross. With her own hands the Queen fastened this most honourable distinction to the breast of the young Lieutenant, who was warmly congratulated by his brother officers. The Victoria Cross was to have been also bestowed upon Sergeant M'Gaw, of the 42nd Highlanders, who was not well enough to be present.

The troops then marched past, Sir Garnet Wolseley riding at the head of the column and Sir Archibald Alison in rear of the General. The Fusiliers and the "Black Watch" went by with the precision of garrison troops. The Rifle Brigade were as steady, and perfectly dressed. Nor were the Artillery and Engineers out of form. In the rear of column were the men of the Army Service Corps and the Hospital Corps; the three chaplains (Protestant, Roman Catholic, and Presbyterian) were present amongst the staff. After this ceremony the Royal party returned to the flagstaff and awaited the Royal and general salute. The bands played the National Anthem, the colours were drooped, the troops presented arms, and the officers lowered their swords. Sir Garnet Wolseley called for three cheers for the Queen, and after this salute her Majesty and the Royal party rode off the ground amidst renewed cheering from the spectators. The troops marched across the park to a spot upon which were erected marquees, and here the men took their "Queen's luncheon" in the open, while the officers were partaking of her Majesty's hospitality in tents.

After the inspection, Sir Garnet Wolseley remained some time on the review-ground with his friends; subsequently the General rode over to the bivouac, where he was loudly cheered by the troops. He was escorted to the Castle by a large following. Indeed, the General had only to be seen at any part of the ground to be recognised and cheered. He remained as a guest of the Queen.

The troops marched through Windsor, headed by their bands, and by five o'clock all had left for their respective quarters.

A committee has been formed to carry out the necessary arrangements consequent upon the acceptance by English volunteers of an invitation to be present at the forthcoming rifle contest at Havre.

A tailor, about sixty years old, and his wife, agreeing that certain family troubles could only be terminated by death, threw themselves, last week, into the Macclesfield and Bollington Canal. The woman was drowned, but the man manfully cried out for help and was rescued.

The thirty-second report of the Copyhold Commission states that the commissioners have completed 11,153 enfranchisements and commutations, of which 521 enfranchisements have been effected during the present year. Of the latter there were 28 enfranchisements in clerical manors, 49 in collegiate manors, and 444 in lay manors. In pursuance of the powers given by the Universities and College Estates Act, 1858, and the Universities and College Estates Act Extension, 1860, the commissioners have also authorised 701 sales, 260 purchases, 74 enfranchisements, 43 exchanges, 105 applications for raising money, 10 transfers of trusts, and three applications for the augmentation of benefices.

ROYAL NATIONAL LIFE-BOAT INSTITUTION.

On Thursday week the jubilee meeting of the friends and supporters of the Royal National Life-Boat Institution was held at the London Tavern. The Duke of Northumberland, president of the institution, occupied the chair.

His Grace, in opening the proceedings, said it was now fifty years since the institution took its origin in the efforts of a humane individual in the Isle of Man (Sir William Hillary), assisted by many others, whose philanthropy and sense of what was due to the seafaring population of the country led them to use their best endeavours to remedy evils, to obviate which at that time hardly any attempt had been made. The efforts of the society were first directed simply to rewarding those who had exposed themselves to danger in saving the lives of others, and to giving grants to those who established means for that purpose; but their operations were gradually increased until twenty-five or thirty years ago, when much progress was made in the creation of life-boats—real life-boats—which could be trusted. After this a great movement took place under the auspices of a nobleman, a near relation of his own, and whose title he now bore—he meant the late Duke of Northumberland—under whose auspices all that science could effect was brought to bear upon this important question. The society not only obtained the best articles that could be procured in the form of life-boats, but attained a degree of organisation which he believed, without egotism, omitted nothing which by any possibility it was desirable to include. He supposed that at the time when the society was established not more than half a dozen so-called "life-boats" could have been found on the coasts of the kingdom; but the development of the society had been such that the life-boats now belonging to them numbered 239. There was no port of the kingdom which could be called a port that did not possess a life-boat, and there was hardly a dangerous locality on the coast which was not provided with the means of saving life from shipwreck. The organisation of the society comprised not only the formation of the life-boat establishments, but the rewarding of the crews and the maintenance of the boats in a proper condition. One point in that organisation was the fact that it availed itself of local assistance, by which means an interest was created in the society and a perpetual supervision over the crews was obtained. There was another matter of which the society might be justly proud—namely, that not only had their efforts in their own country been crowned with success, but that these efforts and their organisation were being initiated by the countries throughout the world. He believed that it would never be necessary to make any special appeal to this country on behalf of the National Life-Boat Institution, for he was convinced that it was most firmly established in the affections of the people. His Grace concluded by a touching reference to the late Mr. Thomas Baring, the chairman of the committee.

After some further remarks, he called on Mr. Richard Lewis, secretary of the institution, to read the annual report.

The report began by saying that the committee of the Royal National Life-Boat Institution had once more the satisfaction to present to its supporters and the public their annual report; and they had special gratification in doing so from the circumstance that this is the jubilee year of the society, it having been established in 1824. For many years afterwards it devoted the limited funds at its disposal to the bestowal of honorary and pecuniary rewards to boatmen and others who were the means of saving shipwrecked persons, and to occasional grants of money to local associations towards the purchase and repair of life-boats. In 1850 a fresh impetus was given to the great and national work of the society, and it then undertook the establishment of life-boat stations round the coasts of the United Kingdom. From that period it had steadily progressed in the enlargement of its sphere of operations; and on its jubilee anniversary it stood in the proud position of having placed efficient life-boat establishments wherever they were as yet needed, and it had the large number of 239 life-boats on the coasts of the United Kingdom and the Channel Islands. Since the last report fourteen new life-boats had been placed on the coast. During the past year the society's boats had saved the lives of four hundred and seventy-one persons, nearly all under circumstances of peril that would have precluded any ordinary boats from venturing out to sea. During the past year twelve silver medals, twenty-one votes of thanks inscribed on vellum, and £2026 had been granted by the society for saving 471 lives by life-boats, and 197 lives by fishing-boats and other means. The number of lives saved from its establishment to the present time, either by its life-boats or by special exertions for which it had granted rewards, was 22,153. The committee were at a loss for words to adequately express their thankfulness for that glorious harvest of human lives rescued from a watery grave; and, encouraged by such gratifying results, they were determined to put forth all the resources of the institution to perpetuate and extend its great work on the coasts of the British Isles. Since the formation of the institution it had voted ninety-one gold and 844 silver medals for saving life, besides pecuniary rewards to the amount of about £42,000. The committee cordially acknowledged the continued hearty co-operation of the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty, the Board of Trade, the officers and men of the coastguard service, the local branch committees and their honorary secretaries, and the coast boatmen and fishermen. The efforts of the Board of Trade in the maintenance and extension of the rocket apparatus on the coasts of the United Kingdom were unceasing. Many gratifying donations and legacies received during the past year were gratefully acknowledged. The total amount of the receipts in that period had been £31,740, and of that sum £6030 was the result of special gifts to defray the cost of ten life-boats. The expenditure, including liabilities, had amounted to £25,373. In conclusion, the committee observed that the great and national work in which the institution had been engaged during the past fifty years was extending every year. No longer confined to this maritime country, its operations were known, appreciated, and followed throughout the civilised world. Possessing a noble fleet of 239 splendid life-boats, perfectly equipped, the institution appealed with renewed confidence for sympathy and support; and its managing committee believed that, so long as the institution could show in the future, as it had shown in the past, that it was earnestly and efficiently carrying out the great and philanthropic work it had undertaken, its trustful expectation of continued and increased support would be nobly responded to by an enlightened and generous public.

The report having been moved and unanimously adopted, resolutions in furtherance of the objects of the institution were proposed and seconded by Sir John Swinburne, Bart.; the Rev. E. Hewlett, M.A.; Mr. W. R. Preston; Mr. T. B. Smithies, editor of the British Workman; Admiral Sir J. W. Tarleton, K.C.B.; Mr. George Lyall; Mr. J. G. Hubbard, M.P.; Sir Llewellyn Turner, Baron Gudin, Mr. George Wells, Mr. Thomas Chapman, F.R.S., and Sir Edward Perrott, Bart.

LANDING OF THE SICK AND WOUNDED.

PRESENTING A GOAT TO THE 23RD (ROYAL WELSH) FUSILIERS.

CAPTAIN W. F. BUTLER.

We are glad to announce the return to England, arriving at Portsmouth on Saturday, of this active and enterprising officer, who had been laid up with fever and dysentery on board the hospital-ship, after his fatigues and exposure to the climate of West Africa. He is not only an excellent soldier, but the clever author of two of the most entertaining recent books of travel, "The Great Lone Land" and "The Wild North Land," which describe the far western region of British North America, up the Saskatchewan river to the Rocky Mountains, and beyond these to the Pacific shore. We have, on former occasions, noticed these interesting books, and they have by this time given pleasure to many thousands of readers. Captain Butler held a commission in the 69th regiment, but was on half-pay when he volunteered to join Sir Garnet Wolseley's expedition on the Gold Coast, as he had served in the same way, under that successful commander, in the Red River Expedition of 1870. He was intrusted by Sir Garnet with the special service of visiting the country of the Western Akims, for the purpose of raising auxiliary native forces to act in concert with the British army, as those under Captain Glover eventually did, and as was to have been done likewise by others, under Captain Dalrymple. The arrangements made by Captain Butler and Captain Dalrymple were only prevented from fulfilling their original design by the misbehaviour of our native allies. This appears from the following account, dated Feb. 2 at Tribes, and addressed to the Chief of the Staff:—

"After the dispatch of my letter of the 29th and 30th ult. a rapid retreat commenced in the whole Akim force. So universal was the panic that during the greater portion of the night bodies of men continued to move south, and early on the morning of the 31st Yancoma was reached and left behind. No attempt was made on the part of the Kings to excuse or explain their gross treachery, and I could elicit nothing more tangible than that they were too far advanced into Ashantee territory, and that they must be cut off before assistance could reach them. My belief is that the statements of a blind Ashantee prisoner taken at Nansuah, coupled with a verbal message sent by King Attah of East Akim, the purport of which I was not made aware of, did much to induce the disgraceful flight. No previous warning, no intimation whatever, had been given to me that it was the intention of the Kings and Chiefs to abandon Akims; indeed, up to the very moment that the retreat began I was moving through the camps, endeavouring to get the Akims to move to Dadiasso, en route to Amoaful, and I had actually engaged a party of hunters to proceed through the bush to the main line near the latter place. Yet so complete was the flight that within two hours not a man was left in Akim, and long before midnight every Akim was behind the Ennoou river, ten miles distant. All this without a reverse having taken place, and after a loss of only two killed and two wounded in the entire force.

"I cannot express to you," says Captain Butler, "the feelings with which I beheld this total break up of the movement. Little by little, step by step, I had succeeded in leading these savages to within a very trifling distance of the point aimed at. It is true that there were many indications of how utterly untrustworthy was the composition of the force under my command; but, nevertheless, at Akim I naturally looked at the task as all but accomplished, and my junction with the main body at Amoaful, within a few miles of Coomassie, as only a question of some hours. Encumbered with baggage, without carriers, save those given me by the Kings, and with three of my officers sick from actual fever or its recent presence, I dare not wait at Akim the chance of communication from the main body. I had to abandon the fruits of no little labour at the moment success seemed most assured. The Kings, with about a quarter of the original force, are now encamped close to the Prah at Embrouen; they have refused to move to Prah-su. The remainder of the men are scattered or dispersed to their homes. I will proceed to head-quarters with all speed, and afterwards be ready to undertake such punishment as the Major-General may determine to inflict upon the Akim chiefs."

The following are the comments of Sir Garnet Wolseley, in his despatch to the Secretary of State for War, dated Feb. 8, at Amoaful:—"Yesterday Captain Butler, half-pay, 69th Regiment, arrived in my camp, and, as his mission to the Western Akims is now completely closed, I feel it my duty to bring at once to your notice the admirable manner in which he has conducted a most trying and difficult task.

"That Captain Butler failed in his effort to lead a force of Akims to Coomassie is not his fault, but is solely due to the ineradicable cowardice and sloth of the people with whom he had to deal. In the face of great difficulties he succeeded in raising a force of Akims and leading them across the Prah. Although they deserted him at the very time when a junction with me was within their reach, these troops did, by their partial advance, effect that diversion which was the object of Captain Butler's labours, drawing off from opposition to the column under my immediate command the whole fighting force of Kokofoo, one of the six great tributary principalities of the Ashantee kingdom.

"The high opinion of Captain Butler which caused me to give him an independent command is strengthened by his conduct in this war; and I beg to recommend him especially to your notice as an officer of great ability, of remarkably ready resources, and of untiring powers of action.

"I cannot express too strongly my sense of the efforts which he and the officers under his orders have made for the cause in hand. In so far as failure represents an additional trouble, which has to be undergone by a man of energy and resource, and an additional hardship from which he suffers, Captain Butler has had all the bitterness of it. He has failed to induce the miserable chiefs of this district to do all that he, in his fine belief in native character, fancied that he would be able to induce them to do. But, so far as the interests of the expedition under my orders are concerned, Captain Butler has not failed, but most successfully achieved the very object which I had in view in detaching him for the work he so cheerfully and skilfully undertook. He has effected a most important diversion in favour of the main body, and has detained before him all the forces of one of the most powerful Ashantee chiefs.

"For any purpose for which energy, practical ability, high spirit, and much knowledge of character are required, I cannot too highly commend Captain Butler to your Lordship's attention. All these qualities have been, under the most trying circumstances, displayed by him upon the present occasion."

Such praises from his commanding officer, which we believe to have been well deserved, should reconcile Captain Butler to his disappointment among the Akims; and we hope that the speedy recovery of his health will enable him, either with the sword or the pen, to do something more for the public service and for his own merited advancement. The Portrait is from a photograph.

The manuscripts presented by Mrs. Grote to the British Museum are contained in twenty volumes.

The Old Testament Revision Company concluded their twenty-second session on the 27th ult., in the Jerusalem Chamber. The company revised for the first time the translation of the Book of Joshua, and Judges 1-3.

The revisers of the authorised version of the New Testament met last week for their thirty-eighth session. Twenty members were present, the Bishop of Gloucester and Bristol being in the chair. The company revised the translation of part of the last chapter of the Second Epistle of St. Peter and of part of the Epistle of St. Jude.

The Rev. George Richard M'Kerness, Vicar of Ham, Staffordshire, brother of the Bishop of Oxford, was last week, in St. Mary's, Glasgow, consecrated Bishop of Argyll and the Isles, in succession to the late Bishop Ewing. The Bishop of Oxford was present, and upwards of forty clergymen of the Scottish Episcopal Church. The Dean of York preached.

The governors of the Queen Anne's Bounty Corporation held their annual meeting, on Wednesday week, to vote away their surplus income towards the augmentation of benefices in England and Wales. There were ninety cases approved. No grants were made on this occasion, except to meet benefactions. The value of the benefactions offered to the board was more than £22,000; the grants made, £18,000; and the Church of England thus secures a capital sum of £40,000. Four of the cases were donatives, without any fixed income whatever; they will now become benefices liable to Episcopal jurisdiction.

A stained-glass window, of unusual excellence, has been fixed in the church at Saxmundham, in Suffolk, having been executed after a design by the Marchioness of Waterford by Messrs. O'Connor and Taylor, of Berners-street. The subject is the "Ascension."—A window has been lately put up in Great Berkhamstead church to the memory of the Rev. F. Bullock, who was drowned in the lake of Neuchâtel in the summer of 1872.—At the Church of St. John, Oakfield, Isle of Wight, the three lancet windows at the west end of the nave have been filled with painted glass as a memorial to Bishop Wilberforce. The design is intended to represent the apostolic ministry of the Church. The memorial was a freewill offering on the part of the parishioners at large.

A building feat has just been performed at St. Jude's Schools, Upper Chelsea, which may fairly be said to rival many of those which we are told take place every day on the other side of the Atlantic. The main roof, measuring about 27 yards one way and 10 yards the other, covered with slates, lined internally with plaster, and containing several skylights, has been lifted up bodily by Mr. J. High, under the direction of the architect, Mr. E. H. Lingen Barker. Then, after being poised for several weeks mid air, exposed to sundry gales, on the fine points of a few ordinary screwjacks, whilst a lofty story was in course of erection beneath, it was finally lowered and fixed in its raised position, no disturbance whatever of the slates or cracking of the plaster or glass having occurred.

A very handsome timepiece and a pair of beautiful bronze vases were recently presented, by the pro-churchwardens and congregation of St. Mark's Church, Shepherd's-bush, to the Rev. F. Ernest Ramsay, M.A. (the late curate), "as a token of esteem," and in recognition of "the benefits derived by them from his ministrations" during his one year's curacy.—The Rev. Thomas Nolan, D.D., has been presented with an elegant casket, containing two hundred guineas, by the congregation of St. Peter's, Regent-square, the vicarage of which he has lately resigned.—The Rev. Dr. Payne (now Vicar of Cogges, Witney) has received a handsome tea-urn as a present from the poor of his late parish, Thurlaston, Leicestershire. This is in addition to a pair of candelabra and some tasteful drawing-room ornaments previously given by the wealthier parishioners.

The following report has been submitted to the electors of the Radcliffe Travelling Fellowship by the examiners:—"We have to report that the candidates, considered as a body, are of unusual excellence. We recommend to the electors for appointment Mr. Samuel Hatch West, of Christ Church. With respect to two other candidates—Mr. Childs, of Merton, and Mr. Moullin, Pembroke—we consider that their work gives them claims but little inferior to those of Mr. West. Between these two gentlemen it would, perhaps, be difficult to decide whether of the two should be reckoned the second. We feel bound to say to you that, looking at the actual quality of the work done, we think it a grave misfortune that we have no power to recommend both these gentlemen for additional fellowships or for some mark of your approval.

The following gentlemen have been elected to the Denyer and Johnson Scholarships:—Mr. G. Milner, B.A., of Christ Church; the Rev. F. K. Y. Aglionby, B.A., of Queen's, and the Rev. G. H. Gwilliam, B.A., of Jesus. Proxime accessit—Mr. F. H. Woods, B.A., Scholar of Jesus.

Mr. Walter Leaf is son of Mr. C. J. Leaf, of Old Change. He was educated at Harrow, under Dr. Butler, was admitted a minor scholar (competitive) at Trinity, and elected foundation scholar in 1871. He carried off the Craven University Scholarship in 1873. Mr. Leaf's college tutor was Mr. Blore.

Mr. Francis Hay Rawlins is son of Mr. Rawlins, of Levenson-Severn, near Worcester, and is an Eton scholar at King's. His classical career at Cambridge is almost an unexampled one. In 1871 he carried off the Browne gold medal for the best Greek epigram; in 1872 he won the Browne gold medals for the best Greek ode and Latin epigram; and culminated, in 1873, by carrying off the three Browne medals—namely, for the Greek ode, for the Latin ode, and the Greek epigram. He was Newcastle Scholar of Eton. His college tutor was Mr. Austen Leigh.

The following is the award (after competitive examination) of the open scholarships at Jesus College:—Classical—£50: N. Turner, Tonbridge School. Honourably mentioned: W. J. The Bell Scholarships have been adjudged as follow:—1, J. E. C. Welldon, of King's; 2, G. Chawner, King's. The vacant Abbott Scholarship will be divided between H. E. Dixon, Christ's, and E. M. Meyrick, Trinity, whose merits were equal at the examination. Mr. Chawner was a Monitor's prizeman and Mr. Dixon an Exhibitor of Rossall School.

Sir Richard Malins has decided that the bill filed by Dr. Hayman against the governing body of Rugby School did not show sufficient cause to justify the interference of the Court. He, therefore, allowed the demurrer, as also that of the Bishop of Exeter, but without costs. The Rev. Dr. Hayman writes to say that, as he considers his character and conduct as a gentleman and as head-master of Rugby have been sufficiently vindicated by the proceedings before Vice-Chancellor Malins, he does not intend to appeal against the Vice-Chancellor's decision.

A proposal has been made to affiliate King's College, London, to the Universities of Oxford and Cambridge.

The chapel of the new Charterhouse School at Godalming forming the right wing of the noble quadrangle, was consecrated on Wednesday week.

Mr. William Moore, M.A., Fellow of Magdalen College, formerly scholar of New College, Oxford, has been appointed to an assistant classical mastership at St. Paul's College, Stony Stratford. Mr. Moore gained the prize for the Chancellor's Latin verse in 1862.

OBITUARY OF EMINENT PERSONS.

SIR W. H. ELLIOTT.

Sir William Henry Elliott, G.C.B., K.H., Colonel of the 51st Regiment, died, on the 27th ult., at his residence, 20, Cambridge-square, in his eighty-second year. The son of Captain John Elliott, R.N., one of Captain Cook's companions in the circumnavigation of the globe, young Elliott entered the Army, in the 51st Regiment, 1809, and attained the rank of General in 1871. During the long and eventful interval he saw much service and gained much distinction. He had the Peninsular medal, with five clasps, for the part he took in the campaigns of 1812, 1813, and 1814; was decorated with the Waterloo medal for his share in the decisive battle of Waterloo; and received the Burmese medal and clasp, and on two occasions the thanks of the Governor-General of India in Council, for his services in the second Burmese war, in which he commanded the Madras Brigade. Sir William married, 1831, Mary Anne, daughter of William Ashmore, Esq., of St. Matthew's, Ipswich.

SIR W. H. BODKIN.

Sir William Henry Bodkin, late Assistant Judge of the Middlesex Sessions, a Deputy Lieutenant for Middlesex, who died on the 26th ult., at his residence, West Hill, Highgate, in his eighty-third year, was the eldest son of Mr. Peter Bodkin, of Galway. Adopting the legal profession, he was called to the Bar in 1826, and, joining the Home Circuit, soon obtained considerable practice at the Middlesex, Westminster, and Kent Sessions, as well as at the Central Criminal Court. In the words of Mr. Serjeant Cox, "Sir William Bodkin was an admirable Judge and a most excellent man, tempering justice with mercy and combining kindness with firmness." As a criminal lawyer he was highly considered. In 1841 he was elected M.P. for Rochester in the Conservative interest, and sat until the dissolution in 1847. In 1858 he was chosen a Bench of Gray's Inn, in 1859 appointed Assistant Judge of the Middlesex Sessions, and in 1867 knighted. Sir William published a pamphlet "On Poor Laws." He married, first, in 1812, Sarah Sophia, daughter of P. Raymond Poland, Esq.; and secondly, in 1865, Sarah Constance, daughter of Joseph Johnson Miles, Esq., of Highgate.

MR. S. BALL.

Samuel Ball, Esq., died recently, in his ninety-fourth year, at Sion House, Wolverley, Worcestershire, where he had lived in retirement for the last twenty-five years. His name deserves to be remembered as one to whom the country is indebted. He was for many years a member of the East India Company's establishment at Canton, and, though China and most sources of information respecting it were at that time closed to Europeans, his extraordinary industry gained him much and minute information as to the geography of the tea districts and their trade routes; and in 1817, in a printed paper of great detail, he showed the directors of the East India Company that Foo-Chow was the natural harbour of export for the black teas, and urged the opening of that port. The directors declined to move, and the matter slept. In 1842, when Sir Henry Pottinger was sent to stipulate for new ports of trade, there was almost entire ignorance which to choose, and the Chinese rendered no assistance. Mr. Ball's facts and papers were gratefully accepted by Sir Henry Pottinger; Foo-Chow was opened, and its annual export of black teas alone is now little short of ninety millions of pounds. With the same diligence Mr. Ball inquired, under similar difficulties, into the Chinese modes of culture and manufacture of tea, and published, in 1848, a most able scientific and practical work on that subject, which is to this day a standard book with the growers of tea in our Eastern possessions. Mr. Ball's eldest brother, Colonel George Ball, rose, by merit only, to the high post of Adjutant-General of the Bengal Army, and was awarded a K.C.B. for services in war, but died before he received it.

MR. ALBERT WAY.

Albert Way, Esq., M.A., F.S.A., of Wonham Manor, in the county of Surrey, formerly director of the Society of Antiquaries, and founder of the Archaeological Institute of Great Britain and Ireland, died at Cannes, on the 22nd ult., in his sixty-ninth year. This accomplished and very learned archaeologist was the only son of the late Rev. Lewis Way, of Stanstead Park, Essex, by Mary, his wife, daughter and coheir of the Rev. Herman Drewe, Rector of Comb Raleigh, Devon, and grandson of Benjamin Way, Esq., F.R.S., F.A.S., of Denham Place, Bucks, president of Guy's Hospital, and sub-governor of the South Sea Company, by Elizabeth Anne, his wife, daughter of William Cooke, D.D., Provost of King's College, Cambridge. The father of Mr. Albert Way, Mr. Lewis Way, originally a barister, but subsequently a clergyman, by a curious freak of fortune, forming a very interesting chapter of family romance, too long to be narrated in our confined space, acquired a very considerable property, a great part of which he devoted to the conversion of the Jews and various works of philanthropy. One of these, the Marabout Chapel at Paris, completed by Mr. Albert Way, whose death we record, remains a permanent memorial. Mr. Way married, April 30, 1844, the Hon. Emmeline Stanley, daughter of the late Lord Stanley of Alderley, and leaves one daughter.

WILLS AND BEQUESTS.

The will and codicil, dated Feb. 22, 1865, and Oct. 21, 1873, of the Hon. and Right Rev. Charles Amyand Harris, D.D., formerly Bishop of Gibraltar, who died on the 16th ult., at Torquay, were proved on the 25th ult. by the Hon. and Rev. Henry O'Brien, the sole executor, the personal estate being sworn under £25,000. The testator bequeaths £3500 each to the Incorporated Society for Promoting the Enlargement, Building, and Repairing of Churches and Chapels, and the Colonial Bishopric Fund; £12,000 to his brother, Admiral the Hon. Sir Edward Alfred John Harris; and the residue to his brother-in-law, the said Hon. and Rev. H. O'Brien.

The will, dated Sept. 20, 1854, of Lord John George Lennox, late of Darland, near Chatham, Kent, who died on Nov. 10 last, was proved on the 24th ult. by Augustus Frederick Francis Lennox, the son of the deceased, the acting executor, the personal estate in the United Kingdom being sworn under £6000. The testator leaves all his household goods and furniture to his wife, Lady Louisa Frederica Lennox, and the residue of the personalty to all his sons equally.

The will and codicil, dated respectively Aug. 12, 1870, and Aug. 27, 1872, of Sir John Newdigate Ludford Chetwode, Bart., late of Oakley Hall, Staffordshire, who died Sept. 8 last, were proved on the 27th ult. by Sir George Chetwode, of Byrkley Lodge, the nephew, the sole executor, the personalty being sworn under £14,000. The testator bequeaths to his wife, Lady Arabella Phyllis Chetwode, £500, and legacies and annuities to his brother, nieces, and other members of his family, and to his land agent, domestic servants, farm labourers, and others. The rest of the personalty, with the whole of the real property, goes to testator's said nephew, who also takes the settled estates.

BLACK.

WHITE.

White to play, and mate in three moves.

CHESS IN DUNDEE.

Game between Messrs. G. B. FRASER and Mr. H. STIRLING, the former giving the odds of the Pawn and two moves. (Remove Black's K B P from the Board.)

WHITE (Mr. S.)	BLACK (Mr. F.)	WHITE (Mr. S.)	BLACK (Mr. F.)
1. P to K 4th	P to Q 3rd	18. Q takes Q P	P takes K B P
2. P to Q 4th	Kt to Q 2nd	19. Q takes Q P	P to K sq (ch)
3. P to Q B 4th	P to K 4th	20. K to Q 2nd	P P takes P
4. P to K B 4th	P to K 4th	21. Q R to K sq	Q to K B 2nd
5. P to Q 5th	Kt to K R 3rd	Checking with the Rook would have been of no avail to Black.
6. Kt to K B 3rd	Kt to K B 2nd	22. R takes P	B to K B 4th
7. B to Q 3rd	B to K 2nd	23. Q to K 3rd	Q to K Kt 2nd
8. P to K B 5th	Kt to K B 3rd	24. R to K R 5th	B to K Kt 3rd
Threatening to capture the K B Pawn, and afterwards regain the Piece by playing P to K 5th. Kt to Q B 4th, however, a much better station for the Knight.
9. Kt to Q B 3rd	P to K R 3rd	25. R takes P
10. Q to K 2nd	Castles	26. Q takes R	Q R to K sq
11. Kt to K R 4th		27. Q takes R	His best play.
Unexpected, and having a far-sighted object in view.
12. Q takes Kt	Kt takes K P	28. Q to Q 5th (ch)	R takes Q
Black naturally expected his opponent intended to play, 12. Kt to K 5th, upon which would have followed:—
13. K takes Kt	Kt takes Kt	29. R to K 6th	B to K B 2nd
14. R takes Kt	R to K sq	30. R to K 4th	Q to K Kt 5th (ch)
15. P to K B 5th, &c.	Q takes Kt	31. Kt to Q sq	K to K R 3rd
The position here is somewhat interesting.
16. P to K 3rd	B takes Kt (ch)	32. K R to B 5th	B to K Kt 3rd
17. P to K 4th	B to K Kt 4th	33. K R to B 6th	Kt to Kt 4th
His best course at this crisis, perhaps, was to play the Q to K 7th; then ensued:—
18. P to K 3rd	B to K Kt 4th	34. Kt to K 2nd	R from K 4th to K B 4th
A cunning resource to get some temporary respite.
19. Q to K 3rd	P to K 5th	35. Q to B 5th (ch)	K to Q 2nd
20. P takes Kt	P takes B	36. Q R to K B 4th	Q takes K Kt P
21. P to K 6th	P takes B	37. R to K B 3rd	Q to K Kt 5th
The position here is somewhat interesting.
22. P takes Kt	P takes B	38. K R to K B 4th	Q takes R (ch)
23. P to K 6th	P takes B	39. R takes Q	K takes R
Finally played. Black dare not resign with R to K sq and the game was a drawn battle.

THE INTER-UNIVERSITY MATCH.

(From our Cambridge Correspondent.)

The second match between the two Universities took place last Friday week (March 27), at the rooms of the City of London Club. The conditions were identical with those of last year; and, as it turned out, the result was equally one-sided and decisive. This was mainly due to the untiring energy of the last two Cambridge presidents, Messrs. Ball and Keynes, who had worked unceasingly in the arrangement of tournaments and matches.

The first pair, Messrs. Parratt (Oxford) and De Soyres (Cambridge), had already met in last year's match, when Parratt won both games. This year the Cambridge captain had his revenge: after two stubbornly-contested games had ended in draws the third presented a won position for him at the eighteenth move, and Herr Steinitz adjudged it in his favour. In the second pair Keynes (Cambridge) won his first game very rapidly, drew the second, and had so considerable an advantage in the third that the award of the umpire gave him victory. At the next board Ogden (Cambridge) was still more fortunate, scoring two games before some of the others had finished their first; but his third attempt gave Oxford one victory. At board No. 4 perhaps the best-fought struggle took place, between Ball, the Cambridge president, and Grundy of Oxford, each winning a game, and no time remaining to decide by a third game. Farther down the table luck still more strongly favoured the side of the Light Blue. Plunkett only making one draw out of three games; Tracey and Connell only gaining one game each out of the rubber. The full score is as follows:—

CAMBRIDGE.			OXFORD.
	Won.	Drawn.		Won.	Drawn.
1. De Soyres (Cambridge)	2	1	1	2	0
2. Keynes (Pembroke)	2	1	1	2	0
3. Ogden (Magdalen)	2	0	1	2	0
4. Ball (Trinity)	2	0	1	2	0
5. May (Trinity)	2	1	1	2	0
6. Nicholson (Trinity)	2	0	1	2	0
7. Hooper (Clare)	2	0	1	2	0
Total	12	4	Total	4	4

* In reality, Mr. Nicholson won another game; but, as the stipulation was for three games only, it does not count in the score.

After the match, the combatants were hospitably entertained by the City of London Club. The usual toasts were given, that in honour of the losers being responded to by Mr. Parratt in a most amusing speech—in fact, the speech of the evening, or rather morning. Next best was the characteristic oration by Mr. Bird, and the song by Mr. Steinitz. (We would suggest to our Oxford friends, that when they have to undergo the ordeal of "Schools," and should be set to construe Gaudemus victricem dum sumus, &c., it would not be advisable to write "For he's a jolly good fellow," &c., however effective this translation turned out to be when sung in chorus.) The other toasts were responded to by Messrs. Lowenthal, Gastineau, Horwitz, Zerkert, Rabbeth, Potter, and Duffy.

The natural pride of the Cambridge men at the result of this contest was considerably enhanced by the fact that they won the victory under the eyes of their patron, Mr. Staunton, whose name their club has always enjoyed the honour of bearing.

THE LAST HOURS OF LIVINGSTONE.

The following telegram was received on Sunday, at the London office of the New York Herald:—

"The Malwa arrived off Suez at eleven on Saturday night, having Mr. Arthur Laing and Jacob Wainwright on board, with the body of Livingstone. He had been ill with chronic dysentery for several months past, and, although well supplied with stores and medicines, he seems to have had a presentiment that the attack would prove fatal. He rode a donkey, but was subsequently carried, and thus arrived at Muilala, beyond Lake Bamba, in Bissa country, when he said, 'Build me a hut to die in.' The hut was built by his followers, who first made him a bed. He suffered greatly, groaning night and day. On the third day he said, 'I am very cold, put more grass over the hut.' His followers did not speak or go near him. Kitumbo, chief of Bissa, sent flour and beans, and behaved well to the party. On the fourth day Livingstone became insensible, and died about midnight. Majusha, his servant, was present. His last entry in diary was on April 27. He spoke much and sadly of home and family. When first seized he told his followers he intended to exchange everything for ivory to give to them, and to push on to Ujiiji and Zanzibar and try to reach England. On the day of his death the followers consulted what to do. The Nassick boys determined to preserve the remains. They were afraid to inform the chief of Livingstone's death. The secretary removed the body to another hut, around which he built a high fence, to ensure privacy. They opened the body and removed the internal organs, which were placed in a tin box and buried inside the fence, under a large tree. Jacob Wainwright cut an inscription on the tree as follows:—'Dr. Livingstone died on May 4, 1873,' and superscribed the name of the head man, Susa. The body was preserved in salt and dried in the sun for twelve days. Kitumbo was then informed of the death, and beat drums and fired, as a token of respect, and allowed the followers to remove the body, which was placed in a coffin formed of bark, then journeyed to Unyanyembe about six months, sending an advanced party with information addressed to Livingstone's son, which met Cameron. The latter sent back bales of cloth and powder. The body arrived at Unyanyembe ten days after the advanced party, and rested there a fortnight. Cameron, Murphy, and Dillon together there; latter very ill, blind, and mind affected; suicided at Kasakera; buried there. Here Livingstone's remains were put in another bark case, smaller, done up as a bale to deceive natives, who objected to the passage of the corpse, which was thus carried to Zanzibar. Livingstone's clothing, papers, and instruments accompany the body. When ill Livingstone prayed much. At Muilala, he said, 'I am going home.' Chumah remains at Zanzibar. Webb, American Consul at Zanzibar, is on his way home, and has letters handed to him by Murphy from Livingstone for Stanley, which he will deliver personally only. Geographical news follows. After Stanley's departure the doctor left Unyanyembe, rounded the south end of Lake Tanganyika, and travelled south of Lake Bamba, or Bangweulu, crossed it from south to north, then along east side, returning north through marshes to Muilala. All papers sealed; address, Secretary of State, in charge of Arthur Laing, a British merchant from Zanzibar. Murphy and Cameron remain behind."

The concluding meeting of the delegates from London Sunday schools of all denominations was held, on Thursday week, at the Weigh-House Chapel.

Mr. Gladstone's expenses at the Greenwich election in February last are officially declared to have been £1323. Mr. Liardet's expenses were £1990. The return of the expenses of Mr. Boord and Mr. Baxter Langley have already been published. They amounted to £2626 and £123 respectively.

The revenue of the Duchy of Lancaster, according to the accounts published on Friday week, by order of Parliament, was, with arrears, in the year ended Dec. 31 last, £70,548 3s. 11d. The receipts within the year were £64,536 5s. 7d. At the end of the year the balance was £6470 1s. 6d. Among the disbursements is a payment made to the Keeper of her Majesty's Privy Purse of £41,000.

The eighteenth anniversary dinner of the Royal Hospital for Incurables took place, last week, at the London Tavern—Lord G. Hamilton, M.P., presiding. In proposing the toast of the evening, the chairman said that at the present time the institution supported 151 inmates and 319 pensioners, and there were no fewer than 200 candidates waiting to participate in the advantages either of the hospital or of the pensions. The balance-sheet of the past year showed that nearly £16,000 was expended in maintaining the hospital and in granting pensions. Subscriptions were announced amounting to £2600.

Mr. Cross, on Thursday week, received a deputation, whose members urged the necessity of reducing the hours of labour of women and children in factories. The right hon. gentleman, in reply, said he had given attention, as the representative of a large manufacturing district, to this question for many years; and he sincerely hoped, before long, to see the legislation relating to factories taken out of its present complicated condition. The arguments which had been advanced should be well weighed by the Government, and the whole subject would receive their careful consideration.

Lord Hampton presided, last week, at the opening of the session of the Institution of Naval Architects. The report of the council stated that the finances were in a flourishing condition. His Lordship, in an inaugural address, spoke gratefully of the increasing interest which naval men were taking in the institution. He alluded to Mr. Plimsoll's Royal Commission and its preliminary report. In eulogising Mr. Plimsoll the noble Lord gave him credit for having instigated recent legislation with regard to shipping, and thereby conferred on the Board of Trade powers of survey which it had never before possessed. A series of important papers was read, including one by Mr. Barnaby, chief architect of the Royal Navy, on recent designs for ships of war, armoured and unarmoured.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON, SATURDAY, APRIL 11, 1874.

The quiet of the Easter holidays has not been entirely undisturbed. Spain has uttered a cry which breaks in upon the otherwise peaceful condition of Europe. The Carlist war in that country approaches its crisis. Until lately it excited but little apprehension. It was rather of the nature of a local outbreak than of a national struggle. It resembled in its character those border feuds which, two or three centuries ago, preyed upon the peace of society in Northumberland and Cumberland; or more correctly, perhaps, the civil strife stirred up in the northern parts of England during the last century by the appearance of a pretender to the throne. Of late, however, the Carlists of Spain have obtained such successes in the Basque Provinces as to excite serious misgivings in Madrid itself. The defeat of General Moriones in his attempt to dislodge the forces of the Carlists from the entrenched position they occupied in the vicinity of Bilbao gave a new aspect to the civil war. Thenceforth it assumed the importance of a national contest. Marshal Serrano, the de facto President of the Republic, recognised at once the necessity of employing the whole resources of the country, under his own personal direction, in crushing the dynastic enterprise which for many months past has sought to establish a permanent footing in the north-west of Spain. Even his efforts, however, have as yet been unavailing. At the time of our present writing he has not succeeded, with all the organised force of the nation at his command, in dislodging the foe. Four days' severe fighting have, indeed, proved that his means of offence are superior to those which are within reach of his Carlist antagonists, and that probably, though at very considerable cost, he may gain a decided advantage over them. But it is clear that the war has arrived at a critical stage. The superiority of Marshal Serrano in military strength is nearly equalled by the impregnability of the entrenched position occupied by the Carlists; and, although the chances of the latter would seem to the outside world to be ultimately inferior to those of their assailants, no one who is fairly acquainted with all the conditions of the strife would feel warranted in confidently predicting how it will terminate.

The sacrifice of life in this severe and protracted struggle is quite lamentable enough. What makes it still more so, however, is the remote prospect that exists of the issue, whatever it may be, being made subservient to the welfare of the country. Serrano is nominally acting in the name and on the behalf of the Spanish people. He is the President of the Republic. It is quite possible that he has the good of his country at heart; but he is none the less a usurper of the position which he holds. It may be that his usurpation can be justified, but it can hardly be denied that it is a misfortune. He can wield, for the present, the forces of the Spanish people. He may eventually subdue and disperse the followers of Don Carlos; but it can hardly be said of him that he represents the mind or will of Spain. When he has triumphed over every external foe it will still be doubtful what position he will assume, what form of government he will favour, what institutions he will maintain, what policy he will prosecute. Unfortunately, government in Spain has left the track of legality, and no one can safely predict the course which it will take in future. It may have been forced to do so, if only to avoid a more unhappy alternative; but, whatever may have been the cause, the fact itself can only be regarded in the light of a national calamity. It has made the future uncertain. It has thrown a mist over the prospects of the nation; and unquestionably, whether Serrano succeed or fail in carrying the lines at Somorrostro, Spain will be doomed to look forward with doubt and apprehension.

On the other hand, a Carlist success would settle nothing. The cause contended for by the party, although dynastic in its pretension, is exclusively local in the source of its strength. The larger part of Spain, and certainly the most influential part, is utterly devoid of political sympathy with the Pretender. He represents principles which have long since become obsolete, even in the Peninsula. Could he march upon and take possession of Madrid he would yet be as a stranger to his fellow-countrymen and subjects. The system which he symbolises is at least half a century behind the age. Public opinion is not very advanced in Spain, but it is too far forward to sit down under Carlism. What might suit a few northern provinces would be wholly distasteful to the rest of the nation. A Legitimist Throne, therefore, would be no guarantee of stability. Peoples, no less than individuals, require some adaptation of their state, political and social, to the nature and quality of the convictions they hold. One cannot, therefore, but mourn over the fruitless contest which is being waged in the neighbourhood of Bilbao. Nothing good can come of it. No living principles are involved in the issue. One can hardly say that any real national interest is at stake. It is an episode, stained with blood and full of suffering; but it can only affect the national destinies of Spain very indirectly—and, as far as human foresight can judge, rather for evil than for good.

It is some consolation to reflect that such calamities as are now under notice disturb society in the Peninsula to no great depth beneath the surface. Probably, throughout the larger proportion of Spain, the Carlist war excites not much more painful interest than it does in this country. No doubt it interferes in more ways than one with the ordinary prosperity of the Spanish people, and no doubt it will be a blessing for them when the local and dynastic strife is brought to an end. To a certain extent, it deprives commercial enterprise of that confidence which is the prime condition of its activity and success. It hampers the movements of trade and industry. It diverts into unproductive channels the energies of the population. It keeps alive a political excitement which is incompatible with social tranquillity, and it fosters indirect mischiefs of almost every conceivable kind. But a great nation like Spain must not be regarded as though its main interests were involved in the pending struggle. We should commit a great mistake were we to look upon the fate of the Peninsula as if it were poised upon the issue of the contest between Republicans and Carlists. We can only regret that it has occasioned, and must still occasion, so much fruitless bloodshed. But we can hardly entertain an expectation that the Civil War in Spain, for so it must be called, end how it may, will lay a basis for the permanent tranquillity and progress of the country.

THE REVIEW AT WINDSOR.

The review by her Majesty the Queen, in Windsor Park on Monday week, of the troops lately commanded by Sir Garnet Wolseley in the campaign against the Ashantees, is the subject of four or five Illustrations. Although but a small force was assembled upon this interesting occasion, numbering about 1600 men, there was a peculiar significance in their meeting the Queen here, as a reward for their toils and perils in Western Africa. It was not like a mere holiday pageant, such as the more brilliant display of military pomp last Midsummer before the Shah. These three brave regiments of the British Army, with the detachments of Artillery and Engineers, had been doing real hard work for the service of the British Empire. They had come home, from a laborious and dangerous enterprise in the worst climate upon earth, to receive due thanks for their fidelity, and praise for the fortitude by which a complete success had been happily won. The Queen herself had desired to see them as early as possible, and to give them a token of her gracious approbation. Everyone among the thousands of spectators felt himself a partaker in this general feeling of public congratulation.

The ground at first chosen for this review was in the Home Park, which did not seem large enough. A change was therefore made to the Great Park, where the ground finally taken was a large open space half way down the Long Walk, between the Long Walk and Queen Anne's Ride. The carriages of spectators were ranged along the east side of Queen Anne's Ride, looking towards the Long Walk. Near the south end of this line was the Royal standard, with the saluting-point where the Queen would sit in her carriage while the troops marched past. On each side of the Queen's place were inclosed compartments for members of the two Houses of Parliament and of the Royal household, for the newspaper reporters, and for the Eton schoolboys. The 2nd Life Guards, the 6th Dragoon Guards (Carabiniers), and the first battalion of Grenadier Guards kept the ground, assisted by a force both of the Metropolitan police and the Windsor police. At the saluting-point stood a guard of honour of the Grenadiers.

About noon the troops began to arrive, some from Portsmouth, some from Shorncliffe, from Winchester, and from Woolwich. As they arrived they had to march by Castle-hill and through High-street, which were adorned with flags and lined with an enthusiastic crowd, to their respective stations in the park. The Rifle Brigade, second battalion, under Colonel Warren, from Winchester, was the first to arrive. They were met at the railway station by his Royal Highness the Prince of Wales, wearing his uniform as their Colonel. In their rear as they marched into the park was led Major Glyn's chestnut pony, almost the only horse that accompanied the Ashantee expedition. The Royal Welsh Fusiliers (23rd Regiment), under Colonel the Hon. Savage Mostyn, were the next to arrive, from Shorncliffe, leading with them the beautiful white goat lately given to replace their former pet animal, which died on the Gold Coast. The Black Watch (42nd Highlanders), from Portsmouth, were not more than ten minutes behind the Fusiliers; close upon their heels came the Royal Engineers, the Royal Artillery, and the Army Service Corps; and then the troops were all told. When they were in line the troops stood in the following order from the right:—Officers of the Control and Special Service, Royal Artillery, Royal Engineers, 23rd Royal Welsh Fusiliers, 42nd Highlanders, with about one hundred men of the 79th who volunteered into the expedition, and the Rifle Brigade—some 1600 in all. It was some time before the Queen and the other members of the Royal family arrived; and by that time the rain clouds had drifted away, the sun shone, and blue sky had appeared.

Major-General Sir Garnet Wolseley rode a white Arab. Among his staff were Brigadier Sir Archibald Alison, Colonel Greaves, chief of the staff; Major Baker, assistant adjutant-general; Captain Brackenbury, assistant military secretary; Captain Butler and Captain Russell, deputy assistant adjutants-general; Surgeon-Major Mackinnon, C.B., the principal medical officer to the expedition; and, not to mention several others, Lord Gifford, wearing his scarlet uniform as a lieutenant of the 24th Regiment.

It was nearly two o'clock when the 2nd Life Guards, who formed the escort of the Royal party, were seen coming down the Long Walk. The bugle sounded, the officers fell into their places, the crowd of spectators became silent and attentive, as the Royal carriages drove on to the review-ground. Her Majesty was in a carriage drawn by four white horses, and preceded by two outriders on white horses. With her were the Princesses of Wales, the Duchess of Edinburgh, and Princess Christian. In the second carriage were Princesses Louise and Beatrice, Prince Leopold, and Lady Churchill. The procession was led by the Staff of the Commander-in-Chief. Then came the Duke of Cambridge, the Prince of Wales and Prince Arthur, both in the uniform of the Rifle Brigade, the Duke of Edinburgh, in the uniform of the Hon. Artillery Company, and Prince Christian. After the Royal carriages came the Master of the Horse and junior members of the Commander-in-Chief's Staff, the escort bringing up the rear.

Her Majesty was heartily cheered as she drew up to the saluting-point, when the band played "God Save the Queen" and a general salute was given. The stay at this point was short. Sir Garnet Wolseley was called up, and, after a few words with him, the Royal carriages started for the right of the line, Sir Garnet riding by her Majesty. The Royal carriages passed slowly along the line, returning in the interval between the first and second line, and then returned to the saluting-point. A change was now made in the disposition of the troops. The Highlanders kept their position on one side of a square, while the 23rd and Rifle Brigade marched round and formed the other two sides. In the centre of this all the dismounted officers formed up, and when all was in readiness her Majesty's carriage drew into the square.

The Queen here spoke to Sir Garnet Wolseley, thanked him for his services, and handed to him the Grand Cross of the Order of St. Michael and St. George. She also thanked Sir Archibald Alison, who has lost one of his arms, and the other was temporarily disabled. He was, therefore, unable to sit a horse, but stood in front of his brigade, with a mounted aide-de-camp at each side. The officers of the Staff were then introduced to her Majesty, who presented Lord Gifford with the Victoria Cross; and it was announced that another Victoria Cross would be bestowed upon Sergeant Samuel M'Gaw, of the 42nd, who is at present upon the sick-list. Her Majesty requested the Commander-in-Chief to convey her thanks to all the troops who had taken part in the expedition. The Queen then drove back to the saluting-point, and the march past commenced. The bands of the three regiments and the special service officers took up their positions opposite to her Majesty.

Sir Garnet Wolseley and his Staff first passed the saluting-point, followed by Sir Archibald Alison, commanding the brigade. Then came the company of Artillery and the Engineers. They were followed by the Welsh Fusiliers, who were warmly greeted as they passed. The same cordial reception was given to the 42nd and to the volunteers from the 79th. The Rifles followed, and were also well received. The rear was brought up by the men of the Army Service Corps and the Army Hospital Corps. The march-past over, the regiments again drew up in line, and Sir Garnet Wolseley, taking up his position with his Staff, in their front, took off his hat and called for three cheers for the Queen. These were given as heartily as they had been when he called for them in the market-place of Coomassie on Feb. 4. Her Majesty now prepared to leave the ground. The Royal salute was given, and, amidst the hearty cheers of the spectators, she drove off the ground.

The troops at once followed, and marched to some large marquees, where a substantial meal was provided for each man by the kindness of her Majesty. When the meal was concluded they again fell in, and marched through the town to the railway station.

After the review, Sir Garnet Wolseley, and some other officers of the Ashantee expedition, had the honour of dining with her Majesty at Windsor Castle. Prince Arthur and the Duke of Cambridge dined with them; but the Prince and Princess of Wales and the Duke and Duchess of Edinburgh returned to London.

It is announced that her Majesty will review at Osborne all the sailors and marines who served on the Gold Coast, from June 1 of last year, during the late Ashantee war.

SKETCHES IN ST. PETERSBURG.

The ordinary street sights in the modern capital of Russia have many peculiar features differing from those of other European cities. The carriages, but more especially the sledges used in winter, or sleighs as they are called in America, must be noticed by a foreign visitor. The Russian driver, the istvoschik, of such a conveyance in town or country, is not only skilful but willing to serve his passenger's convenience or caprice, by doing all he knows with the best speed of his horse, in obedience to the cry of "Shivai! shivai!"—that is to say, "Faster! faster!" which is frequently heard from the gentleman sitting muffled in the cloak and cap of furs. Rapid locomotion is the delight of the Russian as of the American citizen, for each lives in a big country, and has wide spaces to get over. Our Artist, who was at St. Petersburg the other day, gives us, in the page of his sketches engraved, an example of the genteel private sleigh, drawn by two horses, and one of the tradesman's one-horse equipage in which John Gilpin takes his wife out for a holiday airing. On the other hand, we observe in the sledge-trucks and barrows, used by town porters for the carriage of luggage and merchandise, a less expeditious and business-like style than we are accustomed to see in London. The organ-grinder and the knife-grinder are familiar enough as audible to our ears, though with some visible difference to our eyes; and the chiffonier, or dustman and rag-collector, is a necessary agent of city and household good order. We are reminded of the Russian Church and Dean Stanley's fraternal greeting to that religious communion by the figures of a monk and a nun. Should any reader wish for minute and authentic information, we refer him or her to a book just published by Messrs. Rivington, "Sketches of the Rites and Customs of the Greco-Russian Church," by H. C. Romanoff, a series of tales and essays, edited by Miss Yonge. The ecclesiastical, as well as the social, aspects of Russia present much that is worthy of study.

THE LATE DR. LIVINGSTONE.

The public will be pleased to hear that the Home Secretary has caused an intimation to be conveyed to the family of the late Dr. Livingstone to the effect that all suitable arrangements will be made, at the public charge, for the conveyance of the remains of the traveller from Southampton to London, and for their subsequent interment in Westminster Abbey.

It was resolved at a special meeting of the Royal Geographical Society that the remains of Dr. Livingstone should lie in state for a week in the Council-room. The funeral arrangements are left in the hands of the relatives, and the day of interment in Westminster Abbey will be settled as soon as Dean Stanley returns to town. The arrival of the body at Southampton will probably take place on Sunday next, and no time will be lost in transferring it to London.

The secretary of the American Geographical Society has sent a telegram to Mr. Clements R. Markham, asking the exact hour and day of the funeral, in order that the event may be celebrated on both sides of the Atlantic simultaneously.

Among Dr. Livingstone's papers were found a great many letters, bearing the dates of 1869-70-71, addressed to Sir Roderick Murchison, Sir Henry Rawlinson, and others, which had never been sent to these gentlemen. There were also found the Doctor's favourite gold-banded cap and Mr. Stanley's card.

Mr. Markham has received a letter from Captain Brine to the effect that, when the remains of Dr. Livingstone arrived at Gogo, Lieutenant Murphy had to resort to a stratagem, or the body would never have reached England. Taking out the corpse, he made it look like a bale of cloth, and sent the coffin back, and was allowed to proceed with the precious burden.

Rumours that the expedition led by Lieutenant Grandy in search of Dr. Livingstone had broken down are authoritatively contradicted. It appears that some of the followers had deserted; but the march was still being resolutely pushed forward, in ignorance, of course, that Livingstone was dead.

Mr. Kirk was on Wednesday elected member for Louth, the numbers being—For Mr. Kirk, 997; for Mr. Molloy, 507.—Renfrewshire election trial in the Court of Session has ended in favour of Colonel Mure. The judicial scrutiny showed 1990 votes for him and 1889 for Colonel Campbell.—Lord Ormisdale has had some nice points of ballot law submitted to him in the inquiry relative to the Wigton Burghs election, which Mr. Young lost by a couple of votes. In course of the scrutiny it was found that several votes had been thrown aside because they wanted the official stamp. One which had been admitted by the returning officer was objected to for having the cross outside the square, and another for having it on the left side of the voting-paper instead of on the right. Lord Ormisdale reserved his decision.—The Kidderminster election petition, which had been fixed for hearing before Baron Bramwell on Tuesday next, has been withdrawn by the petitioners, so that Mr. Albert Grant remains in undisturbed possession of his seat.—The petition against the return of Mr. Hopwood and Mr. Pennington for the borough of Stockport has also been withdrawn.—Mr. Alfred Smee, who has several times contested Rochester on Conservative principles, was presented last week with a testimonial from that city. The Mayor presided.—Mr. James Hunter, of Glenapp, who contested Glasgow at the last election in the Conservative interest, has been presented, in the name of the Conservatives of Glasgow, with a silver salver, and his wife with a diamond bracelet.—The return of nine Conservative members for the divisions and boroughs of Suffolk at the last general election was celebrated on Wednesday night by a banquet at Ipswich.

REVIEW AT WINDSOR OF TROOPS FROM THE ASSHANTER WAR: THE 42ND HIGHLANDERS MARCHING PAST THE QUEEN.

FOREIGN AND COLONIAL NEWS.

FRANCE.

Thursday, April 9.

There is a general dearth of news this week. The fussy Versailles legislators are enjoying their Easter holidays, and the so-called Permanent Committee appointed to watch over their interests and the nation's destinies has held as yet but one meeting, and that a mere formal sitting of five minutes' duration. The spring session of the General Councils, for which all parties are waiting to foment political agitation in the departments, will open, however, in the course of a few days, and very shortly the electors of the Nièvre will be called upon to choose a deputy, in place of General Ducrot, who, it will be recollected, resigned his seat at the close of last year.

The Cabinet appears to be very much pre-occupied as to what line of policy it will be preferable to pursue when the so-called Constitutional laws come on for discussion after the recess; and the Débats, which is becoming more and more Ministerialist every day, is now advocating the union of the Left and Right Centres, the former to receive two or three portfolios as the price of its support. The anticipated effect of this proposition has been to frighten most of the organs of the extreme Right beyond measure, and they are calling upon their deputies to rally round the Government and prevent the introduction of any Republican element into the Cabinet. A few black sheep, who refuse to be controlled, and are continually prophesying the establishment of the Monarchy for "next week," maintain, on the contrary, in the Gazette de France, that the Septennat is on its death-bed, that the Duc de Broglie and his colleagues will never again be able to rally a majority, and that the first act of the Chamber when it meets next month will be to place Henri V. upon the throne. This has called forth an announcement published anonymously, but evidently emanating from the Minister of the Interior, to the effect that the Government is resolved not to tolerate the false allegations circulated, not merely by the French but also by the foreign press, apropos of Marshal MacMahon's powers, and of the intentions of his Cabinet—a hint that home journals may expect suppression and interdiction from the public way should they dare to speak slightly of the present rulers of France, and that seizure at the frontier awaits such foreign newspapers as choose to follow that evil example.

M. Thiers has received this week a deputation of the French residents in Japan, which had made the journey from Yokohama to Paris expressly with the view of presenting the late President with an address and a superb garniture de cheminée, designed and executed by Japanese artists. After thanking them profusely, M. Thiers remarked that France continues to manifest every day her preference for a Republican form of government, and added that he felt convinced that the popular cause would eventually triumph. A gold medal has been presented to M. Thiers by delegates from the French residents in Peru.

M. Boulé, the first of Marshal MacMahon's Ministers of the Interior, died suddenly, in Paris, on Sunday last, at the age of forty-eight. The deceased was perpetual secretary of the Academy of Fine Arts, and owed his notoriety as a writer to his studies on the Cæsars, published in the Revue des Deux Mondes towards the close of the Second Empire, in which he openly compared Napoleon III. to the Emperors Domitian and Caligula. He failed completely as a politician. M. Boulé's funeral yesterday was numerously attended. All the deputies in Paris, including the members of the Left, were present. The President of the Republic was represented by the Prince de Berghes St. Winock, an aide-de-camp. The Duc de Broglie made a speech at the grave.

It will be recollected that, towards the close of last autumn, a series of murders were committed in the vicinity of Limours and Rambouillet, followed by the suicide of a rural postman, in whose letter-bag was found a missive denouncing several inhabitants of neighbouring villages as the perpetrators of these crimes. We now learn that, after detaining the accused in prison for over two months, the police authorities have convinced themselves of their innocence and set them at liberty.

The celebrated Bauffremont affair, which has been before the French tribunals for seven years, is now terminated, the Paris Court of Appeal having finally pronounced a judicial separation between the Prince de Bauffremont and his wife, and condemned the former, whom it finds guilty of all the charges of misconduct brought against him, in the costs.

SPAIN.

Nothing definite is known of the result of the hard fighting in the neighbourhood of Bilbao. There was an armistice of three days last week to remove the wounded and bury the dead. By telegram from Jean de Luz we are informed that Marshal Serrano has reopened his fire on the key position of the Carlists at San Pedro de Abanto, and that it is being feebly answered by the Carlists; but local opinion is divided as to the cause, which may be either strategical reasons or scarcity of ammunition. This renewed attack was not expected to have much result while the prevailing rough weather hindered the co-operation of the squadron. The Carlists are meanwhile strengthening their line of defence, which covers the road from Portugalete to Bilbao. The Carabiniers of Catalonia have, with a few exceptions, been sent to reinforce the Army of the North.

Great agitation is said to prevail in Tarragona owing to the demands of the coopers, who are on strike. The town is still blockaded on the land side by the Carlists, and many people are leaving by sea.

Santa Cruz, the Carlist curé, has undergone a trial by the French authorities at Bayonne, and been acquitted on the charges laid against him. A pre-existing municipal order for his expulsion from French territory will, however, be enforced.

From Cuba the announcement is made that General Concha has been installed as Captain-General at Havannah. General Concha has proclaimed his intention to exercise a vigorous policy. He invokes all Spaniards to rally round him. As an inducement to the planters, he states that the slavery question is to be postponed.

PORTUGAL.

The last sitting of the present Cortes was held yesterday week. The date of the next elections is not fixed.

The Portuguese newspapers attach great importance to the approaching exhibition of samples of Portuguese wines in London, and they express hopes that the British Government will aid the importation of these wines and those of Spain in competition with the wines of France.

GERMANY.

May 3 is the date appointed for the arrival of the Czar in Berlin. He will be accompanied by Prince Gortschakoff and three of the Imperial Grand Dukes.

The Emperor William and the Empress Augusta were present at the dinner given by the British Ambassador, Lord Odo Russell, at Berlin on Monday.

Herr von Forkenbeck, President of the Reichstag, has had an audience of the Emperor, in which he gave assurances to his Majesty confirming the expectations entertained that the question of the Army Bill would be settled without conflict between the majority and the Government. The President believed that the Reichstag would vote a peace effective of 384,000 men in a form acceptable to the Government. A meeting was held at Cologne, on Tuesday, at which an address was adopted declaring that it would be a national calamity if the Parliament and the Government failed to come to an understanding on the Military Bill, and urging the former to make advances to the latter so as to remove the painful uncertainty weighing on the country.

It is stated by the National Gazette of Berlin that Prince Bismarck is increasing in strength, though he still spends most of the day in bed. Prince Bismarck has replied as follows to the congratulatory telegram sent to him by the King of Bavaria on the occasion of the sixtieth anniversary of his birthday:—"Your Majesty's kind wishes and gracious remembrance of this day have given me much happiness. Will your august Majesty kindly accept my respectful thanks? I hope that, by God's help, I may soon be restored to my task, for the accomplishment of which your Majesty's goodwill and confidence will be indispensable." Replying to a resolution adopted at a Hamburg meeting of electors for the Reichstag, Prince Bismarck has thanked them for their confidence, and has said that the conviction expressed in the first commercial city of Germany in favour of maintaining on a permanent footing an army able to protect the labours of peace will find an echo in the country.

We learn from Strasburg that the Municipal Council of that city has been dissolved by Imperial decree, and that its powers will be exercised by the Director of the Police.

AUSTRO-HUNGARY.

It is stated at Vienna that this year's Austrian Red Book will not contain any of the correspondence which has passed between Count Andrassy and the Roman Curia with respect to the Austrian Church Bills. The Pope's letter to the Austrian Emperor will also be withheld, but Count Andrassy will offer explanations to the Delegations. When the Church Bills have been adopted by the Upper House of the Reichsrath they will be immediately submitted for the Emperor's sanction.

DENMARK.

The King's birthday (on Wednesday) was very loyally observed at Copenhagen, and the attendance at the Royal levée was unusually large.

Countess Danner, morganatic wife of the late King, was buried on Wednesday week, in presence of an immense crowd.

The Parliamentary Session adjourned on Wednesday week, having passed the estimates for the current year. It postponed the Government proposal for increasing the salaries of the Civil Service.

SWEDEN.

An end has been made to the Ministerial crisis. The King has accepted the resignation of the Minister of Justice, Herr von Adlercreutz, and has appointed him Governor of the province of Malmö. Herr Bredberg, Councillor of State, will carry on the duties of Minister of Justice ad interim.

RUSSIA.

A treaty of commerce and navigation between France and Russia was signed at St. Petersburg on the 1st inst.

The Government will, according to a Times telegram, shortly begin to work the coal-fields of Saghalin by convicts.

AMERICA.

Speeches of a most friendly character were exchanged by President Grant and M. Bartholdi, the new French Minister, on the official reception of the latter on Tuesday.

The Senate has passed a resolution requesting the President to intercede with England for the release of the Fenian prisoner Condon.

At the close of the debate on the Financial Bill in the Senate warnings were uttered by the Republican members against the inflation of the currency. Numerous appeals are being made in the country urging the President to veto the bill. A vigorous protest against the bill has been made by the Governor and Legislature of New York State.

Democracy has triumphed in Connecticut, having carried the governorship and a majority in the State Legislature sufficient to send a new Democratic representative to the Senate.

An immense mass meeting of Germans was held in New York on Tuesday, and a resolution passed protesting against the mismanagement of the emigration commission.

CANADA.

The New York papers publish the following full report of the speech of the Governor-General of Canada in opening the Dominion Parliament:—

Honourable Gentlemen of the Senate and Gentlemen of the House of Commons.—I have convoked Parliament at the earliest moment consistent with the delay entailed by its recent dissolution. Your attention will be invited during the present Session to measures having reference to the representation of the people in Parliament, embracing the system now prevailing in Great Britain and in most other countries enjoying constitutional government, of taking votes by ballot, and to the establishment of a general court of appeal. Measures will also be submitted to you for the amendment of the laws relating to controverted elections, militia, and insolvency. The enactment of 1872 respecting the Canadian Pacific Railway having failed to secure the prosecution of this great enterprise, you will be called upon to consider what plan will best and most speedily provide the means of trans-continental communication with British Columbia. A report of the chief engineer will be laid before you, showing what progress was made during the past year in surveys connected with the proposed line. The destruction of the railway offices by fire involved a serious loss of maps, plans, and papers, the possession of which would have made the report more complete. Canal and harbour improvements are being vigorously prosecuted, with a view to ensure adequate accommodation for the rapidly-growing trade of the country. The report of the chief engineer of the Department of Public Works on the proposed canal between the Gulf of St. Lawrence and the Bay of Fundy will be submitted for your consideration. With the progress already made in the construction of the inter-colonial railway, another year will be required to complete it; a report indicating its actual condition will be laid before Parliament, and a measure will be introduced to vest in the department of Public Works the powers now exercised by the Board of Railway Commissioners. The question of compensation due to the Dominion for fishery privileges conceded to the United States by the Treaty of Washington has given rise to a renewal of negotiations tending to widen the reciprocal trade relations with that country. At the instance of my Government, the Imperial authorities have given directions to the British Minister to discuss the whole subject with the Administration at Washington, and have associated with him for this purpose a Canadian Commissioner.

Gentlemen of the House of Commons.—The accounts of the last financial year will be laid before you, as well as a statement of receipts and expenditures of the present year, at the earliest practicable period. I regret to state that the receipts of the current year will not be sufficient to meet the expenditure. It will, therefore, be necessary for you to consider the best means to be adopted for making good the anticipated deficiency. Estimates for the ensuing year will be laid before you. They have been prepared with as much regard to economy as consistent with the efficiency of the public service.

Honourable Gentlemen of the Senate and Gentlemen of the House of Commons.—The combined efforts of the Dominion and Provincial Government to promote immigration have met with a reasonable measure of success, thus adding a considerable number of desirable persons from other countries to our industrial population. Notwithstanding the commercial depression which, through exceptional causes, has prevailed to some extent during the past year, it is satisfactory to know that the general prosperity will not thereby be seriously affected. I do not doubt but that, as the great natural resources of the Dominion become more widely appreciated, the results will be a healthy stimulus to the enterprise and energy of our people, and a still larger accession to our numbers. I trust that your deliberations may be directed by wisdom and aided by Divine Providence.

INDIA.

A telegram, dated April 4, from the Viceroy states that the weather during the fortnight has been singularly favourable; that the rain has done much good; and that, owing to the earliness of the spring harvest, people have been enabled to prepare the ground for the later crops. Except in Tirhoot, the condition of the people is said to be "decidedly good and hopeful." The total number of deaths from starvation is given as thirteen. It is feared, however, that a certain number of old people and children have succumbed, or will succumb, to privation besides these. When deaths occur on the relief works it is impossible to say whether they are due wholly or in part to starvation. The mortality from all causes on the roads in Tirhoot, meanwhile, is said to be singularly small. When the spring harvest, which now occupies certain districts, is over, it is expected that there will be a large addition to the number of people on the works.

The correspondent of the Daily News, telegraphing on Tuesday from Motharee, says:—"The outbreak of distress in Rannugger has been mastered. I consider that Motharee will be ensured against serious disaster if exertions continue as at present. There is bad news from Mudhobunee. 250,000 persons (a third of the total population) are on the relief works."

Reuter's telegraphic news, of Wednesday's date, from Calcutta is that rain has fallen in Northern Bengal with beneficial effect; that charitable organisation is working efficiently throughout Tirhoot and Chumparum; and that the arrangements to meet the distress in other districts are likewise proceeding well. The Durbhanga Railway will be completed this month, thus greatly facilitating the transport of grain.

The Times' correspondent at Calcutta telegraphed on Wednesday that the Hattie planters reckon 500 deaths as having occurred from disease and hunger. Relief is checking the mortality. Hailstorms have grievously damaged the indigo crop at Maldah. The tea manufacture in Cachar exceeds last year's production.

Important administrative changes have taken place at Calcutta, Sir George Campbell's health having compelled him to send in his resignation. Sir Richard Temple will at once succeed him. In the North-Western Provinces Sir John Strachey takes the place of Sir William Muir.

Indian news is this week diversified by the announcement of a discovery of coal at Darjeeling. A considerable quantity has been raised by the discoverers.

A telegram from Berne announces that the extradition treaty between Great Britain and Switzerland has been signed.

A Reuter's telegram from Adelaide, April 8, states that 2500 copper-miners have struck there in consequence of a reduction in wages.

Further particulars of the escape of M. Rochefort and his companions are telegraphed from Sydney. While on a fishing excursion they boarded a barque, and were stowed away in the hold until the vessel was clear of the land.

From Capetown we learn that alluvial gold has been found in the Bokkwell district, and that the Government has appointed a Commission to make the necessary inquiries. Hope Town, on the banks of the Orange River, has been nearly washed away by a great flood.

A telegram from Melbourne announces that the King of the Fiji Islands has ceded his sovereignty to England, and that Mr. Layard, the British Consul, has accepted the cession, subject to the approval of the Government. The Fiji exchequer is said to be insolvent, and an interim Administration has been formed pending the decision of the British Government.

The following is a list of the ships and number of emigrants sent to New Zealand by the agent-general for that colony during the month ending March 31, 1874:—The Buckinghamshire, for Otago, with 496 souls; James Wishart, Auckland, 283; Queen of Nations, Auckland, 347; Waikato, Wellington, 368; Northampton, Canterbury, 393; Halcione, Hawke's Bay, 337; Dunedin (from Glasgow), Canterbury, 495; Hindostan, Otago, 844; Caroline (from Queenstown), Otago, 359; Peerless (from Tinnaru), Canterbury, 260; Stonehouse, Canterbury, 430; Carlsburn (from Glasgow), Otago, 310. Total: 4413 souls.

The resignation of Mr. Addison, chairman of the Preston Quarter Sessions, was officially announced on Wednesday.

The Hall Barn Park Estate, near Beaconsfield, Bucks, comprising a mansion and about 3012 acres, has been disposed of by private contract to Mr. Allen Morrison.

According to a statement issued by order of the House of Commons on Thursday, the income derived from the Greenwich Hospital estates in the year ended March 31, 1873, amounted to £172,440, and the expenditure to £154,274, including £139,891 paid to the Consolidated Fund. The capital amounted to £3,230,376.

A soirée was held, on Tuesday, at the rooms of the Liverpool Art Club, Signall-street, to open an exhibition which comprises about 700 valuable and curious specimens of goldsmiths' work from various parts of the world. Although only about two years and a half have elapsed since Mr. P. H. Rathbone and other gentlemen established this club, yet it has done immense service in the way of art-education.

The roll of the Lords for this first Session of the twenty-first Parliament of the United Kingdom shows that the House consists of four Princes of the Blood—viz., the Prince of Wales, the Duke of Edinburgh, the Duke of Cumberland (described as the King of Hanover), and the Duke of Cambridge—2 Archbishops, 23 Dukes, 32 Marquises, 169 Earls, 37 Viscounts, 24 Bishops, and 195 Barons. This enumeration is according to their real titles, and not according to the title by which they hold their seats in Parliament. The Duke of Argyll, for instance, is counted among the Dukes, though he sits in Parliament only by virtue of being Baron Sundridge. The total number of peers of the realm is 482, there being one vacancy caused by the death of Lord Blayney, representative peer for Ireland. Seven years ago the total number was but 463, and it was only 478 at this time last year. The new creations shown by the roll for this Session are these:—Edward Viscount Cardwell; Lord Enfield, summoned as Baron Strafford in the lifetime of his father, the Earl of Strafford; the Earl of Breadalbane and the Earl of Normanton, created Barons of the United Kingdom; R. A. Shafto (Adair), created Baron Waveney; Henry Austin (Bruce), Baron Aberdare; E. Granville George, Baron Lanerton; James, Baron Moncrieff; John Duke, Baron Coleridge; William (Monseil), Baron Emly; Chichester Samuel (Fortescue), Baron Carlingford; Thomas Francis (Fremantle), Baron Cottesloe; Edmund, Baron Hammond; John Somerset (Pakington), Baron Hampton; and John (Wilson-Patten), Lord Wimmarleigh, the junior peer. Two names appear this Session high on the roll of barons in virtue of dignities some years since called out of abeyance, and now devolved upon male heirs—Edward Southwell, Baron de Clifford, and Charles Edward Hastings, Baron Botreaux, the third and the seventh on the list of barons.

A new church, the gift of Mr. Bass, M.P., was consecrated at Burton-on-Trent, on Tuesday, by the Bishop of Lichfield. The church, the parsonage-house, schools, and endowments have involved an outlay of about £50,000.

The special evening services in the nave of Westminster Abbey will begin next Sunday. The following are the preachers for the current month:—April 12, the Dean; April 19, the Rev. Harry Jones, Rector of St. George's-in-the-East; April 26, the Rev. T. J. Rowsell, Rector of St. Stephen's, Westbourne Park.

A handsome west window has been fixed in the parish church at Folkestone to the memory of Dr. William Harvey, the discoverer of the circulation of the blood, who was a native of Folkestone. The window is the gift of members of the medical profession of the United Kingdom, and has cost about £600. Mr. C. E. Kempe, of Beaumont-street, was the artist.

New schools in connection with St. Alban's Church, Holborn, which have been erected, at a cost of £4500, upon a site worth about £2000—presented by the Rev. A. H. Mackonochie—were opened on Wednesday. The new building is in Baldwin's-gardens, and is calculated to accommodate 160 boys and the same number of girls.

Worcester was on Wednesday given up to rejoicing and festivities in honour of the reopening of the cathedral, after undergoing complete restoration and ornate embellishment at the hands of Sir Gilbert Scott. The building has been under the control of architects and others for twenty years, and £100,000 has been spent on it. The result is pronounced satisfactory in the extreme. Two opening services were held at eleven a.m. and seven p.m., at which some 500 clergy attended, filling the choir, while the nave, aisles, and transepts were crowded with the select of the laity, admission being by ticket. The Bishop of Worcester preached in the morning, and the Bishop of Derry in the evening. The Mayor gave breakfast to the Corporation and the Freemasons of the province, and the Dean and Chapter entertained many distinguished visitors at the College Hall between the two services.

The Bishop of Chester has issued a pastoral, in which he urges the completion of the restoration of the cathedral as worthy of a combined effort throughout the diocese. He says: "We have now entered on the sixth year of this work, which, having been long acknowledged as obligatory and even necessary, was happily commenced at midsummer, 1863. In the interval much heavy work, to an extent far beyond what in the first instance was thought likely to be requisite, has been satisfactorily accomplished. All the foundations eastward from the transept have been underpinned. The fourth side of the cloisters has been replaced, in order to enable the north aisle of the nave to sustain stone groining. The outer roof of the entire length—nave, choir, and Lady chapel—has been entirely reconstructed; a very important operation, the results of which ordinary observers may find it hard to appreciate. The nave has been greatly embellished, as well as substantially repaired, by a most satisfactory vaulted ceiling of wood, the only material which the walls of the clerestory would bear. The proposed improvements in the interior of the choir and in the transepts, together with several minor restorations, must be expected to occupy at least three years; and, in addition to the £55,000, of which £50,000 have been already expended, £20,000 will be required."

Proxime accessit—A. W. Ready. The Rustat Scholarships offered by Jesus, for sons of clergy of the Church of England, have not been awarded.

At Magdalen, an open scholarship of the value of £60 has been adjudged to W. A. Gill, of Blackheath Proprietary School. Milner Scholarships, each of the value of £75, have been awarded to T. Horsman and W. C. Bolland, both of Leeds Grammar School. The open scholarships of £70 and £50 were not adjudged, there being no candidates of sufficient merit.

The first previous examination under the new rules will take place in the Easter term, commencing on June 5. It will consist of two parts, each embracing four subjects—viz., I. (1.) The Gospel of St. Matthew in the original Greek. (2.) Ovid's Fasti, Books V., VI. (3.) Herodotus, Book VI. (4.) A paper of questions on Latin and Greek grammar, with special reference to the subjects set. II. (1.) Paley's Evidences. (2.) Euclid, Books I., II., III. Definitions 1 to 10 of Book V., and propositions 1 to 19 and A of Book VI. (3.) Arithmetic. (4.) Elementary Algebra. The second examination begins on Dec. 5. These examinations are open to all matriculated students who have previously kept one term, and such may offer themselves for examination either in both parts or in one only. No student will be opposed for either part of the examination unless he shows a competent knowledge of all the subjects of that part. Matriculated students in their first term may present themselves for examination, but will not be held to have passed unless they be approved in both parts and also in the additional examination of candidates for honours. The students who intend to be candidates for honours in any tripos must pass this additional examination as well as both parts of the previous. The subjects of the additional examination are (1) algebra, (2) the elementary parts of trigonometry, (3) elementary mathematics.

The sixteenth annual report of the local examination syndicate has been issued. It shows that the total number of candidates had increased from 2077 (boys and girls) in 1869 to 3550 in 1873. There is a general falling off in the percentage of junior boys who passed last December compared with 1869, the number examined being one third more than in the latter year. The junior girls (whose number was nearly trebled in the five years) about maintain their percentage. The senior boys show a decided improvement; and the senior girls have increased their percentage of passes from 37.4 in 1869 to 63.8 in 1872, the failures being 62.6 in 1869 and only 31.2 in December last. The report concludes with a summary of the reports sent in by the examiners.

The Times' correspondent at Dublin states that the board of Trinity College has prepared a scheme of University reform. It is in the form of resolutions, the first of which proposes to form a new body, to be called "the Academic Council," which is to consist of four senior Fellows, four junior Fellows, four Professors, and four members of the Senate, all to be elected by cumulative voting, with the Provost as permanent chairman. The third resolution vests the appointment of all future Professors in this Academic Council, subject to the approval of the board; or if the two bodies disagree, the Visitors shall decide between them. The fourth resolution vests the general management of the college, except the financial department, in the Academic Council and the board; both bodies to agree before any change is made. The fifth resolution adds two junior Fellows to the board as assessors, but without votes. The constitution of the board is otherwise left unaltered.

In consenting to his nomination as an independent candidate for the rectorship of Glasgow University, Mr. Emerson writes that if elected he would endeavour to meet the wishes of the University in whatever duties might be required of him.

The Newcastle Scholarship at Eton College was given out on Thursday week. A list showing the result is subjoined:—1, Cooke, K.S., scholar; 2, Ritchie, K.S., medalist; 3, Farrer, 4, Browning, K.S., Perry, K.S., and Spring Rice, K.S.; 7, Hollway, K.S.; 8, Bryans, K.S., Collin, K.S., Oliphant, and Kyle, K.S.; 12, Mundy.

The entrance scholarships at Harrow have been awarded as follows:—First, F. W. Pember, from Mr. R. Chignell's school, Dover; second, R. B. Benson, from the Rev. L. Sanderson's, Elstree; third, S. C. Booth, from the Rev. L. Sanderson's. Proxime accessit, F. Dent, from Mr. O. C. Waterfield's, East Sheen.

The principalship of Cheltenham College is vacant by Mr. Jex-Blake's appointment as Head Master of Rugby School, vice Dr. Hayman. It must be held by a clergyman in priest's orders, who must be a graduate of Oxford or Cambridge. The salary is £800 a year, with a capitation grant of £2 on every boy above the first 200. As the present number in the school is 663, this increases the salary to £1726.

The Rev. D. L. Scott, M.A., late scholar of St. Peter's College, Cambridge, has been appointed Head Master of Spalding Grammar School.

THE PEABODY DONATION FUND.

The following is the report of the trustees for the year 1873:—During the past year the trustees have received from Mr. Peabody's executors, in accordance with the terms of his will, the sum of £150,000, so that the whole amount given and bequeathed by Mr. Peabody to the trustees is £500,000. To this sum has been added, by receipts from rent and interest, £78,059, making the total fund on Dec. 31 last £578,059. The trustees have expended up to the close of the year, in land and buildings, £300,000—say, £102,000 for land and £198,000 for dwellings. Upwards of £68,000 of this sum is at present unproductive, as two sites are not yet built upon, and the dwellings upon two other sites are not finished. The number of families now in residence at the trustees' buildings is 832, occupying 1875 rooms. The average rent per room is 1s. 10d. per week, and the average weekly earnings of the head of each family is about £1 3s. 1d. Although the cost of labour and building materials is constantly increasing, the trustees have not up to the present time advanced their rents, saving in a few exceptional instances; while at Shadwell, where there is a large number of very poor people, the rents have been reduced, so that the average per room in these dwellings does not exceed 1s. 7d. The rents have also been somewhat lowered at Islington. Since the issue of the report for 1872 the trustees have purchased a site of about four and a half acres near Grosvenor-road, Pimlico, and within a short distance of the Victoria station. Two more blocks, for the accommodation of forty-four families, have been built on the Blackfriars-road estate, which will shortly be opened, while sixteen blocks, for 352 families, are in course of erection on the site near Stamford-street. The dwellings in the Blackfriars-road are so much sought after that the trustees feel confident that the large number of tenements now being built by them on the south side of the river will be easily filled. The trustees had hoped to be able to open six new blocks of buildings at Bermondsey in the month of October last; but, owing to the tardiness of the contractors, they are not yet completed. These blocks will accommodate seventy-two families. The expenditure during the year, for land and buildings, exceeds £33,000, and the income of the two trusts amounts to £12,973. The net income derived from the buildings is about 2½ per cent per annum upon the outlay. It should, however, be stated that, while on the first buildings the income is under 2 per cent, on those lately erected at Blackfriars the return is over 4 per cent.

Sir Robert Phillimore, Judge of the High Court of Admiralty, has won the Swiney prize for the best published work on jurisprudence. This is the sixth award.

WORK AND WAGES.

The annual congress of delegates from the co-operative societies of Great Britain and Ireland was opened at Halifax on Monday. Mr. Thomas Brassey, M.P., delivered the inaugural address, in which he glanced at the successful working of co-operative principles at home and in foreign countries. He expressed his preference for men receiving a share of their employers' profits to the artisans themselves engaging in production. Amongst his suggestions for the development of co-operative principles was one for providing better amusements for the people by the cultivation of music and the drama.

The annual conference of the Miners' Amalgamated Associations began its sittings on Tuesday, at Manchester, under the presidency of Mr. Thomas Halliday; and the desirability of extending the operations of the union to Cornwall and Devonshire was the subject of a resolution which was passed unanimously. The members have increased by 6969 in the last six months, and now reach 106,368; but the capital of the association has decreased, owing to the necessity of having to support 1000 men continually in connection with the Burnley lock-out and various strikes, and partly owing also to the large sums which have been paid for the defence of the officers of the union at the Manchester Assizes on a charge of conspiracy. On Wednesday Mr. Halliday delivered an address on the present position of affairs, and the future steps that should be taken to benefit the great body of workmen bound up in the mining interests. Mr. and Mrs. Plimsoll were present at the afternoon proceedings, and a cheque for £1000 was handed to the former, as the result of a collection in aid of the Seamen's Defence Fund.

Mr. Thomas Hughes, who has acted as arbitrator between the carpenters and iron shipbuilders on the Tyne, has awarded an advance of 3s.—one half to date from February and the other to be given on June 1.

The engine-minders of North Staffordshire have reconsidered their determination not to accept a reduction of wages.

On Thursday week 1000 miners out of those on strike in South Staffordshire held a meeting, and unanimously determined that they would not accept any reduction, because they considered it would be unjust. Co-operation was strongly advocated, as were also arbitration and conciliation boards. There was a very strong determination on the part of the men to remain out on strike till the masters gave way.

A large meeting of colliers was held on Tuesday night, at Moseley Hall, near Wolverhampton, and the following resolution was passed:—"That, although we detest strikes, yet we cannot in honour consent to the present reduction, but are willing to submit the same to arbitration."

The miners of Notts and Derbyshire had a demonstration in the Nottingham Cattle Market on Monday, and resolutions in support of the Miners' Association were passed.

The Sheffield razor-forgers went on strike on Monday to enforce a demand for an advance of wages.

A meeting of the Monmouthshire and South Wales Colliery Association was held at Cardiff on Tuesday—Mr. R. Fothergill, M.P., in the chair. It was resolved to support the owners of the collieries, if necessary, from the strike fund. The price of coal is falling rapidly, and the question of a reduction of wages at once was considered.

The strike of bricklayers' labourers in Birmingham has put a check to building operations in the town and neighbourhood.

The executive committee of the National Agricultural Labourers' Union met on Monday, in Leamington. The Newmarket delegate reported that there was no sign of a settlement of the lock-out in the eastern counties; 150 more men were discharged on Saturday night in Suffolk, and altogether nearly 4000 are on the union funds. The consultative committee adopted a resolution declaring the demands of the locked-out labourers moderate and justifiable, and pledging themselves to give them all possible assistance. Tuesday's meeting of the locked-out labourers at Newmarket was largely attended, and Mr. Bailey, of Newcastle, who took the chair, strongly urged the men to leave the neighbourhood if their requests were not complied with.

A meeting of miners' delegates from all districts in Scotland, representing nearly 22,000 men, was held in Glasgow on Monday, to consider whether they should not follow the example of the Maryhill district, the men in which had agreed to accept the reduction of 20 per cent. After a sitting of more than four hours it was agreed by a majority that those who had notice of 20 per cent reduction should go in, and that further reductions should be resisted. Mr. Macdonald, M.P., in addressing those present, said it was a disgrace to the mine-owners of Scotland that they had not met their men at a board of arbitration, as had been done in most parts of England. The miners on strike in the west of Scotland have rejected the counsel of their delegates to submit to a reduction of 20 per cent in wages. So much dissatisfaction prevails among the men that in one district a vote of censure was passed on Mr. Macdonald, M.P., for his action in the matter.

The Scotch miners at Balacava, near Johnstone, have returned to work at 20 per cent reduction. The shale men at Inkmann have also resumed work. The miners of Clackmannanshire are now in every pit working at the masters' reduction of 10 per cent. Coals have been reduced in Alloa and Clackmannan to 12s. per ton, and a further reduction is anticipated.

The coal and ironstone masters of Scotland met privately in Glasgow, on Wednesday, and resolved that the furnaces which are damped out, and which comprise three fourths of all in Scotland, shall not meanwhile be blown in. It was further agreed to intimate to the coal and ironstone miners a further reduction of wages, in addition to the 20 per cent already announced.

POSTAL CHANGES.

The navigation of the Danube having been reopened, mails for Constantinople intended for conveyance via Vienna, Basiach, and Varna, will, until further notice, be made up in London twice a week—viz., on the evenings of Tuesday and Friday. Supplementary mails will also be made up on the mornings of every Wednesday and Saturday, on the chance of their reaching Vienna in time. No more mails for Constantinople will be made up for transmission via Trieste, so long as the more direct route via the Danube remains open.

The Post Office of Cape Colony having given notice that packets containing jewellery or other articles of value received in the colony are chargeable with customs' duties, the Postmaster-General thinks it necessary to make this regulation known to the public, and to state that any letters or packets containing such articles sent through the post to the Cape of Good Hope are, according to the colonial laws, liable to be detained, and not delivered to the addresses until the customs' duties have been paid.

The Goldsmiths' Company have granted £25, and the Dyers' Company five guineas, in aid of the Royal National Hospital for Consumption, Ventnor.

"POLICE VERSO."

In this famous picture, by M. Gérôme, the eminent French painter's extraordinary power of vivid dramatic conception, his great learning, and the not less astonishing artistic skill, precision, and completeness with which he realises his conceptions and presses his learning into service without pedantry, are all displayed to perfection. The picture is built up so scrupulously in accordance with classical authorities and antique remains that, without any dubious hesitation and with little effort of imagination, one may fancy a section of the old Roman Colosseum brought bodily before the eye—one may fancy oneself in the very arena, standing on the trampled, blood-stained sand, close to the gladiatorial slaves butchering their fellow-slaves, or being Butcher'd to make a Roman holiday.

Immediately above us, ranged along the podium, are the senators or other magnates and their wives or mistresses, "assisting," as in a dress circle; and to the left is the Emperor, in his private box, so to speak, refreshing himself with choice fruits, surrounded by a select suite; while beyond and above we catch a glimpse of the multitudinous spectators of various orders, who occupy the vast cavea, and fill the air with the hum and inhuman shouts of eighty thousand voices. What an insight into the true character of the old Roman Empire and its civilisation does not the picture afford! The scene is like some unearthed pandemonium. Happily there is nothing like it in modern civilisation, unless it be that poor parody of the Roman "sports," the Spanish bull-fight. For a parallel to the slaughter of the amphitheatre, which helped to support the tyrant rule of terror of Imperial Rome, we must look to the "Customs" of Ashantee; and on some occasions parts of the Eternal City must have resembled the charnel-house of Coomassie.

The picture we engrave may be regarded as a sequel as well as pendant to that equally famous work by M. Gérôme, where a group of gladiators, marshalled by their "editor," are paying the customary salute to the Emperor. "Ave, Cæsar Imperator, morituri te salutant!" There the conflict was about to commence; here it is terminating. In both the combatants are retarii and secutores. The retarius wears no body-armour, but endeavoured to hamper his antagonist with a net (rete, whence his name) and then to close in with his three-pronged fork or fusina. If he failed with his net he fled to arrange his net for a new cast. The secutor, or pursuer, who took his name from pursuing his adversary, the retarius, round the arena, if the latter made an unsuccessful cast with his net, was, as we see, provided with sword and shield, and wore some body-armour. There are many points of dramatic invention in the picture which intensify the horror of the incident depicted and show the brutalising influence of such exhibitions; but upon these we have not space to dwell. It may be observed, however, that two secutores have already fallen, slain probably by the retarius, who now at length lies at the mercy of the third secutor, whose foot is on his throat. But his bravery avails him not: the appeal of his raised hand and extended fingers for mercy is totally disregarded. Everywhere is given the signal for him to be dispatched—i.e., the thumb is turned down, or reversed, "pollice verso," whence the title of the picture. Not a single hand is raised in his favour; and, be it observed, the Roman women are foremost in their demonstrative thirst for blood. The utter apathy and indifference of the Imperial party are still more revolting. The Emperor scarcely deigns to turn his head as he carries the fruit towards his lips; that large-limbed, low-browed beauty toys with her necklace, scarcely noticing the tragedy beneath her. Etiquette forbids the condescension of expressing any interest in the life of slave or plebeian; the common spectacles of the arena can yield no interest to such as these—they are surfeited with the sight of blood. A little later, a languid excitement may perhaps be raised, when the arena is filled with wild beasts preying on Christian martyrs.

Objections having been made to the title of this picture, Mr. R. Hill Sandys, in a communication to Notes and Queries, points out that there is good authority for the word verso in the sense in which M. Gérôme has used it. "Juvenal, in his Third Satire, v. 36, in speaking bitterly of the alternating profusion and meanness of the rich upstarts and contractors of Rome, says—

Munera nunc edunt, et verso pollice vulgi,
Quem libet occidit populariter: inde reversi
Conducunt foras, &c.

And it is manifest that, in whatever way some may have interpreted the passage, the whole force of it—the aggravation of the power of life or death conferred by mean hands—is gone unless the words in question are taken to express the death-signal, the thumb verso—that is, in the fatal direction, or downwards."

Our Engraving is copied, by permission of Messrs. Goupil, from the large photograph of M. Gérôme's picture, published by them.

LIFE-BOAT SERVICES.

A meeting of the Royal National Life-Boat Institution was held, on Thursday week, at its house, John-street, Adelphi—Mr. Thomas Chapman in the chair. Mr. Richard Lewis, the secretary, having read the minutes of the previous meeting, rewards to the amount of £194 were granted to the crews of different life-boats for services rendered during the past month. The Wells life-boat had saved the crew of five men from the schooner r Marie, of St. Valéry-en-Caux, which was wrecked at Well East Point, in a gale from the north-east and a heavy sea. The Staton Carew life-boat had brought ashore eleven of the crew of the steamer Banborough, of North Shields, stranded at the mouth of the Tees in a gale of wind and a high sea, accompanied by snow showers. The North Deal life-boat had assisted to save the schooner Eliza Cornish, of Sunderland, which had driven on the Goodwin Sands in a heavy sea. The Skegness life-boat had also rendered assistance to the distressed sloop New Eagle, of Grimsby, and the Girvan life-boat had saved the crew of three men of the schooner Industry, of Girvan, wrecked on the bar off that place, a shore-boat having previously failed in an effort to get off through the surf to the rescue of the shipwrecked men. The second service clasp of the institution was voted to Mr. William Taylor, chief officer of her Majesty's Coastguard at Dunne Cove, in the county of Cork, in acknowledgment of his gallant services in putting off in the coastguard gig and assisting to save the crew of seven men of the wrecked brigantine Harriet William, of Llanolly. Other rewards were also granted to the crews of shore-boats for saving life from wrecks on our coasts. Payments to the amount of £500 were likewise ordered to be made on different life-boat establishments. Various contributions and legacies to the society were announced. New life-boats had been sent to Storehaven and Fraserburgh, N.B., and Carnsore, Ireland. Reports were read from the inspector and assistant inspectors of life-boats to the institution on their recent visits to the coast.

METROPOLITAN NEWS.

At the monthly meeting of the Farmers' Club, held on Monday evening, the subject for consideration was "The Farmers' Interest in the New Parliament."

At a special meeting of the Court of Common Council on Thursday it was unanimously resolved that, in the event of the Czar of Russia visiting this country, he be invited to an entertainment at the Guildhall.

The following gentlemen have been elected members of the Institute of Painters in Water Colours:—Messrs. John Tenniel, Wolf, Oakes, William Simpson, James Hardy, Syer, and Hauston, R.S.A.

Mr. Buckmaster has been engaged to deliver lectures on the objects and working of the National Training School for Cookery, accompanied by illustrations of simple and economic cookery, on Saturday afternoons during the Exhibition season, in the building in which his lectures were given last year.

How soberly Good Friday is observed by Londoners may be imagined (a correspondent of the Pall Mall Gazette observes) when one tobacco manufacturer received an order for 2 cwt. of birdseye, done up in half-ounce packets, from the landlord of a suburban place of great resort on holiday occasions. What an amount of beer must have been required to moisten such a consumption of tobacco!

The Commissioners appointed by the Board of Trade to inquire into the merits of an application by the Chartered Gas-light and Coke Company for a revision of the scale of illuminating power and the price of gas have made their award. Ordinary gas is to be of a power of not less than sixteen candles, and, from Jan. 1 last, is to be charged at the rate of 5s. per 1000 cubic feet.

It appears from the weekly return of metropolitan pauperism that the total number of paupers last week was 104,933, of whom 36,073 were in workhouses and 68,910 received outdoor relief. Compared with the corresponding week in the years 1873, 1872, and 1871, this was a decrease of 9661, 11,803, and 30,130 respectively. The number of vagrants relieved on the last day of the week was 543, of whom 375 were men, 124 women, and 44 children under sixteen.

A correspondent of the Times complains that those who have charge of the flower-beds in Hyde Park seem, in their summer arrangements, to forget that people have noses as well as eyes. Last year, except a few plants of heliotrope, there was not a single sweet-scented flower in the beds from the Marble Arch to Apsley House. Why should we not have plenty of sweet peas, mignonette, Italian honeysuckle, verbena, wallflowers, lilac, sweetbrier, and Scotch roses?

The Lord Mayor and Lady Mayoress, following a time-honoured custom in the city of London on Easter Monday, gave a dinner at the Mansion House, after the delivery before his Lordship, the Sheriffs, and members of the Corporation of the first of the two Spital sermons at Christ Church, Newgate-street. The guests were 220 in number. On Tuesday afternoon, in accordance with annual custom, the Lord Mayor and Lady Mayoress received the scholars of Christ's Hospital at the Mansion House. The boys, 726 in all, marched in procession from the school to the Mansion House, with their nurses and beadles, and were first shown into the Egyptian Hall. The Lord Mayor and Lady Mayoress, with the Sheriffs and Under-Sheriffs, were seated in the saloon, and as the boys marched past they received the usual Easter gifts in the following proportions:—Eighteen Grecians, one guinea each; five probationers, half a guinea each; forty-eight monitors, half a crown each; and 649 of the rank and file, one shilling each. A glass of wine and a bun were also given to each boy.

The fifth annual conference of the National Union of Elementary Teachers has been held this week; and on Tuesday evening, at the close of the second day's proceedings, upwards of 300 members of the conference, embracing teachers from all parts of England and deputations from Scotland and Ireland, dined together in the large room of the Cannon-street Hotel. The chair was occupied by Mr. H. S. Moore, of the British School, Cheltenham, president for the year. He was supported by Sir James Kay-Shuttleworth; Mr. Currie, vice-chairman of the London School Board; past presidents of the union, including Mr. T. Smith, of Marylebone, and Mr. W. Osborne, of York; and Mr. J. H. Devonshire, of London, the elected president of the next year's conference, which is to be held in York. At a meeting of the elementary teachers, held at the Cannon-street Hotel on Wednesday, Sir James Kay-Shuttleworth presided. Among the speakers were Sir Charles Reed and other members of the London School Board. Resolutions were passed recommending the appointment of a Minister of Education and the selection of school inspectors from trained teachers.

Last week 2086 births and 1349 deaths were registered in London. After making due allowance for increase of population, the births were 442 and the deaths 400 below the average numbers in the corresponding week of the last ten years. The annual death-rate from all causes, which in the two preceding weeks had been equal to 25 and 23 per 1000, further declined last week to 21. The 1349 deaths included 51 from measles, 11 from scarlet fever, 6 from diphtheria, 54 from whooping-cough, 30 from different forms of fever, 11 from diarrhoea, and not one from smallpox; thus to the seven principal diseases of the zymotic class 163 deaths were referred, against 182 and 170 in the two preceding weeks. The deaths referred to diseases of the respiratory organs and phthisis, which in the two previous weeks had been 649 and 551, further declined last week to 489, and were 126 below the corrected average weekly number: 200 resulted from bronchitis, 159 from phthisis, and 93 from pneumonia. Different forms of violence caused 48 deaths: 38 were the result of negligence or accident, including 16 from fractures and contusions, 4 from burns and scalds, 2 from drowning, and 12 from suffocation, including 10 of infants under one year of age. Five cases of infanticide, four of suicide, and one of manslaughter were registered. Four of the deaths from fractures and contusions resulting from negligence or accident were caused by horses or vehicles in the streets.

Without ceremony of any kind, but in a practical, business-like way, the Exhibition at South Kensington was, on Monday, opened to the public. At ten o'clock the turnstiles were unlocked to commence the clicking that was to last nearly all day as holiday visitors streamed in to push their way through the long winding alleys, galleries, and corridors. First among those who entered was Mr. Henry Cole, C.B., who, with a few of the directors who chanced to be present, comprised all that gave even a semblance of officialism to the beginning of the season of 1874. The present display includes three grand divisions—Fine Arts, Manufactures, and Inventions—which are subdivided into classes, whereof the fine arts have seven; manufactures six; and inventions, one; these classes being separable when necessary into sub-classes. The term "Fine Arts" is used in its most comprehensive sense, and, music excepted, embraces everything from oil paintings and sculpture to carpets, shawls, and lace. In the list of manufactures represented by machinery, substances, or processes, are lace-making, civil and mechanical engineering, heating by all methods and kinds of fuel, leather, including saddlery and harness, bookbinding, and foreign wines; while the single class of inventions comprehensively takes in new discoveries of every description. The Exhibition will now be open to the public daily at one shilling admission, except on Wednesdays, when the charge will be half a crown.

The Metropolitan Board of Works has decided upon the following alterations in the names of streets and numbering of houses within the metropolitan district:—Crab-tree-row and Birdcage-walk, Bethnal-green, to be incorporated under the name of Columbia-road, the subsidiary names abolished, and the houses in the whole line of thoroughfare re-numbered. Park-street, Queen's-square, and Queen's-street, Westminster, to be incorporated under the name of Queen Anne's gate, and the houses re-numbered. The names of Astbury-road and Coll's-road will be given to two new streets to lead out of Queen's-road, Peckham. Phillips-street and Howick-place, Westminster, to be incorporated under the latter name. Amherst-road and Amherst-road East, Hackney, to be incorporated under the former name. The alteration of the name Manor-street, Hatcham, to Friston-street, was objected to by the inhabitants, and the name of Tustin-street will be given to the thoroughfare in question. Gayhurst-road and Grange-road, Hackney, will be incorporated under the latter name. Greenman's-lane, Essex-road, Islington, to be called Greenman-street. The houses in the following places will be re-numbered and the subsidiary names abolished:—Parnell-road, Bow; Warner-road, Camberwell; Addington-road, Bow; Belsize-avenue, Hampstead; Lewisham High-road; Mack's-road, Bermondsey; Quadrant-road, Essex-road, Islington; irregularly-numbered houses in Newington, Islington, Old Bethnal-green-road, Burdett-road, Limehouse, and West India Dock-road.

WILLS AND BEQUESTS.

The will and two codicils, dated respectively June 13 and Aug. 21, 1869, and March 24, 1870, of the Right Hon. Edith Maud Mure Campbell Rawdon Abney Hastings, Countess of Loudon, Baroness Campbell, London, Mauchline, and Terrence, late of Donington Park, Leicestershire, who died Jan. 23 last, at Ventnor, Isle of Wight, were proved in London, on the 30th ult., by Frederick Abney Hastings, the husband of the deceased, the sole executor, the personalty being sworn under £4000. The testatrix bequeaths an annuity of £100 to her sister Lady Victoria Mary Louisa Kirwan, for her separate use; an annuity of £70 to Miss Julia Stuart; there are also legacies of jewellery, and a legacy of £50 to her agent. The residue of her property, real and personal, she leaves to her said husband. The will itself is all in the deceased Countess's handwriting; and, after desiring that her funeral may be as quiet as possible, she goes on to say, "I further wish my right hand to be cut off and buried in the park at Donington, at the bend of the hill to the Trent, and a small cross of stone over it, with the motto, 'I hyde my tyme.'"

The Irish probate, granted at Dublin on Feb. 24 last, of the will and codicil of Sir John Kingston James, Bart., who died Jan. 28 last, at No. 9, Cavendish-row, Dublin, was sealed at the principal registry, London, on the 31st ult., the aggregate of the personal estate of the deceased in England and Ireland being sworn under £30,000. The acting executors are testator's sons Francis Edward James and Charles Henry James, power being reserved to Dame Charlotte Rebecca James, the widow, the other executor, to come in and prove hereafter. The dispositions of the will are in favour of his wife and children.

The will and two codicils, dated April 8, 1867, Nov. 4, 1870, and April 23, 1871, of Dame Emma Septima Bingham, late of Heathfield Lodge, Ringwood, Hants, the widow of Major-General Sir George Ridout Bingham, K.C.B., who died Feb. 3 last, were proved on the 23rd ult. by George Plydell Mansell, the nephew, and Mrs. Emma Georgina Hoare, the niece, the executors, the personalty being sworn under £10,000. Subject to some legacies, the testatrix gives all her real and personal estate to her nephew Arthur Edmund Mansell.

The Boston (U.S.) Globe publishes the following abstract of Mr. Sumner's will:—"In September, 1872, just before Mr. Sumner left for Europe, he wrote in his own hand his will. He bequeathed all his papers, manuscripts, and letter-books to Henry W. Longfellow, Francis V. Balch, and Edward L. Pierce, as trustees; all his books and autographs to the library of Harvard College; his bronzes to his friends of many years, Henry W. Longfellow and Dr. Samuel G. Howe. He gives to the city of Boston, for the Art-Museum, his pictures and engravings, except the picture of 'The Miracle of the Slave,' which he bequeaths to his friend, Joseph B. Smith, of Boston. To Mrs. Hannah Richmond Jacobs, the only surviving sister of his mother, he gives an annuity of 500 dols. There is a bequest of 2000 dols. to the daughters of Henry W. Longfellow, 2000 dols. to the daughters of Dr. Samuel J. Howe, and 2000 dols. to the daughters of James T. Furness, of Philadelphia, 'which,' he says, 'I ask them to accept, in token of gratitude, for the friendship their parents have shown me.' The will directs that the residue of his estate shall be distributed in two moieties—one moiety to his sister, Mrs. Julia Hastings, of San Francisco, California; the other moiety to the President and Fellows of Harvard, in trust, for the benefit of the college library, the income to be applied to the purchase of books.

Mr. Baxter, M.P., in addressing his constituents at Arbroath on Monday evening, remarked that the new Ministry acceded to office at a happy juncture and under auspicious circumstances. As yet no cloud, however small, appeared on the horizon; all the various branches of industry—agricultural, commercial, and manufacturing—were fairly prosperous; pauperism continued steadily to decrease; and year by year the various classes of the community were drawing more together; political antipathies were becoming less violent, and men of all parties vied with each other in endeavouring to lessen or remove evils which were more or less incidental to a high state of civilization. Our relations to the United States—thanks to the Alabama treaty and other just and sensible acts—had entered upon an entirely new phase, and for constant bickering there had been substituted a feeling so friendly that, for the first time since the declaration of American independence, not a word was said against Great Britain at the last Presidential election. Then, on the continent of Europe the territorial arrangements of 1815, made solely in the interests of Kings and petty potentates, had given place to more stable boundary lines, based on nationalities, and dictated, not by the Princes, but by the people. There was a powerful and united Germany, able to protect itself and repress with a firm hand the restless ambition of France. There was also a free Italy, which looked upon this country as its best friend; and therefore, instead of conflicts at home and rumours of war abroad, we might reasonably look forward to the enjoyment of a period free from serious trouble.

NEW BOOKS.

The Russian conquests in Central Asia, which have alarmed British diplomacy for the outer military defences of India in Afghanistan, deserve our careful study. One of the most useful contributions to a more exact knowledge of this important subject is furnished by Captain H. Spalding, F.R.G.S., an accomplished master of the languages and contemporary history of several foreign nations. He has now translated from the Russian what appears rather like a semi-official treatise upon Khiva and Turkestan, which seems to have been published about a twelvemonth ago, just before the expedition of General Kaufmann against the Khan of Khiva. Captain Spalding, in the few observations of his brief preface to this very serviceable English version, takes a calm and impartial view of the conduct of the Russian Empire. This he is not prepared either wholly to condemn, or to justify in every act and pretext, with regard to its large territorial annexations within the past twenty-five years. The officially instructed Russian author of the narrative of those transactions here presented has no intention or occasion, writing probably for his own countrymen, to show a moral justification of his Government. It is enough that the Aral, as well as the Caspian, has been made a Russian lake, and the Sir Daria or Sihun, the ancient Jaxartes, has become little else but a Russian river. At the same time, we observe that Samarcand, the famous old commercial city of Turkestan, has been added to the Czar's dominions; while the two khanates of Khokan and Bokhara have been reduced to dependence, and will fall to the same vast empire by speedy reversion. The motive originally pleaded for commencing these forcible extensions of Russian rule was the lawless predatory incursions of the Turcomans, who are described as robbers, kidnappers, and slave-traders by profession. They are said to have been constantly doing harm among the pastoral Kirghiz tribes subject to the Czar, as well as in the Persian provinces of Khorassan and Seistan. There is sufficient evidence, we believe, of these inveterate and intolerable practices; and we also believe that the Mohammedan rulers of Turkestan were never able to check them. But if the Russian conquest of the steppe, with that object, was necessarily supported by the acquisition of military posts on the Sir Daria, it is not so apparent that the overthrow of the Turkish principalities, feeble and ill-ordered as they were, came within the requirements of an equitable policy. The reader may form his own opinion from this book, comparing its statements with those of several other publications, including Professor Vambéry's essays on Central Asia, which have recently been published for English perusal. In the work translated by Captain Spalding will be found the best descriptive account yet given of Khiva and its different races of people; while Vambéry has told us more of Bokhara. The character, habits, manners, and condition of the Turkoman race in general, and the physical aspect of the region called Turkestan, where they have dwelt so many ages under native or foreign dynasties, are quite worthy of attention. In the country around Khiva, south of the Aral Lake, a feature of much geographical interest is the river Amou Daria, the Oxus, which formerly had its lower course to the westward, flowing into the Caspian, instead of taking its present northward direction to the Aral. The proposal to restore the old watercourse by clearing out and reopening the dry bed of the river, which is 600 versts, or nearly 530 miles, in length, is said to be free from any great practical difficulties. We find in the singular physical configuration of this region, between the Caspian and the Aral, and farther east to the Pamir table-land, connecting the Hindoo Koosh with the Thian-Shan mountains, a highly interesting subject considered as matter of natural science. Those who prefer anecdotes of the household life and personal behaviour of a strange, half-barbarous Asiatic nation, where the ingrafted religion and morality of Islam found a ruder and harsher native character to grow in, than among the Arabs and Persians, will be equally entertained by reading this volume. The narrative of General Perofski's unsuccessful expedition against Khiva in 1840 will engage the student of military history, and will be a useful preparation for that of General Kaufmann's more effectual campaign last summer. The excellent map of Central and Western Asia prefixed to this volume is alone worth the price of the book, for no such complete and minute delineation of that region can elsewhere be procured, in a convenient form, to meet the wants of English readers. Captain Spalding has done them a substantial service by his English version of a very instructive work.

A deeply interesting, affecting, but at the same time sickening, narrative is brought to its climax and conclusion in the third and fourth volumes of History of Two Queens, by William Hepworth Dixon (Hurst and Blackett). The two Queens, it will, no doubt, be remembered, are Catherine of Aragon and Anne Boleyn. When the first two volumes were noticed, due attention was drawn to the reasons—based chiefly upon the fact that many perfectly new and original sources of information had been consulted—why the author was quite justified in re-writing that which, as regards its most prominent features, is a far from unfamiliar portion of English history. Acknowledgment also was made of the pains taken and the elaborate care bestowed upon details, down to a statement of authorities relied upon and an index for the facilitation of reference, in order to arrive as nearly as possible at completeness; and the acknowledgment has to be repeated on the present occasion. Repeated, too, must be some remarks which seemed to be applicable to the style. It is not the true historical style, simple, unaffected, and yet grand, pathetic, tender, and striking, whenever it should be so, merely from spontaneous inspiration derived from the very nature of the facts recorded; it is the studiously and pretentiously ornate style. The writing is, undoubtedly, effective and picturesque; but sometimes, not to say very often, the reader is, for that very cause, liable to be led away by contemplation of the writer's manner from consideration of his matter. A similar blemish, if it be a blemish, for modern taste may decide to the contrary, is observable in the divisions of the volumes and in the headings of the divisions and of the chapters: instead of the sober, straightforward method of history we have the ad captandum arts of the three-volume novel. "May-day dream," "a declaration," "the response," "forward!" "sword and block," "stroke and stroke," "agony," and the like, placed at the top of various chapters, savour far more of the tricks whereby the novelist seeks to administer a filip to flagging attention than of the plain indications whereby a grave historian marks his progress from point to point until he reaches the end of his task. However, these are trivial things, worthy enough of passing notice, but utterly unworthy to be dwelt upon when, to set against them, there is a really valuable work of extraordinary interest and, for the most part, exceedingly readable. The sunshine with which the two former volumes concluded does not penetrate far into the two latter, which are lighted up, indeed, by fitful gleams, but, so far as the two poor queens are concerned, are pervaded generally by domestic gloom. The idolized Catherine, when hope after hope of a son has been crushed, is shown sinking to the condition, or, at any rate, the repute, of the "concubine" who must be discarded; and scarcely has she been succeeded in her slippery eminence by Anne Boleyn, when we see the apparition of Jane Seymour coming to displace the latter. The two doleful tragedies are dramatically handled; and the love-passages between Anne Boleyn and Thomas Wyatt, the poet, are gracefully and pleasantly introduced and dealt with. Those who wish to see Henry VIII. whitewashed in respect of the "two queens" must have recourse to some other historian.

THE MAGAZINES FOR APRIL.

The Cornhill has no very special claim to attention this month beyond an able summary of Livingstone's career by a fellow-traveller, the Rev. H. Rowley, who accompanied the University Mission expedition. Livingstone's habits and character, Mr. Rowley thinks, by no means qualified him to lead a large body of men, or to organise an enterprise on an extensive scale. The writer's personal experience of him, accordingly, was comparatively unfavourable; but this does not impair his estimate of the grandeur, originality, and utility of the renowned traveller's career regarded as a whole. It is amusing to learn that Livingstone felt disappointment at not being knighted. The idea of conferring this particular honour upon a missionary will be new to most people. "Far from the Madding Crowd" is continued in its accustomed vein, and Miss Thackeray treats us to another of her pretty modern versions of fairy tales—"The White Cat"—in which, however, the resemblance to the prototype is less accurate than usual. An essay on Mrs. Browning contains some sound criticism, but omits to refer to those fatal flaws in rhyme and diction which mar her best work so seriously, and will be found, in the long run, to have condemned much to oblivion that might and ought to have been durable.

The contents of Fraser are varied and interesting, including an able article on the present conflict between Church and State in Germany, a valuable account of the telegraphic branch of the postal service, and a thoughtful essay by Professor Newman on the efforts of ancient Greece to obtain political unity. Ilkley is the "old Yorkshire village" whose "omniscience," especially as it relates to popular superstitions, is so pleasantly told by Mr. M. D. Conway. A somewhat similar sketch of old-world manners is conveyed in Mr. King's recollections and traditions of old-fashioned Dartmoor parsons. "General" Cluseret's narrative of the ecclesiastical squabbles in Switzerland is extremely dry and tedious, but offers one useful generalisation—"Ultramontanism is in inverse proportion to the fervour of the populations."

The writer of "Alice Lorraine" in Blackwood is determined to pique our curiosity to the uttermost; the astrologer's mysterious bequest is actually in his heroine's grasp, but she and we are as yet ignorant of its nature. "Disorder in Dreamland" is founded on the whimsical notion of two dreams dispatched for the admonition of mortals respectively going astray and becoming established in the wrong heads. This curious fancy is worked out with much humour. Blackwood's natural exultation at the Conservative victory is tempered by the judicious reflection that "in the new constituencies there is a large mass of unattached voting power which owes no party allegiance," wherefore "we may expect to see the ship of State lurch more readily and thoroughly in time to come than in time past." The naval officer's diary from Ashantee is less valuable as a chronicle of the expedition than as an exhibition of the prevalent feeling of those who participated in it.

Macmillan has one very substantial paper, Mr. Albert Dicey's thoughtful discussion of the proposed reforms of our judicial system, and a number of slight ones, among which "The Philology of Slang" deserves especial mention. The Mendelssohn correspondence is continued, as also the letters from Spain, which comprise an interesting description of Murillo's house. "Castle Daly" is spirited and thoroughly Irish. Mr. Myers's lines on Tenerife are steeped in gorgeous colour, but the artifice of diction is too apparent.

The Fortnightly is solid and rather heavy, even its solitary contribution to belles lettres, Mr. Pater's essay on Wordsworth, requiring very close reading. Mr. Morley, in his trenchant attack on "compromise," appears to us to confound two very different things—M. Renan's utterly condemnable conception of truth as the property of an enlightened caste, by whom ignorance is designedly fostered as the suitable condition of the multitude, and the moderation which, while never acquiescing in compromise as a permanent arrangement, is content to accept it provisionally, as a stepping-stone to better things. Without committing himself to a positive opinion, Dr. Maudsley evidently thinks that the intellectual cultivation of women is being carried to a point at which it threatens to become injurious to their physical welfare. The principal impression which we derive from Mr. Colvin's paper on the Indian famine is one of the extreme uncertainty of all data on the subject; and the consequent claim of the Indian Government to indulgence, should it prove to have been in some respects mistaken.

The Contemporary is as copious and interesting as usual, although the former epithet is more appropriate than the latter to Mr. R. H. Horne's discussion of his own metrical theories under colour of publishing his correspondence with Mrs. Browning. Archbishop Manning contends that the Ultramontane dogma is as much maintained by Protestants as by Catholics, a dictum to which we shall subscribe when we find Protestants claiming for the Church the right not merely of enunciating propositions in faith and morals, but of "defining the limits of her jurisdiction." Dr. Bastian concludes his appeal to evolutionists to embrace the doctrine of spontaneous generation as a logical deduction from their own principles. Mr. Ralston contributes a graceful paper on "Russian Idylls," with renderings of some very beautiful passages in elegant rhythmical prose. Mr. Haws's marmoset might have been a fitting and seasonable tribute to the late lamented Emanuel Deutsch by dwelling on the grievances of the deceased against the authorities of the British Museum, which seem to have been of the most trivial character. The only one not utterly below the dignity of history is that a "Keepership of Semitic Antiquities" was not specially created in Mr. Deutsch's favour. It would have been necessary to have first created the antiquities, which are, unfortunately, less abundant in Great Russell-street than in Houndsditch.

The best contribution to a good number of Scribner's Monthly is a continuation of the beautifully-illustrated series on American topography. Virginia is this time the subject; the account of the resources of the country and of the relations of the white and coloured inhabitants is as encouraging as that lately given of Louisiana was the reverse. Miss Beedy, comparing the health and physical habits of English and American women, acknowledges the superiority of the former in both respects, but considers that they exhibit less power of leaping up against pain and sickness. The back, we must suppose, is adapted to the burden.

The Transatlantic offers, as usual, a good selection from various quarters, the most interesting paper being General Sherman's narrative of his fruitless endeavour to suppress the vigilance committee, as commander of the Californian militia, in 1856.

The most interesting contribution to the Month is an amusing expeultation with Mr. Capes on his return to the Church of England. The reverend gentleman, it appears, has unadvisedly left "a land flowing with milk and honey" for "a barren and dry land where no water is;" he cannot, therefore, be accused of hankering after the fleshpots of Egypt, at any rate.

In addition to its trio of novels, Tinsley has a very interesting notice of the recent edition of Chatterton by Mr. Skeat, who has done much to restore the beauty of the Rowley poems by modernising the spelling, a curious but legitimate inversion of the usual modus operandi of antiquarian editors.

The most noticeable paper in Belgravia is Mr. Sala's sketch of the caricaturist Gilray.

In London Society we remark Mr. Hatton's tribute to the memory of Shirley Brooks; Mr. O'Shaughnessy's Portraits Charmants, with its brilliant Moorish pictures; and Miss Beale's essay on amateurship, with its shrewd observation that the only amateur who, having once made a hit, was ever known to leave off is the "Amateur Casual."

In the Gentleman's Magazine we have especially to note the continuation of Mr. Francillon's "Olympia," an eloquent though somewhat crude essay on Shelley's "Prometheus Unbound;" an article on the Tichborne trial, lively enough to be interesting after all that has been said on this exhausted topic; and the first of a very promising series of Parliamentary sketches. The writer is mistaken in regarding "Bezonian" as a proper name.

Chief among the multifarious contents of the Popular Science Review are articles on gigantic cuttle-fish, the pulse-recorder, the field telegraph, sidelights on the potato disease, air beneath the microscope, and the transmission of sound by the atmosphere; the Victoria Magazine prints a full report of the recent discussion on Spiritualism before the Victoria Discussion Society; Good Words has a fine tribute to Livingstone by Sir Bartle Frere; and the Sunday Magazine a beautiful sonnet signed Caroline North.

The New Quarterly assumes fully as peculiar a place among magazines from the style of publication as from the mode of issue. The contributions are nearly all distinguished by sterling merit, while at the same time presenting a decidedly amateurish air. Mr. Latouche's tour in Portugal abounds with interesting information; the editor's essay on Blake, plain and sensible in intention and execution, yet manifests no inconsiderable power of sympathy with the mystical temperament; and Mr. Freke Turner's paper on the wine trade affords abundant proof of a practical acquaintance with the subject.

NATIONAL SPORTS.

We have now commenced the racing season in earnest, and during the past week something like thirty meetings have taken place in different parts of England. Of course most of these were very insignificant; but one or two demand a passing notice. The repeal of the law against two-year-olds running before May 1 has been signalled by the restoration of the Althorp Park Stakes to the Northampton Meeting, and the fixture proved very successful. Cashmere, the winner of the Brocklesby Stakes, won the chief two-year-old event pretty easily, in spite of her penalty; but, as Slumber gave her 26lb. and a head beating in the Whittlebury Stakes, she is not likely to show to much advantage later in the season, when some of the crack youngsters make their appearance. The Great Northamptonshire Stakes—"great" only in name—brought air to the post, and proved an easy victory for Glensaele (5st. 12lb.), who was the least fancied of the half-dozen runners. Lilian (9st. 3lb.) obtained her old position of third, and will probably win a good race when she has not quite so much weight. In the Trial Stakes Winslow, the best Lord Clifden that has yet run, showed that he retained all his brilliant speed; and Quantock, a greatly-improved colt since last year, won a couple of races for Mr. Pigott. There were two fair days' sport at Durham, the most interesting event being the Lambton Stakes, in which Orgonist extinguished the City and Suburban prospects of the M. s. Hawthorn colt, by giving him 16lb. and an easy beating.

The contest for the Public Schools Racket Challenge Cup was commenced at Prince's Club, Chelsea, on Tuesday last. Two representatives had been chosen from each of the eight schools, and each match was the best of seven games. Harrow (C. W. Middleton-Kemp and F. D. Leyland) and Cheltenham (E. S. Browne and G. C. Pakenham) were the first to enter the lists. Harrow obtained possession of the last challenge cup by winning it three years in succession, and her representatives had not much difficulty in disposing of Cheltenham by four games to one. Wellington (J. W. Dosdale and R. B. Stuart) then beat Haileybury (S. Snow and B. Stephenson) by four games to three, after a hard struggle. Marlborough (F. H. Lee and A. K. Buttworth) beat Eton (Hon. A. Lyttelton and H. E. Whitmore) by four games to two; and Rugby (F. W. Heather and G. F. Vernon) could not win a single game against Winchester (H. B. Holling and H. R. Webb). On Wednesday the first ties were commenced, and, chiefly owing to the fine service of Middleton-Kemp, Harrow beat Marlborough by four games to none. The match between Winchester and Wellington was equally hollow, the former winning four games in succession. The final match between Harrow and Winchester took place on Thursday, when the Harrovians proved successful for the fourth time.

A football-match between picked teams of London and Sheffield was played at Bramhall-lane, Sheffield, on Saturday last, and resulted in the defeat of the visitors by four goals to two. This was the third contest this season between the same clubs, and the Sheffield men have won twice, and made a tie off on the third occasion.

Mr. Arthur Pease, Mayor of Darlington, on Wednesday, laid the foundation-stone of the chapel of a cemetery, which will cost £20,000. The cemetery, which has been presented to the town, is one of the many benefactions of the Messrs. Pease, who are owners of large mining properties in Durham and Cleveland. The gift has chiefly been resolved upon in consequence of a wish of the late Mr. Joseph Pease, the father of the donors, that the working classes should not be compelled to make their interments at such a great distance, entailing heavy costs and inconvenience.

The figure of a man, 230 feet long, traced on the side of Wilming-ton-hill, which attracts so much attention on the South Coast line of railway leading to Hastings, has had its outline completely restored. The figure is of great antiquity; but its date, origin, or purpose cannot be traced. Hitherto the outline has been marked by simply cutting the turf away and exposing the chalk beneath, but it is now shown by the insertion of white bricks in the space, thus preventing the lines from becoming obliterated. The "Long Man," as it is locally termed, is represented as holding a staff in each hand, the distance between them being 119 ft. The Duke of Devonshire, on whose ground the figure is delineated, has greatly assisted the work.

REVIEW AT WINDSOR OF TROOPS FROM THE ASSAULT WAR: THE QUEEN PASSING ALONG THE LINE.

THE LATE SIR W. BODWIN, ASSISTANT JUDGE OF THE MIDDLESEX SESSIONS.

THE ASHANTEE WAR : MISSIONARY RELEASED FROM ASHANTEE.

FALL OF A TREE IN CAMP.

THE LATE SIR W. BODKIN.

The death of this gentleman, who had retired very lately from the office of Assistant Judge of the Middlesex Quarter Sessions, has been mentioned in our Journal. He was above eighty years old. His father, Mr. Peter Bodkin, was one of a family long connected with the county of Galway. The late Judge was born in the year 1791, and was educated in London. He was called to the Bar by the Honourable Society of Gray's Inn in 1826. During several years he went the Home Circuit, practising largely in criminal matters at the Middlesex, Westminster, and Kentish Sessions, and also at the Central Criminal Court. He held for some years the Recorder'ship of Dover. At the general election in 1841 he was returned to Parliament, in the Conservative interest, as the colleague of Mr. J. Stoddart Douglas, in the representation of Rochester, defeating Lord Melgund (now Earl of Minto) by the narrow majority of two votes. He was defeated at the next general election (in 1847), the two seats for Rochester being gained by Mr. Bernal and Mr. Twisden Hodges. He was one of the earliest members of the Society of Arts, of which he was a vice-president. He wrote a pamphlet, published in 1821, on subjects connected with the administration of the poor-law system. He was a Bench of Gray's Inn and a deputy-lieutenant of Middlesex, and received the honour of knighthood in 1867, some years after taking his seat upon the judicial bench at the Middlesex Sessions House. It will be remembered that Sir William, who suffered from a painful malady, resigned his office some weeks ago, and was succeeded in it by Mr. Edlin, Q.C. Sir William was twice married; first, in 1812, to Sarah Sophia, eldest daughter of Mr. Peter Raymond Poland; secondly, in 1865, to Sarah Constance, daughter of Mr. Joseph Johnson Miles, of Highgate, Middlesex.

The Portrait is from a photograph by Mr. John Watkins, of Parliament-street.

THE ASHANTEE WAR.

One more view of Cape Coast Castle is presented in our Journal of this week. It is the view from MacCarthy Hill, on the north-east side of the town. This high ground is one of the healthiest places in the neighbourhood. Here was the principal hospital, and the chaplain, the Rev. Stewart Patterson, had his tent pitched here. The flat-topped hill to the right is Connor's Hill, likewise a sanitarium. Fort Victoria and Fort William, upon their respective eminences in the background, are seen in the middle of the view, directly opposite the spectator, looking across the valley. To the left, upon a long ridge sloping down towards the sea, is the town of Cape Coast Castle, in which the most conspicuous buildings are the Wesleyan chapel, the Post Office, and the Episcopalian church. The last-mentioned church was turned into an hospital, and the chaplain used to perform Divine service in the Wesleyan chapel, attended by Sir Garnet Wolseley and his staff when at Cape Coast Castle. Farther to the left hand, and close to the sea, is the Castle or Government House, with its batteries and barracks. In the roadstead outside, a mile or mile and a half from shore, lie several of our ships—the Active, under Commodore Hewett, the Druid, the Argus, and the Decoy, a gun-boat; lastly, the troop-ship Sarmatian, which took out to the Gold Coast one of the gallant regiments that were to capture Coomassie. Two of the minor incidents on the inland march of Sir Garnet's little army find their representation in the smaller Engravings, which are, like the view of Cape Coast Castle, from Sketches by our Special Artist. The arrival in camp of a missionary, who had been detained by the Ashantes in captivity, is shown in one scene; this story has been told on a former occasion. The other sketch is that of a night alarm from the breaking down of a bough of the tree above the roof of a hut which sheltered a travelling party. They fled in great dismay, and their rest was disturbed for that night without relief or remedy; but the accident had no more serious consequences. We may here again remind our readers of the publication entitled "From Cape Coast to Coomassie, an Illustrated History of the Ashantee War," in which they will find many of the Engravings from our Special Artist's sketches, collected and reprinted, with the only complete narrative of the late campaign that has yet been written.

JAPANESE DANCING GIRL.

Though female actors do not usually take part in Japanese theatrical performances of the dramatic kind, the exhibition of female dancers is common. Little girls of five or six years were formerly purchased for this trade by the managers of such entertainments, to whom they were sold by their mercenary or needy parents. The manager was bound to teach and train the girls, and to maintain them in his service till they were twenty-five or thirty years of age, when they became free. In the illustration we have engraved, one of these young people is seen practising her steps and gestures with the fan, to the accompaniment of a guitar played by the other girl. This occupation, being fairly profitable and agreeable to the popular taste, is not likely to be discontinued. But, among the legal and social reforms that have taken place in Japan during the last two or three years, we hear of the abolition of the law which used to permit the sale of girls. The Yoshiwaras, or licensed establishments where they were kept, had become places of scandalous license, which had a baneful influence on domestic life. Saltare elegantius quam necesse est proba. They are now broken up, and every girl or woman is free to work for her own livelihood as she chooses. At the same time, marriage is better protected and regulated by the new laws, which are designed to lessen the number of divorces obtained on frivolous pretences.

LAW AND POLICE.

Application for another trial has been made to the Home Secretary in the case of Arthur Orton; and the reply has been that legal grounds for a new hearing must be stated by the prisoner's attorney before the question can be entertained.—The committee appointed by the Benchers of Gray's Inn have notified to Dr. Kenealy that they will, on the 16th proximo, investigate the circumstances connected with his conduct of the defence in the Tichborne trial. He will be examined in ex-tenso, and the inquiry will be conducted with closed doors.—At a meeting of the members of the bar of the Oxford Circuit, held at Gloucester, on Thursday week, it was decided to exclude Dr. Kenealy, who is a member of the circuit, from the bar mess.

Damages in the sum of £50, the amount having been laid at £2000, were given by an Ipswich jury to the Rev. Dr. Ashley, Curate of Blakenham, against Mr. Frederick Howard, a farmer, for an assault.

The Mayor, Aldermen, and Corporation of Manchester obtained, on Wednesday, at the Liverpool Assizes, by agreement, a verdict for £6000 damages from Mr. W. Crippin, proprietor of the Bryn Hall Colliery, near Wigan, for the non-delivery of a large quantity of gas coals which the defendant had contracted to supply them with.

Messrs. F. and R. Powell, who formerly carried on in Bristol a large business as ale and porter merchants, on Wednesday brought an action to recover £10,000 damages from the West-of-England and South Wales District Bank. In January, 1872, the plaintiffs had in the bank £200 to meet an account due to a Dublin firm for which they were agents, but this sum was by mistake debited with cheques drawn by another firm of a similar name. When the agent of the Dublin firm presented the plaintiffs' cheque he was told there was no money to meet it, and, as the result, the Dublin agency, worth several hundreds a year, was withdrawn, and within a twelvemonth the plaintiffs were declared insolvent, entirely, as they alleged, through the error committed by the defendants. The jury found for the plaintiffs, damages £200.

At the Central Criminal Court, on Tuesday, James Lindsey, a law clerk, pleaded guilty to embezzling and stealing money to the amount in all of nearly £2000, belonging to his employers, Messrs. Jones and Arkcoll, solicitors, in Tooley-street, in whose service he had been for over nine years as cashier and accountant. The Recorder sentenced him to seven years' penal servitude. In the Common Serjeant's Court Benjamin Lee, a Post Office telegraph boy, pleaded guilty to a charge of obtaining 5s. by false pretences. The prisoner went to the house of Baroness Burdett-Coutts with a pretended telegraphic message, which turned out to be entirely fictitious, and received 5s., the supposed Post Office charge for this message. It was stated that the friends of the prisoner had made arrangement to send him abroad. He was sentenced to four months' hard labour. John Williams, a letter-carrier, pleaded guilty to stealing a post-letter, and was sentenced to five years' penal servitude. Amelia West, aged forty-one, a widow, pleaded guilty to forging two cheques for £43 and £20, and an order for a cheque-book, with intent to defraud the London and Westminster Bank. The prisoner, who was strongly recommended to mercy by the prosecution, and received a good character, was sentenced to four months' imprisonment. Ample apologies and a tender of pecuniary compensation having been made by Arthur Foster, a Government clerk, arraigned on the charge of feloniously and maliciously wounding Frederick Denyer, hotel proprietor, the Recorder said he felt justified in acceding to the proposal for settling the action, but it was a case for most ample recompense. The prisoner was then allowed to enter into his own recognisances in the sum of £500 to come up for judgment if called upon.—On Wednesday the grand jury returned true bills against Carl Lundgren, alias Jean Luis, for perjury and bigamy, and against "Captain" Brown for perjury in connection with the recent Tichborne trial. Later in the day the prisoners were placed at the bar, and, both having pleaded "Not guilty," Mr. Justice Brett directed that the trial should take place on the following day. Mrs. Dowling, who had been committed on a charge of having murdered her infant, was found by the jury in an unfit condition to plead to the indictment, and she will, therefore, be detained during her Majesty's pleasure. The two Frenchmen, Dacosta and Dumas, pleaded guilty to breaking into the house of Mr. Wilkinson, St. Michael's-alley, Cornhill, and each of them was sentenced to eighteen months' imprisonment, with hard labour. David George Royal was convicted of a murderous outrage upon a young man who had disturbed him in the act of burglary, and was sentenced to twenty years' penal servitude.

Mr. James Broun, of No. 3, Harcourt-buildings, Temple, who has been disclaimed by various other members of the Bar similarly titled, reappeared, on Thursday week, at Guildhall, charged with an unprovoked assault in Fleet-street. Medical certificates were put in from Dr. Gibson, of Newgate, stating that he was of unsound mind. Sir Thomas Dakin decided to send him to the union for safe custody, and the prisoner made no objection.

At Bow-street and at Wandsworth Police Courts, on Saturday, two owners of ferocious dogs were summoned for allowing these animals to go at large and unmuzzled. In one case a boy, eleven years of age, and in the other a child of more tender years, had been bitten. In each instance the destruction of the dog was deemed necessary by the magistrate.

For Sunday outrages of the kind for which Islington has long been noted, eight young men were, on Monday, fined each £5, with the alternative of six week's hard labour in the House of Correction. Frederick William Lewis, described as a clerk, has been committed to gaol for fourteen days for annoying women in the street.

At Marylebone, on Tuesday, a carman was fined £4 and costs, with the alternative of two months' imprisonment, with hard labour, for cruelly beating a horse which was attempting to draw two tons of coal in a coal-wagon over the Chalk Farm-road, which had been newly macadamised.

Henry Mason, a burglar, has been caught in flagrante delicto at a house in River-street, Chelsea. He was making off with £150 worth of miscellaneous property, when a person who was sleeping in the house woke up and saw him. He gave chase in his night-dresses, and, a constable having taken up the pursuit, Mr. Mason was safely landed at the station-house. The magistrate remanded him for a week.

On Saturday morning a woman named Newman, the wife of a tradesman carrying on business at Brunswick-place, Hoxton, murdered her infant daughter, wounded her brother, and then made an attempt on her own life. It is believed that Mrs. Newman, who is forty-two years of age, was suddenly seized with a fit of homicidal mania, the result of grief for the death of five of her children within a comparatively short period.

William Jones, clerk, and George Wood, baker, appeared at the Windsor Petty Sessions, on Thursday week, charged with committing a burglary at the house of Mr. Beach, Balmoral Villas, Clarence-road. Jones was further charged with shooting at Police-Constable Hogan, with intent to murder him. Mr. Beach's servant, who had been left in care of the house, said she had gone to the review in Windsor Park, leaving the kitchen window a little open. Mr. John Mellor and Mr. Smith, lay clerks at Eton College, deposed to having seen three men go up to the house door in a suspicious way. They watched them a short time, and at last went up and rang the bell. The burglars looked out for a minute, then fastened the front door and fled by the back. Constable Hogan, who pursued Jones, was fired at four times, but closed with his man and held him till Mr. Mellor came to his assistance. In the struggle Jones's revolver was broken in two. Hogan was not able to appear at court, but, in answer to a message of inquiry from her Majesty, the authorities were able to report that he was recovering rapidly. Both prisoners were remanded.

An angry crowd attacked a butcher's shop at Reading on Saturday. Stones were freely used, and, although several of the rioters were taken into custody, they were rescued by the mob. The chief offenders will, however, be summoned before the magistrates.

The men who were charged with committing a burglary at the counting-house at Nayland Mill, Suffolk, were tried at Ipswich on Monday. There was a further charge against them of shooting with intent to murder, several shots having been fired at the owner of the mill, Mr. Stannard, and his two sons, while they were attempting to arrest the burglars. Two of the prisoners, Johnson and Berry, were convicted of the double offence, and were sentenced to penal servitude for life. A third, Henry Swann, was found guilty of the burglary, and sentenced to ten years' penal servitude. A fourth, Edgar Swann, was acquitted.

At the Lewes Quarter Sessions, on Tuesday, a report was presented showing the results of the system of remunerative prison labour recently introduced into the Sussex County Prison. In this document it was stated that during the nine months it had been in operation the net profit on prisoners' work was £300, and still more favourable results were anticipated.

At Gloucester Assizes, on Wednesday, Mr. Baron Cleasby finished the trials of the prisoners who were indicted for taking part in the election riots at Cinderford, in the Forest of Dean. Five of them were convicted, and sentenced to periods of imprisonment ranging from three to twelve months.

Mr. Harrison, as president of the Institution of Civil Engineers, will give a conversation on May 19, in the west galleries of the International Exhibition, at Kensington.

We are requested to state that the third Amateur Orchestral Society's Concert at the Royal Albert Hall will take place on Saturday, the 25th inst., in lieu of the 11th, as previously announced. This concert is to be given in aid of the widows and orphans of the soldiers and sailors and marines who died during the Ashantee war. It will be under the especial patronage of the Prince and Princess of Wales and the Duchess of Edinburgh. An influential committee is being formed to promote the object for which this concert is to be given.

LAUNCH OF THE GERMAN FRIGATE KAISER AT POPLAR.

THE GERMAN FRIGATE KAISER.

This powerful ship of war, built by Mr. J. D. Samuda, M.P., of the firm of Samuda Brothers, for the Imperial Government of Germany, was launched, on the 19th ult., at the shipbuilders' yard at Poplar. The German Ambassador, Count Munster, with his daughter, Countess Marie Munster, who performed the christening ceremony and cut the ship loose, was present, by the Emperor's special command. The Austrian Ambassador, Count Beust, the Duke and Duchess of Bedford, and many persons of distinguished rank or character were among the company, as well as some members of the Admiralty, the Thames Conservancy Board, and the Metropolitan Board of Works and other public corporations. The Kaiser, with a sister ship, the Deutschland, was designed by Mr. E. J. Reed, late Chief Constructor for the Admiralty. Her general plan and arrangement are like those of H.M.S. Hercules. The dimensions are—length, 285 ft.; breadth, 62 ft.; depth, 47 ft. 4 in.; burden (old measurement), 5000 tons; displacement, 7600 tons. The hull is protected by an armour belt extending fore and aft from 5 ft. 6 in. below the water-line to the main deck, with an armour-plated battery on main deck fitted to contain eight 22-ton steel breech-loading guns. They are arranged to fire broadside; but the two foremost guns, one on each side, are also adapted for use as bow chasers, and capable of being trained to cross-fire before the vessel; the two after guns can be trained to fire within fifteen degrees of the line of keel. In addition to the eight guns above mentioned, there will be another similar gun of 18 tons weight placed aft, also protected by armour-plates on teak backing, and capable of being trained to an angle of 15 deg. each side the middle line, thus making, with the central battery guns, a complete all-round fire. The thickness of armour plates on the vital parts of the belt and battery is 10 in., but elsewhere 8 in., and reduced at the ends of the vessel. The thickness of teak backing is 10 in. to 8 in.; the plating behind the armour is 1½ in. to 1 in. thick. The upper and main decks beams are completely covered with steel plating, the teak decks being laid above the steel plates. The vessel is constructed with an inner bottom, divided into thirty-two water-tight compartments, in addition to the cross bulkheads and water-tight flats, and fitted with the most approved arrangements for pumping, draining, or flooding. The Kaiser will be "ship" rigged, with a full amount of sail-power, so as to be able, as a sailing-vessel, to secure the greatest efficiency when under canvas without the aid of steam. The engines manufactured for the Kaiser, by Messrs. J. Penn and Sons, of Greenwich, are a pair of horizontal, direct-acting trunk engines, of the collective nominal power of 1150 horses, but capable of exerting 8000 indicated horse-power, arranged to work expansively, and having surface condensers and superheaters. The speed will be fourteen knots an hour. The Deutschland is to be ready in six months from this time.

Probable arrangements for the Friday evening meetings after Easter:—April 17, Mr. William Spottiswoode, LL.D., Treasurer R.S., Secretary R.I., on the Composition of Colours by Polarised Light. April 24, Mr. Charles Watkins Merrifield, F.R.S., on Sea Waves. May 1, Professor Rolleston, M.D., F.R.S., on the Early Inhabitants of the North of England. May 8, Mr. Sedley Taylor, M.A., on an Historical Enigma in the Trial of Galileo before the Inquisition. May 15, Mr. C. William Siemens, D.C.L., F.R.S., on the Steam-Ship Faraday, and her Appliances for Cable-Laying. May 22, Professor W. K. Clifford, on the Education of the People. May 29, the Very Rev. the Dean of Westminster, D.D., F.R.S. June 5, Professor Burdon Sanderson, M.D., F.R.S., on Venus's Fly-Trap (Dionaea Muscipula).

At a meeting of the Shoreham board of guardians, one of the relieving officers reported the death, at Hove, of Esther Black, aged seventy, who had for many years been in the receipt of 2s. 6d. weekly as out-relief. She occupied one little room, where, after her death, her will was found, in which she bequeathed £50 to the Sussex County Hospital, and a like sum of £50 to the Brighton Lying-In Institution. The residue of £1900 goes to nephews and nieces. A representative nephew has refunded to the parish the money which his aunt had received.

In Birmingham the number of steel pens made weekly is about 98,000 gross, or 14,112,000 separate pens. Thirty years ago pens were sold wholesale at 5s. per gross; now pens as good, or better, may be had for 1½d. per gross. Gold pens are tipped with iridium, making what are called "diamond points." The iridium for this purpose is found in small grains in platinum, slightly alloyed with the latter metal. In this form it is exceedingly hard, and well adapted for the purpose of the gold-pen maker. The gold for pens is alloyed with silver to about 16-carats fineness, rolled out into thin strips, from which the blanks are struck. The under side of the point is notched by a small circular saw to receive the iridium point, which is selected by the aid of a microscope. A flux of borax and a blowpipe secure it to its place, and the point is then ground on a copper wheel with emery.

All the usual places of public resort in and about London, on Easter Monday, were thronged with holiday makers. Upwards of 48,000 went to the Crystal Palace; nearly 40,000 to the Zoological Society's Gardens; 14,000 to the British Museum; about 30,000 to the South Kensington Museum; and a concert at the Albert Hall was attended by between 7000 and 8000 persons. The metropolitan railway lines were crowded with passengers, and the river steam-boats, the tramways, and the omnibuses were not sufficient to meet the requirements of those who wished to travel by them. The day was, as usual, a great one at Hampstead-heath, Greenwich Park, and other open spaces in the suburbs, and the excursion-trains to the seaside took many thousands away at an early hour in the morning. At the Brighton Aquarium 13,457 persons passed through the turnstiles during the day. The London International Exhibition of 1874 was opened on Monday without any ceremony. The visitors during the day numbered about 14,000.—For volunteers the character of the day was maintained by a sham fight at Wimbledon, being an engagement between two local forces representing Surrey and Middlesex. According to the general idea, the Surrey men formed part of a main army stationed at Croydon, the leader of which hears that two brigades of the Middlesex force are about to form a junction at Richmond Park. To prevent this he pushes forward his advance guard on Wimbledon-common, but the enemy drive back his skirmishers and fighting ensues along the whole line. The plan seems to have been executed with reasonable success, and few litches occurred either in the commissariat or the handling of the troops on the field. The Middlesex force was commanded by Prince Edward of Saxe-Weimar, and the Surrey men by Colonel Stedman, C.B.

Archæology of the Month.

Archæology has lost an accomplished supporter by the death of Mr. Albert Way, to whom we owe the organisation of the Archæological Institute of Great Britain and Ireland, under conditions of the highest success. Upon his estate of Wotton Manor Mr. Way formed a considerable collection of objects of art and virtue, in which he took great delight. He possessed an almost encyclopædic acquaintance with archæology.

In recently digging for gravel, at a depth of 18 in., on the irrigation farm at Beddington, have been discovered the remains of a Roman warrior, who had evidently been buried in his armour, together with some arms. Some time previously the remains of a Roman villa were found in the same neighbourhood, and a quantity of coins, Roman and British, between Croydon and Norwood. In the above locality have been found distinct traces of "hut circles" in the fields south-east of Woodcote and near Wallington Manor House, and it is supposed that the Roman town of Noviomagus occupied the southern portion of the parish. The Roman villa was found between Beddington-lane and Hackbridge station, or very nearly in the direct line from Woodcote to Streatham. The evidence from the coins would give a Roman occupation of the locality from A.D. 258 to A.D. 375. According to ancient evidence, a number of Roman roads converged in this neighbourhood, proving it to be an important position during the time of the Roman occupation of Britain. The investigation of this find has been referred to the Surrey Archæological Society.

A work which Bishop Russell declared, fifty years ago, to be wanting to fill a literary gap is on the eve of publication by Messrs. Virtue and Co. It is "The Ancient Church of Scotland;" a history of all the cathedral, conventual, and collegiate churches, and the hospitals; with lists of bishops, monastic superiors, and capitular clergy, illustrations and ground-plans, by Mr. Mackenzie Walcott. There are chapters on Scottish archæology, and legends of the olden time.

At the meeting of the Society of Antiquaries, March 12, the Rev. W. Egerton, Rector of Whitchurch, Salop, described the alleged discovery in that church of the body of the great Talbot, first Earl of Shrewsbury, who was killed, at Chastillon, in the year 1453, in the sixtieth year of his age. The skull bore traces of having been cleft with a blow of a battle-axe, and each bone was wrapped up carefully in cerecloth, which would seem to corroborate Leland's statement that the body was originally buried in France, and was afterwards brought over by his grandson, Sir G. Talbot, and interred in the old church (which fell down in 1713) at Whitchurch, Salop, in accordance with the desire expressed in the Earl's will, made at Portsmouth, in 1453. Mr. C. K. Watson (secretary of the Society of Antiquaries) gave a résumé of the statements made in contemporary chronicles respecting the manner of Talbot's death. From these it appears that he was shot in the thigh by a ball, which killed the horse on which he was riding. The horse fell upon him, and he was then dispatched, not with circumstances of barbarity, by the French "archers," who hastened to the spot. Of these bones the author of "The First Part of Henry the Sixth" writes as follows:—

*East. Hew them to pieces! hark these bones asunder, Whose life was England's glory, Gallia's wonder!
Chor. Oh, no; forbear! For that which
During his life we have fled,
Let us not wrong it dead!*

Sir E. Smirke has read to the Archæological Institute some remarks "On the Probable Use of a Falchion" in the case of the descent of the manor of Auckland to the Bishops of Durham. They had reference to the curved sword, inscribed "Edwardus Nices Anglice," lately brought to the notice of the Institute by Mr. Earwaker. Mr. W. J. B. Smith has also exhibited a Spanish falchion of the sixteenth century, with 8 guard, pommel, and terminations of guard in form of birds' heads, blade inscribed IVAN . MARTINES . EN TOLEDO . IN . TE . DOMINE . ESPERAVI; also two other specimens of falchions of special make, German and English; also a small poniard, with bayonet-shaped blade of silver; the pommel and guard also of silver—the former in the shape of a human skull, the latter that of two thigh-bones crossed, probably Italian, late sixteenth century.

Archdeacon Trollope has lately presented from the Associated Architectural Societies a complete series of their reports and papers to the Archiepiscopal Library at Lambeth Palace. The proceedings contain valuable architectural and archæological descriptions of churches in the counties of York, Lincoln, Worcester, Leicester, &c.

Mr. Andrew Macallum writes from Korosco, Nubia, that "at the south side of the great Temple of Aboo Simbel he found the entrance of a painted chamber, rock cut, and measuring 21 ft. 2½ in. by 14 ft. 8 in., and 12 ft. high to the spring of the arch, elaborately sculptured, and painted in the best style of the best period of Egyptian art, bearing the portraits of Ramesses the Great and his cartouches, and in a high state of preservation. In a staircase were discovered the bones of a woman and child, with two small cinerary urns, doubtless a subsequent interment. "Whether the painted chamber (says Mr. Macallum) is the inner sanctuary of a small temple or part of a tomb, or only a speos, like the well-known grotto at Ibrim, will be a question for future excavators to determine."

On the shores of the Sea of Marmora (says the Academy) has just been discovered a portion of a marble column, ornamented with figures of men and horses, and believed to have formed part of the Arcadius column, which remained standing more than 200 years after the taking of Constantinople by the Turks, and was not destroyed till towards the close of the seventeenth century. The entire surface, from the base to the capital, was sculptured with bas-reliefs of the victims of Theodosius the Great, and the interior contained a winding staircase which gave access to the summit.

Mr. T. Layton has exhibited to the Society of Antiquaries a very remarkable Roman sword, found in the Thames, with a portion of the bronze covering of the sheath richly decorated with repoussé work; among the decorations was the popular representation of the fable of Romulus and Remus. The rest of the plaque was filled with foliage and flowers, birds, butterflies, and rabbits. This sword recalled the so-called sword of Tiberius in the British Museum, and a sword found at Wiesbaden and figured in Lindenschmidt.

Mr. Glendinning, of Exeter, recently found at Bideford, at the root of a tree, a number of valuable coins, which were all in a good state of preservation, and proved to belong to the Roman period of domination in Great Britain, and also to different Roman Emperors of the time. Several of them are sestertii of the Emperors Diocletian and Constantius, ranging from the middle to the latter part of the third century of the Christian era. Others are denarii of Domitian and Severus Alexander, having, in addition to the inscriptions, various emblems, such as the sacrificial altar, the legend "Princeps Juventutis," and figures of Liberty and Concord.

The Italie of Rome reports a number of archæological discoveries recently made in the different quarters where building is going on.

Dr. Hirschfeld has been charged by the Prussian Government with an exploration of Asia Minor for the discovery of inscriptions, objects of art, and antiquities.

Dr. Schliemann has lately made excavations at Mycenæ, the ancient capital of Agamemnon. He has examined the Acropolis in thirty-four different places, and by digging shafts on the first and second terraces he reached the rock at a depth of 20 ft. to 12 ft. He discovered red pottery with splendidly-painted ornamentation, two stone axes, one flint arrow, and a number of idols. Five of them represent Hera, the tutelary goddess of Argos. A number of small cows were found in red terra cotta, but as yet no Hera with a cow's head.

The beautiful collection of china formed by Lady Frances Russell has just been sold. There were numerous groups and figures of "Chelsea" and "Bow." Among the latter were four figures representing the "Seasons," which sold for £46; a pair of Chelsea vases, £45; a pair of figures (a sailor and his sweetheart), £46; a group of the "Musical Party," £52; four "Derby" figures of the "Seasons," £52; and a figure of Sir John Falstaff, from the same factory, £35. Among the examples of old "Worcester," a teapot sold for £20, and a pair of oblong baskets, £27 10s. An old "Dresden" cabaret, £30; and a pair of old Dresden vases, £98. A small Sèvres cup and saucer, with panels painted with subjects after Fraudenburg, £78. The collection realised £2250 14s.

FINE ARTS.

INTERNATIONAL EXHIBITION PICTURE GALLERIES.

The International Exhibition of 1874 opened on Monday last, but, as we write, is still incomplete in the fine-arts and some other departments. As before, the French are behind-hand, the arrangement of their collection having hardly commenced. The show of works intended to represent certain deceased English artists is also not completed. We shall, therefore, postpone a more detailed notice of both these sections till a future occasion. As regards the loan collection of works by deceased artists, which is situate in the north-western gallery, we may, however, offer a few particulars. The deceased oil-painters that have been selected for representation are Sir David Wilkie (by whom there are at present forty-one examples, including sketches), John Constable (twenty-three examples), David Roberts (forty-nine), and Augustus Egg (twenty-five). Then there are drawings, generally of architectural subjects, by Samuel Prout, J. S. Cotman, J. Coney, C. Wild, A. Pugin, F. Mackenzie, and J. M. W. Turner. These architectural painters have been selected because architecture is one of the great divisions in the ten years' cycle of art and industry illustrated in the present Exhibition. None of the painters named is represented in a widely-comprehensive or in anything near a complete manner. The two or three drawings by Turner are, in particular, ridiculously inadequate to convey any idea of him as a painter of architecture, particularly in his early period. The examples of Wilkie, Constable, Roberts, and Egg are, however, numerous and important, and this portion of the exhibition will, doubtless, prove highly attractive. The Wilkie series is enriched by several pictures from the Royal collection, and a rare opportunity is afforded for studying the master in his early realistic and better style, and in his later more conventional manner. To the former period—i.e., before his journey to Italy and Spain, in 1825—belong "The Village Recruit," "Blind-Man's Buff," "The Letter of Introduction," and "The Penny Wedding." Among the best pictures of his later period here are "The Maid of Saragossa," "The Guerilla's Departure," "The Guerilla's Return," and "Columbus in the Convent of La Rabida."

The works by (with a few exceptions) living English painters in the adjoining gallery have this year diminished in number and deteriorated in quality in a most remarkable manner. As we anticipated, this attempt to form another large annual exhibition of current English art, in addition to those already existing, is, for various reasons, the weak part of the present international scheme. Of about two hundred English oil paintings in this gallery there is hardly a dozen, including those previously exhibited, to which we should care to call a foreign critic's attention as average samples of our school; and the water-colour drawings are even more insignificant. Among the better works are "A Storm in Harvest" (530), by J. Linnell, sen., with a grand but exaggerated effect of rolling cumuli; "Poet's Retreat" (537), by T. Danby; a powerful illustration of "Dora" (641), by J. Burr, exhibited at the Academy, and engraved by us a few years back; "The Making of the New Forest" (662), by R. Burchett; and "The Sand Road" (519), by Mr. Redgrave—a little picture in the artist's early and best manner. We may also mention as fairly good or promising the oil paintings by C. Bauerle, E. Gill, T. O. Hume, W. Barclay, and H. Moore.

The southernmost of the western galleries contains a collection of foreign pictures, chiefly Bavarian, which seems to have been selected with some care and respect for the British public. If there are no works of a high order, there are few hopelessly bad, and a fair average of respectable workmanship is maintained, though the fault prevalent in German art of black, opaque shadows is occasionally apparent. As works of mark here we may name "Difference of Opinion" (1090), by A. Holmberg; "The Poacher" (1098), by F. Meyer-Wismar; "The Postman on the Chiemsee" (1100), by Prof. K. Kaupp; "The Last Meeting between Louis XVI. and his Family" (1119), by E. Meisel; "A Jury"—tasting wine—(1126), and "In the Parson's Cellar" (1128), by R. S. Zimmermann; "Art and Patronage" (1191), a picture with monkeys, by H. Schumann; "Roman Chariot-Race in the Time of the Emperor Domitian" (1224), a large, elaborate, and extremely spirited picture of a scene in the arena of the Roman amphitheatre, by Prof. A. Wagner; "Italian Concert" (1237), a picture aiming at Titianesque colour, by R. Kuppelmayr, together with numerous Alpine and other landscapes of considerable merit.

The Belgian school, which occupies the same eastern gallery as last year and some wall space farther south, is more numerous than well represented. Several of the leading painters of the school are absent, and the contributions generally are far less important than those exhibited in 1871. A large proportion of the pictures can but damage the reputation of the school. In '71 Belgian art was comparatively little known in this country, and the Belgian painters won a legitimate success. But, the novelty having worn off, impartial criticism soon finds that mannerism and self-repetition are quite as common in this as in other schools. Indeed, the sound Belgian system of teaching the technique of painting rather favours pictorial manufacture of a given pattern. What, for instance, but the merest system of picture manufacture en gros could account for the numberless panels and canvases by Verboeckhoven and other popular Belgian painters all marked by the closest family likeness possible, which have stocked all parts of Europe and America? Moreover, the technical system of the school inclines to the materialistic or to the artificial in colour, especially in the followers of Leys. Then, again, the average Belgian artist has no advantage over the British in general culture. Not only is Belgian art materialistic, sometimes to the point of grossness technically considered, but the conception is almost invariably of a bourgeois character. Elevated invention, learning, refined sentiment, delicacy of treatment, taste, grace, playfulness, fancy, are comparatively unknown in the Belgian school. On the other hand, we find among the best men manliness, honesty, and individuality unsurpassed.

Among the most ambitious works are the historical subjects by Soubre—"A Noble Family (Gueux) before the Council of Blood" (1554) and "Catherine of Arragon and Cardinal Wolsey" (1514); Vanden Bussche's "Last of the Romans" (2203) and "Marguerite Drowning her Infant" (1690), and "A Biblical Discussion in the Sixteenth Century" (1659), by E. Vanderhaegen. By M. Slingeneer, the painter of the "Christian Martyr in the Reign of Diocletian," which we engraved from the '62 International, there is a picture of a Tunisian mother with her boy (1656), painted in a large style. M. Wauters, whose "Mary of Burgundy before the Echevins" we also engraved, has a female head powerfully painted and rich in tone. "The Emigrant's Return," by Portals, is utterly unworthy of the artist's reputation—see the formless head of the baby. Mr. C. Hermans is an artist of promise; his large picture of the interior of an hospital has very fine qualities of tone. For unaffected sincerity in sentiment and fidelity to humble life there is nothing better than the "Dutch Interior—Sunday Afternoon" (1568), by H. Bource. Attention is also recommended to the "Rosamond" (1524) and "Cinderella" (1706), by Van Lierus; the charming groups of children with flowers by J. Verhas; the Spanish subjects by Adolphe Dillens; and the figure-pictures by De Block, C. Webb, A. Serrure, T. Gérard, A. Robert, Dell'Acqua, and Mdlle. Vanden Broeck, together with the works, more or less in the manner of Leys, by Lagye, the brothers De Vriendt, Cleynens, and W. Linnig. In landscape the honours will be carried off by De Schampheleer, with his autumnal scene on the Amstel (1560), and the still finer view on the Meuse (1640), with a stormy sky; and by Van Luppen, with two views, possessing a rare combination of vigour, and feeling in the neighbourhood of the Ardennes (Nos. 1552 and 1697). There are also excellent landscapes by Coosemans, Roelofs, A. Wust, Heymans, T. Verheyden, Gabriel, and J. Jacobs. Among the specimens of animal-painting two brilliant little studies of cows and donkeys by De Haas, pictures of cattle by Plumot, of horses by Verwee, and of dogs by De Prater and Madame Ronner, will find admirers. The architectural department is well represented by large views of Rome and Naples by Boissuet, and of Heidelberg by Stroobant; whilst still-life is ably depicted by De Noter, Verhoeven-Ball, and Vanden Bosch.

The adjoining rooms contain pictures from Holland, Scandinavia, Germany, Austria, and Italy. Several of them deserve attention, and some of those from Italy possess special quality of ideality in form, subtle observation, or beauty of execution, characteristic of the nascent schools of that ancient home of art. Among the latter we may name, besides several good landscapes, "A Game at Morra" (2141), by P. C. Gilardi; "On the Beach" (2146), by L. Steyffani; "The Love Letter" (2161), by A. Pietrasanta; "An Opportune Moment" (2162), by Cav. L. Bianchi; "Will He Return?" (2177), by Cav. B. Giuliano; and "The Kiss" (2194), a girl kissing a painting of the Saviour beside a lighted taper, by L. Serra: a gem of effect, colour, and finish.

One of the east galleries contains paintings and drawings from various parts of the world by officers of the Army and Navy. Many of these are both interesting and clever; but they scarcely come within our critical province.

In the lower galleries of the Albert Hall there are on the east side a fine collection of engravings, generally recent; and on the west side a collection of photographs. In the specimens of fine-art pottery, glass-painting, enamels, &c., there are some designs commendable for taste in drawing and colour, but we have not space to particularise.

The sculpture we must reserve for future notice.

THE FRENCH GALLERY.

This exhibition does not, like some of its predecessors, break new ground in any comparatively unknown direction of Continental art; yet it is, we think, the most variously representative, and, on the whole, the choicest display, which Mr. Wallis has provided for public gratification and cultivation. The enterprise required to glean such a collection from the various schools of Europe is most creditable, and English artists may be strongly recommended to keep themselves informed at this gallery of what their foreign brethren are achieving in every branch of art.

Two pictures by Meissonnier renew our wonder at the hardly-approached and never-surpassed perfectness of the painter's workmanship. In "The Guard Room" (63) we see a party of soldiers in costumes of the seventeenth century, two of their number playing cards, several others looking on. Of the two players it is not difficult to foresee that the gaily-dressed younger officer will prove the victim. He is timid and serious, his antagonist confident and radiant; all the spectators enter into the fun; and every figure is instinct with character and expression. The other picture (60) is on a larger, or rather a less minute, scale than usual. It represents a sort of French George Morland painting for a cabaret sign a figure of a jolly Bacchus astride a wine-barrel. The proprietor (in costume of the Directory) has lounged into the back yard which constitutes the artist's studio to examine the work, and plants himself before it with the lofty air of a connoisseur; the artist turns towards him, grinning with the satisfaction with which he hopes to infect his patron. Remarkable as are the drawing and characterisation of this picture, it is not happy, comparatively speaking, in colour; the browns are decidedly monotonous, and Meissonnier's technical completeness appears to be more marvellous when displayed within the customary microscopic dimensions.

Another picture remarkable for disciplined thoroughness of execution generally, which also possesses character and some humour, is "Rent Day" (50), by E. Berne-Bellecour. The scene is the interior of a stately hall, portions being evidently studied from the gallery at Knoke, where the artist painted, while residing in England during the Franco-German war. The gouty landlord sits at his breakfast-table; a young woman, encouraged by her mother, advances timidly towards him with a petition. The steward receives the rents at a side-table, and several tenants wait at the end of the gallery. The magnificent chimney-piece of coloured marbles and other parts of the picture are exquisitely painted, but the whole is not correspondingly finished. Bouguereau's consummate drawing and modelling, his smoothness of texture and melting gradations—obtained, however, by sacrificing the richness obtainable with impasto and the suggestive charm which may be given by "looser" handling—are exemplified in "The Sleep of Childhood" (156). In the same category may be placed the pretty but conventional head called "Pastorella" (82), by Merle; and the refined and graceful, but rather affected and waxen, picture of two ladies at a "Jewel Cabinet" (155), by F. Verhas. Thinness of painting, and the consequent absence of the full virtue and quality of oil pigments, together with occasional insensibility to harmony of colouring, may be alleged against the works of M. Gérôme, and are more perceptible when his intense conception, inventiveness, and learning are not brought into full play—as in the single figure called "Botzaris" (44), where the tiles of the walls, with their cold-coloured patterns, are discordant against the crimson robes, richly-ornamented arms, and swarthy skin of the figure. The charm of a freer style, with, however, ample exactitude in essentials, is apparent in E. Fromentin's picture (68) of a caravan among the green fields of maize which have sprung up after the subsidence of the periodical Nile inundation; and still more conspicuously in "African Camp Followers" (19), a party of sturdy, active, carrier negroes, which recalls some of our Special Artist's sketches from Cape Coast and Ashantee. M. Fromentin has a worthy follower in A. Pasini, as witness the "Gateway of the Alhambra" (72) and other works. For sober truthfulness and solid broad execution we commend the visitor to examples of Jules Breton and his pupil, P. Billet. By the former there is a half-length of a Bretonne, in her Sunday and fête-day finery, holding a taper that has just blown out, "Going to Mass" (139). She is comely and picturesque, but there is a superstitious fervour in her expression that is quite painful to behold. Billet's picture of girls stooping to cut grass is sincere in its sentiment of humble pathos, and the tender colours are beautifully harmonised by the mist, though the grey hues have crept too near the foreground.

Art, happily, is many-sided; and a peculiar and lovely phase of it, within the limits of the artist's aim, is illustrated in A. Stevens's "Idle Hour" (12)—a girl reclining on a couch. There is no grace, beauty, or feeling in form, and hardly any meaning in this picture; yet the delicious qualities of tone and colour evoked out of an unpromising arrangement of neutral tints and greens will yield a rich treat to artist eyes: colour here is everything, as in a Japanese decoration. Mr. de Yonghe's "Pretty Reflections" (20) would make an elegant boudoir decoration, but it has not the artistic value of the preceding. M. Hébert's "Madonna" (8)—a dreamy-eyed, malaria-stricken Italian woman, with her child—is a rich piece of colouring; but we must protest against the introduction, in our day, of actually gilt and embossed nimbi in the Byzantine manner. Simple mention must suffice of Schreyer's "Wal-lachian Carrier" (122); Leloir's "Beating to Arms" (17), groups of trumpeters and soldiers in gorgeous Maximilian costumes; E. Muraton's "Vases and Musical Instruments" (213), a superb piece of still-life painting; and generally good, if not fully representative, examples of the French landscape-painters, deceased and living—Troyon, T. Rousseau, Diaz, J. Dupré, Jacque, and Corot.

It may be inferred from the preceding names that the strength of the exhibition resides, more perhaps than on any former occasion, in the pictures of the French school; and Mr. Wallis could go to no better source for representing almost every department of art. There is, however, also a sprinkling of works by the Belgian, Dutch, German, and Italian, or Romano-Spanish schools. We hardly know whether the Hungarian painter, Cernak, would be claimed by the French or the Belgian school; he has studied in both, though, we believe, mostly in Paris. There is a reduction here of his large and remarkably fine picture, "Episode of the War in Montenegro, 1862" (18), which was lately exhibited at the Paris and Antwerp salons.

The influence of the Spanish painters, Fortuny and Madrazo, upon artists of different nationalities who together recently formed a school at Rome, since comparatively scattered, is exemplified in the works of Boldini, Ribera, Capobianchi, Vibert (who, we believe, we are justified in including), and others. These painters seek primarily for splendour of colour and brilliancy of handling. The purest colours, but in small, balanced quantities, are profusely scattered about their pictures with dazzling, though frequently artificial, effect. They likewise practise a calculated dash in their brushwork, often the more surprising and captivating for being found in works of a very diminutive scale, yet not seldom leaving an impression of too obtrusive cleverness. So much ability, natural and acquired, was enlisted in the new school that it at first carried the world of art by storm. Already, however, there seems to be a reaction against the tricks and artifices of the school, which are only too easy of imitation. Boldini, one of the most skilful of this group of painters, has a tiny picture of a girl lying "Eanuyée" (57) on a couch, which has the merits and faults of the school in a high degree; as will be seen on comparing the delicate fairy-like painting of the upper portion with the harsh, staring rug beneath, to say nothing of the voluptuous feeling. In two small, open-air subjects, with female figures in purer taste (Nos. 46 and 62), the artist is altogether delightful; it would be difficult to praise too highly the truthful brilliancy of the daylight effects. "Chez le Cordonnier" (36), by Capobianchi—two ladies, dressed in all the colours of the rainbow, trying on the daintiest of high-heeled satin shoes; and R. Ribera's grimly droll string of Italian acrobats trudging through the snow (33), are other very skilful pictures of the same class.

The Spanish painter Roybet is more robust, with something of the power of the old Spanish masters combined with a stronger relish for colour: see "An Official Messenger" (97). Vibert's "Le Schisme" (178), a cardinal and the head of a monastic order seated, in high dudgeon, back to back beside a table that certainly was not spread for a fast-day, is as humorous as it is admirably painted. "Spanish Wedding" (164), by the same, where bride and bridegroom are starting dos-à-dos on horseback, amidst the congratulations of a multitude of friends, evinces close observation, and is bright but rather hard in colour.

"Catechising" (100), a scene in a rural Bavarian church, is scarcely worthy of the reputation of the great German master Vautier, though the children's faces evince his keen discrimination of character. A picture (75), by Knaus, of a little girl embroidering, with her arm round the neck of her chubby brother, is charming, though likewise not an important example of this eminent German artist. The Dutch painter Israels is far more acceptable in his pathetic subjects than in bright-toned pictures, such as "The Fisherman's Family" (158) paddling by the seashore. Nor is Clays's painting of the sea in motion, in No. 49, at all to be compared with his "calm" marine pieces. There are, besides, several small pictures of merit, chiefly landscape; but we must conclude our notice with mention of "The Port of Waxholm, near Stockholm" (148), by A. Wahlberg, a large moonlight view, very daring in its strong contrasts and its "loaded" painting of the lights in the sky and on the rippling sea. It is impossible to deny the painter's power, and for us it is equally impossible to accept some of his effects, particularly in the ruddy brown hues of the clouds; yet there are other passages of great truth and impressiveness.

SOCIETY OF BRITISH ARTISTS.

The exhibition of this society contains, as usual, a wearisome mass of common-place productions, or performances by men who have certainly mistaken their vocation in supposing that they had any calling for art, together with a sparse sprinkling of works evincing love of nature and workman-like qualities, though none of them reach a very high degree of excellence either in conception or execution. By way of courteous recognition of the society Sir Francis Grant, Sir John Gilbert, and

Mr. Redgrave contribute a single canvas each, but they are small works of minor importance.

Whatever merit may be discovered in the exhibition is almost confined to the landscape. The production of a good figure picture demands acquaintance with pictorial principles and considerable training in draughtsmanship. But landscape of the realistic topographic order prevalent here is within the reach of men possessed of ordinary powers of observation and industry, though deficient in the scholarly culture required in landscape, as well as in figure-painting when of more ideal generalised character, and when made the vehicle of human sentiment. There is, however, hardly a single landscape in these rooms which addresses itself primarily to the feelings and the aesthetic sense, using the locality depicted merely as a theme. But our landscape-painters generally have still to learn this higher function of their art, so commonly appreciated by French landscapists. One of the soundest pieces of work, though the routine of the means to the end is not sufficiently concealed, is Mr. G. Cole's "Luncheon in the Harvest-Field" (126). Mr. Syer's "Dunstanborough" (174), with a rough sea, is effective, but too conventional to be impressive. There is much more freshness of observation in several landscapes by Mr. Peel, but the colouring might be warmer and more agreeable. Mr. Gosling's "Cornfield" (185) has a telling general effect, seen at a distance, but nearer its paintiness is obvious. Mr. H. Moore, one of the ablest of the members, has a coast scene, "Setting Night Nets between Tides" (10), with a faint glow of light after sundown lingering on the edges of and behind grey clouds, which is true and unvulgar. A pretty rustic scene, probably up the Thames, named "The Swing" (448), by J. Aumonier, is remarkable here for its generally refined treatment and light graceful handling. A twilight subject (46), by A. Ludovici (46), is appropriately tender, though rather mannered in treatment. There is merit, too, in an evening scene, with sheep and figures (421), by E. N. Downard. Admitting their rather sketchy slightness and the too great fondness for a key of grey, there is nothing here so vividly true to the aspect of nature under effects of sunlight sometimes diffused by mist, or grey daylight veiled by watery clouds, as the small seacoast studies of the brothers W. L. and C. W. Wyllie. They are all noteworthy, but we may specially commend "Early Morning—Sheep" (178), by the former, and "Baiting the Lines" (354), by the latter. Mr. Hemy is not up to the mark of previous works in the marine piece, "Over the Bar" (586); the water is too opaque, making due allowance for the influence of the sandy shallow bottom. Among other landscape, marine, or animal subjects rather above the average, though sometimes betraying self-repetition and mannerism, occasionally at second hand, are "Port Madoc, North Wales" (91), by H. Dawson, jun.; "Dordrecht on the Meuse" (105), by E. Hayes; "Barden Towers, Wharfedale" (379), by J. P. Pettit; "Cornish Headland—Stormy Moonrise" (328), by G. F. Teniawood; and contributions by A. Clint, S. R. Percy, the Williams family, J. T. Lucas, C. S. Walters, J. S. Noble, H. H. Coudery, and T. Earl.

In turning to the figure-pictures we must honestly say, thankless as is the duty, that we find nothing deserving of very warm, unqualified praise. Draughtsmanship of the feeblest, garish colour, obtrusive vulgarity or artificial taste, ignorance of the principles of design, composition, chiaroscuro, and pictorial "keeping" meet the eye at every turn. The root of the evil is unquestionably that scarcely any untravelled English painters receive the thorough training attainable in most Continental schools. Habitual exhibitors in these rooms seem to be constantly painting down to a lower standard, or the advance elsewhere makes one more exigent. Names once in repute—such as those of Messrs. Baxter, Cobbett, Hill, W. and V. Bromley—are now attached to mere vapid artificiality, to the veriest commonplace manufacture, to clumsy inaptitude, or to dramatic and poetical subjects treated in a way that is really beneath criticism. The fancy and sense of colour of Mr. A. J. Woolmer are not to be disputed; yet how much more valuable would his kaleidoscopic vagaries be if they had a little more reference to that natural truth which is the only sound basis for art or poetry! All we can say is that the following are above rather than below the average level of merit in Suffolk-street:—"Julian Peveril and Alice Bridgforth in the Painted Chamber" (81), by T. Roberts; "Hark! hark! the lark," &c. (422), by J. C. Waite; two cottage subjects by H. King; "Music Hath Charms" (201), by A. F. Patten; "Alone" (411), by C. S. Lidderdale; "Old Stories Retold" (251), by J. Hayllar; and contributions by W. M. Wyllie, P. Levin, R. Buckner, the brothers Holmes, E. G. Girardot, A. W. Bayes, J. Ritchie, and Miss A. E. Manly—"Julia" (520), a study of a head, which, in virtue of its delicate modelling and sweet expression, deserves a much better place.

In the rooms for water colours are a few drawings of some merit and promise, but not of importance sufficient to demand individual notice.

Two important drawings in black and white by Mdlle. Rosa Bonheur are on view at Messrs. Pilgeram and Lefevre's, King-street, St. James's, preparatory to their being engraved. In the one, "The Straits of Ballachulish," cattle are swimming and wading through the water, accompanied by drovers in boats. In the other, "The Stamped," a herd of terrified Highland cattle are in full career; some, in their mad flight, trample on sheep.

The fourth autumn exhibition of pictures, under the auspices of the Liverpool Corporation, is to open about Sept. 1 next. We are requested to make this announcement because an impression is abroad that the usual exhibition in the Free Library and Museum building would be discontinued till the completion of the new art-gallery.

The celebrated painter Wilhelm von Kaulbach, who held the post of director of the Royal Academy at Munich, died there on Tuesday evening from an attack of cholera. The deceased artist was born on Oct. 15, 1805.

According to an account recently issued, the Stock transferred and paid to the Commissioners of Annuities within the year ended Jan. 5 last amounted to £203,543.

Several children were returning, on Tuesday week, from school at Tatham, ten miles from Lancaster, when they were caught in a hailstorm. Two of them—John Paisley Smith, aged thirteen years, son of a farmer, and Joseph Foster—took shelter under an oak-tree. The tree was struck by lightning, and stripped of a considerable portion of its bark and branches. Smith was killed on the spot. His companion was knocked down, but was not injured.

Lord Derby has sent a letter to the county magistrates resigning his position as Chairman of the Kirkdale Quarter Sessions, on account of his engagements as Foreign Secretary. Mr. Cross, M.P., has resigned the post of Deputy Chairman on account of his official engagements. At the County Quarter Sessions at Nottingham, on Monday, Lord Belper tendered his resignation as Chairman, on account of advanced age, and Mr. Hildyard, M.P., was appointed his Lordship's successor.

GEROME.

THE LATE MR. THOMAS MORSON, CHEMIST.

An eminent scientific and practical chemist, the late Mr. Thomas Newborn Robert Morson, died the other day at his house in Queen-square, Bloomsbury, aged seventy-five. He was born at Stratford-le-Bow, and was apprenticed to an apothecary in Fleet Market; but the study of chemical science, in which he had the companionship of Faraday to assist and to improve his early efforts, proved more attractive to Morson than the medical profession. In the establishment of M. Planche, a pharmacien at Paris, he acquired a high degree of knowledge and skill. On his return to London he succeeded to a business as chemist and druggist in Farringdon-street, where he carried on, with his ordinary trade, experimental researches and inventions of different useful kinds. The first sulphate of quinine made in England and the first morphia were produced in Mr. Morson's laboratory. He was also the inventor of a medicine called "pepsine," designed to aid the nutritive processes for the assimilation of food in cases of diseased spleen and other disorders of the digestive organs. From Farringdon-street he removed, after his marriage, to Southampton-row, Bloomsbury, and some time later established a manufactory in Hornsey.

road. He was a leading member of the Pharmaceutical Society, holding the office of vice-president during four years, and that of president during two or three other years: till 1870 he was a member of the Council. He enjoyed the personal acquaintance and esteem of many distinguished men of science in France and Germany, as well as in this country.

THE NEW HEAD MASTER OF RUGBY.

The circumstances under which the head mastership of Rugby School became vacant, by the dismissal of the Rev. Dr. Hayman, on account of the quarrel between him and the assistant masters, have been discussed in a court of law. The Rev. Thomas William Jex-Blake, D.D., Principal of Cheltenham College, who has been chosen by the Governing Body of Rugby Head Master of that school, in the place of Dr. Hayman, is one of the family of Mr. Thomas Jex-Blake, J.P., of Swanton Abbott, Norfolk, and was born in the year 1832. Another of the same family is Miss Sophia Jex-Blake, who has taken a leading part in promoting the higher education of women. He entered Rugby School, in 1844, as a pupil of the late Bishop of Calcutta. From Rugby he was, in 1851, elected to an open scholarship at University College, Oxford, where the present Dean of Westminster was tutor. Mr. Jex-Blake took his Bachelor's degree in 1855, obtaining a first class in classical honours, having previously gained the same place in the "Moderation Lists." He was afterwards elected to a Fellowship at Queen's College, but vacated it, by his marriage, in 1857. He was ordained Deacon by the late Bishop (Wilberforce) of Oxford, in 1856, and admitted into Priest's orders by the Bishop of Winchester in the following year. He held an assistant mastership at Rugby, succeeding Mr. Bradley, the present Master of University College, Oxford, under Dr. Temple, for several years previous to his appointment, in 1868, to the Headship of Cheltenham College. Among the printed testimonials in favour of Dr. Jex-Blake, which number almost a hundred, are those given by the Archbishops of Canterbury and York, the Bishop of Winchester, the Deans of Westminster, Durham, and Norwich; the Dean of Christ Church, Oxford; the Master of Trinity, Cambridge; the Master of Balliol; the Head Masters of Eton, Winchester, and Marlborough; Principal Shairp, the Rev. Canon Barry, Professor Rawlinson, Lord Redesdale, Mr. Goschen, Mr. Childers, Mr. T. Hughes, and other persons of influence or note.

selves (Mr. Henry Neville and Miss Ada Cavendish), looked in each other's embrace, to the disgust of Lord Charles Spencer (Mr. W. H. Vernon), the satisfaction of Lady Betty Noel (Miss Fowler), and the surprise of all parties. A more complete situation cannot be conceived. The picture tells its own story, and requires no explanation. The play itself is of high merit, and will command the stage for many months to come.

SCENE FROM "CLANCARTY,"

AT THE OLYMPIC THEATRE.

It is seldom that the climax of a new play can be presented in a pictorial illustration. The drama of "Clancarty," however—one of the cleverest pieces of stage construction that even Mr. Tom Taylor has given to the modern stage—is so skilfully arranged that all the early incidents of its conduct to the striking situation of the third act, in the bedchamber of Lady Clancarty, when she and her lord have that "meeting and parting" on which the final interest of the action depends. The situation, moreover, has the advantage of bringing all the principal characters, together. Prominent in the scene, and forming its central group, we have the unhappy couple them-

THE DISTRESS IN PARIS.

Reference has been made, on several occasions, to the distress that has prevailed more severely than usual in the city of Paris during the past winter. It was the effect of a stagnation of trade, depriving many poor people of their ordinary employment and wages, together with high prices of food, fuel, and other commodities needful for the daily support of life, in the hard season of the year. Among the charitable agencies and institutions for the relief of suffering families, at this trying time, was that of a fund benevolently provided to redeem from the Mont de Piété, and the branch pawning establishments, the articles of bedding, and sometimes of clothing, which had been pledged by their owners for small sums of money. The fund began with a gift by M. Debrousse, under the patronage of Madame la Maréchale de MacMahon, Duchess of Magenta, wife of the President of the French Government. Our illustration shows the scene at the branch office in the Rue Servan, Quartier de la Roquette. The recovery and redistribution of these goods was a rather interesting business operation. The profits of the Mont de Piété go to maintain the Paris hospitals, so that the city poor get the benefit, one way or another, of their payments at the rate of ten per cent, for interest on the money lent them during a year and a day. There are reckoned to be 105,400 persons relieved by the established Paris charities, with very little begging. The list of special beneficent institutions includes those for the care of the sick and wounded, having 8500 beds, almshouses or hospices, orphan schools, blind schools, deaf and dumb schools, lunatic and idiot asylums. The hospitals are endowed by means of a tax on theatrical entertainments, and a grant by the municipality of Paris.

MUSIC.

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA.

The performances of last week following that of the opening night (Tuesday) consisted of "Crispino e la Comare" on the Thursday, and a repetition of "La Traviata"—with the second appearance of Mdlle. Heilbron—on Saturday. In the work first named Mdlle. Marimon (formerly of Her Majesty's Opera) made her first appearance at the Royal Italian Opera-House, and her lively acting and graceful singing in the character of Annetta ensured her favourable reception. Of Ricci's light and vivacious music to the farcical libretto of "Crispino e la Comare" we have before spoken—on the occasion of its representation by the Italian Opera Buffa Company at the Lyceum Theatre in 1871. The work was first produced in this country at the Royal Italian Opera-House in 1866, and gained acceptance chiefly by the charm of Madame Adelina Patti's performance as Annetta, and the humour of Ronconi as the cobbler, her husband. It argues no small merit, therefore, in Mdlle. Marimon to have gained the favour of her new audience in a part with such associations surrounding it. Among the several successful points in her representation were the scene with Crispino at the close of the first act, and the delivery of the characteristic Venetian ballad, "La Fritola." Signor Ciampi, who replaced Signor Ronconi in the repetition of the opera in 1867, again gave great force to the broad comic humour of Crispino; and Signor Tagliafico was, also as before, a very effective representative of Mirabolano; Signor Capponi having again appeared as the other doctor, Fabrizio—the trio for these characters and Crispino (in the third act) creating the same effect as formerly, involving a necessary repetition of the latter portion. In the small tenor part of Contino Signor Sabater made his first appearance, and was well received. The cast was completed by Mdlle. Corsi, as La Comare, Signor Rossi, as Bartolo, and Signor Fallar, as Don Asdrubale.

This week's performances began, on Tuesday, with "La Figlia del Reggimento," in which Mdlle. Marimon made her second appearance here, and repeated one of those graceful performances of which we have formerly spoken during her engagement at Her Majesty's Opera. As Maria this lady again sang and acted with refinement and vivacity, having been especially successful in the "Rataplan" duet; the canzone, "Ciascun lo dice;" the tender aria, "Convien partir;" the sing-song lesson trio, and the final bravura. Signor Ciampi was the same hearty representative of Sergeant Sulpizio as formerly, and Signor Bettini was again the lover Tonio, the subordinate characters having been filled by Mdlle. Anese and Signori Fallar, Ragner, and Rossi. Signor Vianesi conducted.

The operas announced for the remaining nights of this week were—a repetition of "Crispino e la Comare," for Thursday; "L'Africaine" on Friday; and "Il Barbiere di Siviglia" on Saturday, with the début of Signor Blume-Dorini as Almaviva.

The attractive concerts given in the Floral Hall, adjoining the Royal Italian Opera House—including the co-operation of the principal artistes of the establishment—will be resumed for the season on April 25.

HER MAJESTY'S OPERA.

Mdlle. Lodi's second appearance—more than once postponed on account of her continued indisposition—took place on Saturday, and has materially enhanced the good impression which she made on her début as Aminta in "La Sonnambula." In her performance as Gilda, in "Rigoletto," she displayed much dramatic power, especially in the duet with her father (Rigoletto) in the first act, and in the still greater scene with the despairing Jester, when traced by him to the palace of the Duke. In Gilda's aria, "Caro nome," Mdlle. Lodi's brilliant and facile vocalisation called forth enthusiastic applause and an encore. Signor Galassi, as Rigoletto, acted and sang with much force and earnestness, especially in the great scene with the Jester's daughter, already referred to. Other portions of the cast were as on former occasions, including Signor Naudin as the Duke, and Madame Trebelli-Bettini as Maddalena, the small part of Sparafucile having been filled by Signor Costa, the recent débutant already spoken of. Sir Michael Costa has conducted the performances, as usual.

For this week four operas were announced—"Il Trovatore" on Monday, "La Sonnambula" on Tuesday (repetitions), "Marta" on Thursday, and "La Favorita" on Saturday.

Music, as usual, forms an important feature in the proceedings of the Easter week. On Monday, in association with the opening of the International Exhibition, a grand military and vocal concert was given at the Royal Albert Hall in the afternoon; both our Italian opera establishments have entered on their full career; the sixth and last concert of the second season of the British Orchestral Society took place on Thursday; the Sacred Harmonic Society were to perform "Judas Maccabæus" on Friday; and to-night (Saturday) the fifth and last of M. Gounod's concerts is to take place; so that there has been abundance of music of various kinds for the entertainment of holiday audiences.

The Wagner Society's closing concert of the series is postponed from April 10 to May 13.

The Good Friday sacred concert at the Crystal Palace was heard by over thirty thousand people. Madame Lemmens-Sherrington gained her accustomed encore by her brilliant rendering of "Let the bright Seraphim;" and Mr. Vernon Rigby was the tenor in place of Mr. Sims Reeves, whose illness, we regret to learn, continues. The most noticeable features of the concert were the deeply impressive singing of "O, Rest in the Lord," by Miss Antoinette Sterling, whose powerful contralto voice was instinct with true religious feeling; and the fervour with which Mr. Santley sang Gounod's ringing song from "Nazareth," "Though poor be the chamber."

Although there was no novelty at last Saturday's Crystal Palace concert, the selection was one of strong and substantial interest. Brahms's beautiful "Schicksalsspiel" ("Song of Destiny"), for orchestra and chorus, was repeated, in consequence of the impression which it produced on its performance at the Crystal Palace concert of March 21, when it was first heard in this country, as noticed by us. Last Saturday's programme included Mendelssohn's "Lobgesang" ("Hymn of Praise"), which was effectively given by band and chorus, with Madame Lemmens-Sherrington, Miss Katharine Poyntz, and Mr. Vernon Rigby as solo vocalists. Sir W. S. Bennett's "Fantasia-Overture," entitled "Paradise and the Peri," and miscellaneous vocal pieces, completed the selection.

The programme of general arrangements for the forthcoming triennial Handel Festival at the Crystal Palace has just been issued. As heretofore, there will be four public days, the grand rehearsal on Friday, June 19, comprising many of the principal features of each day's performance, the first of which will consist of "The Messiah," on Monday, June 22, Wednesday being appropriated to a selection of pieces, among which will be several that have not been before given at these festivals, such as choruses from "Saul," "Susanna" and the "Ode to St. Cecilia," the "Utrecht" Jubilate, &c.; besides one of the organ concertos to be performed by Mr. Best, organist of St. George's Hall, Liverpool. This year's scheme will continue the precedent, long established, of closing the festival on the Friday (June 26), with "Israel in Egypt," the grandest choral climax that can be found even among the works of Handel. The band and chorus will be on the same gigantic scale as formerly (numbering some four thousand executants), the musical arrangements being again carried out through the instrumentality of the Sacred Harmonic Society, their distinguished conductor, Sir Michael Costa, being again the presiding power that shall sway with master hand the multitude of performers. The solos will be sung by some of the most eminent vocalists, whose names will be hereafter specified.

The distinguished vocalist Madame Adelina Patti, who is performing with great success at Vienna, has been appointed, by a Royal decree of the Emperor of Austria, "First Chamber Singer to their Imperial Majesties." The honour is the greater inasmuch as it is a distinction usually reserved for native vocalists.

THEATRES.

GLOBE.

Easter Monday has been here celebrated by the production of a new drama from the pen of Mr. James Albery. It is in three acts, and has evidently been suggested by recent events; in fact, though in the form of a comedy, it is little more than a burlesque on a late celebrated trial. Mr. J. L. Toole appears in it as an eccentric counsel, holding his first brief, and making all manner of mistakes in conducting his case. In the first act we see him at his lodgings, with his wife and two sons, reduced to all manner of expedients for maintaining appearances. The scene is divided into two or three compartments, so that the audience may note the series of dodges resorted to for the concealment of extreme poverty. The wife (Miss T. Lavis) is about to cut up the barrister's gown for a coat for her eldest boy, not expecting that her husband will want it professionally, when a chance turns up in his favour, and he is retained by the Hon. Miss Kencutrie, sister to the late Lord Kencutrie, to conduct her case against a claimant, who assumes to be the present representative of the title. The situation, such as it is, is sustained by a profusion of humorous dialogue, of which Mr. Toole, of course, makes the most. But the fun culminates in the trial scene, where pictures are exhibited for proof of identity, and all manner of irrelevant questions are put by Hammond Coote (Mr. J. L. Toole) to the witnesses, and all manner of blunders are committed by the Lord Chief Justice (Mr. Arthur Cecil), and every kind of absurdity indulged in by the opponent counsel. At length the incompetent Coote is thoroughly roused to the importance of the situation; for the course of the evidence leads to the conclusion that he himself is the missing lord. And now matters are all changed at home; but Mrs. Coote has to be prepared for the sudden happy reverse of fortune, and to be induced to consent to the marriage of her daughter with a young surgeon, which is done through the medium of her son, who is dressed in his father's gown and wig and pleads the case for the lovers. Such is the sportive vein in which this three-act trifle is conceived. It is entitled "Wig and Gown," and will probably serve Mr. Toole's purpose in the provinces. The actor is fulfilling a farewell engagement at this theatre, designed for the occupancy of a few weeks only, previous to his departure for America. The new drama was followed by the farce of "Ici On Parle Français," in which Mr. Toole sustained the part of Spriggins with his usual vigour.

PRINCE OF WALES'S.

The smaller theatres of the metropolis, having raised a reputation on the production of new pieces, have discovered that they can relieve themselves of the expense by recasting our standard comedies, rearranging the scenes, and supplying the situations with new business. Among these Sheridan's masterpiece has been found especially available. The management of Mrs. Bancroft's theatre has, accordingly, seen the advantage of following in the wake of these revivals, and accomplishing one of its own, which, for care and inventiveness, should excel all previous efforts. "The School for Scandal" was revived in this spirit, on Saturday, with well-deserved success. The whole of the plot has been digested into four set scenes, and the ordinary traditions of the stage substituted by new directions, forming new groups, and producing new, and in some cases accidental, effects, besides affording opportunity for illustrating the manners of the time to which the action is related. The design is thoroughly carried out, and, with the aid of costly costumes, is made singularly effective. The company have distributed the parts among themselves with judgment, and sustain them with great ability. Relieved from following stage traditions, they take their own views of both action and dialogue, and aim at novelty, if not originality, in the conception and presentment of character and conduct. The scenery, too, is of the choicest, and painted and set with perfect good taste and talent. Mrs. Bancroft gives a new version of Lady Teazle, Mr. Hare another of Sir Peter, Mr. Coghlan a striking one of Charles Surface, and Mr. Bancroft a rather conventional one of Joseph. Mr. Lin Rayne, as Sir Benjamin Backbite, could not be other than good; and Mr. Collette's Sir Onver was respectable. As Crabtree Mr. A. Wood was excellent; Mrs. Leigh Murray as Mrs. Candour and Miss B. Wilton as Maria are both worthy of commendation. Mr. Murkby was careful a Trip, and Mr. Herbert equally so as Careless. Miss Fanny Josephs as Lady Sneerwell deserves a line to herself. An air of politeness and gentility pervades all the characters, having the immediate effect of making them too much alike, but necessitating a subtlety of delineation which kindles the hidden powers of the actor. The success of revivals like this constitutes, indeed, the triumph of the actor, and makes him for a while independent of the modern author.

HOLBORN.

A new piece by Mr. H. J. Byron, in five acts, entitled "The Thumbcrew," has been produced by Messrs. Walter Joyce and W. R. Field, in the interest of Mr. John S. Clarke.

This remarkable performer is charged with the task of realising the character of Phineas Pettiephogge, a country attorney, whose name sufficiently describes his identity. Mr. Clarke exaggerates his peculiarities to any extent, and ascribes to them such variety that his resources for promoting laughter appear to be almost infinite. Though in five acts, the work is a melodrama, and, indeed, even partakes of the quality of extravagance; so that there is no end to the fun, all derived from well-known incidents and situations, here caricatured with a freedom of style which stands for no repairs. Mr. Clarke is well supported by Miss Linda Dietz, Miss Edith Lynd, and Messrs. J. Wainwright, John Nelson, and J. G. Graham. There is much in the character that reminds us of Micawber—nevertheless, there are shades of difference. Of course there is, as in other new pieces, a claimant, who in this gets possession of the estate, and to keep it attempts a murder, which Pettiephogge escapes—a ghastly incident, which is painted in all its horrors, but to which a ludicrous turn is given that affords to Mrs. Clarke the final triumph. The drama, though in five acts, is remarkably brief. Each act concludes with a tableau, ingeniously contrived and effectively executed.

STRAND.

A pastoral drama, under the title of "May; or Dolly's Delusion," adds another to the stage successes of Mr. Reece, and provides Miss Ada Swanborough with a part which affords her ample opportunity for exhibiting her peculiar talent. The story is sufficiently simple. There are three suitors (represented by Messrs. Terry, Odell, and Cox) who are rivals for the lady's hand, and compete with spirit for the coveted prize. The most is made of these slender materials alike by the playwright and the players.

COURT.

A little piece of some merit was produced on Monday, entitled "Second Thoughts;" but there is a want of motive for the action which diminished the interest; it is, besides, rather too lengthy, and requires much trimming and pruning. It was, however, excellently acted by Miss Litton, Mrs. Clifford Cooper, and Mr. E. Bruce; and to their efforts its success must be attributed. It was preceded by the new play of "Ready-Money Mortiboy," and Morton's farce of "The Thumping Legacy," in which Mr. Hill assumed the part originally filled by Mr. Keeley, and continually elicited the uproarious merriment of the audience.

FRENCH PLAYS.

The season at the Holborn having closed, Messrs. Valnay and Pitru-n, to whose perseverance the frequenters of the French plays are deeply indebted for the entertainment supplied by them under adverse circumstances, have removed to the Princess's, and began their spring season on Monday with M. Sardou's amusing comedy, "Nos Bons Villagesois," in which Mdlle. Kelley and M. Gouget made their first appearances. The managers have an excellent stock company. It comprises Didier, Schey, Paul Legrand, and Leprevost, whose talents are all well displayed in the performance. We may add that many of the intended plays have, with a few emendations, received the approval of the authorities; and that during the season some of the most attractive of the Parisian actresses will be engaged.

We are requested to state that the successful opera of "La Fille de Madame Angot" will be withdrawn in a few days from the boards of the Opéra Comique, in order to the production of the celebrated opéra bouffe of "Genevieve de Brabant," Miss Emily Soldene appearing in her original character of Drogan. Mr. Charles Morton's season will terminate on May 30, when his opéra-bouffe company intend visiting the provinces.

EASTER ENTERTAINMENTS.

THE MOORE AND BURGESS MINSTRELS.

A special performance took place, on Monday, in the grand hall of the St. James's, Piccadilly, consisting of an entirely new musical entertainment. There were several ballads sung then for the first time:—"The Cold White Snow," by Mr. Horace Norman; "Little Birdie, sing your sweetest," by Mr. Sydney Herbert; and "I'm a man who leads a wretched life," by Mr. Walter Howard. All these and others were delightfully interpreted. There is no falling off in the attractions which, in the negro melodies, still survive for the delight of those who are enamoured of the union of music and sentiment which the sable minstrels so skilfully provide for the amusement of their numerous patrons.

AGRICULTURAL HALL.

The Easter carnival has crowded this ample edifice with multitudes of pleasure-hunters, who have been greatly gratified with the amusements provided. These are so multifarious that they are indescribable. They comprehend a vast fair, with peepshows and hobby-horses, and a circus in which star artistes exhibit their various and wonderful feats. It is, of course, impossible to enter into detail, nothing but an actual visit can properly supply.

CRYSTAL PALACE.

A special programme has been prepared for the holidays at this place of combined amusement and instruction. The pantomime theatre exhibits Mr. H. J. Byron's "Robinson Crusoe," accompanied with some capital scenery and appropriate music. The company have also purchased the Wurtemberg collection of stuffed birds and animals, which is now added to the other treasures of the palace. To monkeys and guinea-pigs, even, Herr Ploucquet has given that one touch of human nature which makes the whole world kin in a Darwinian sense, as all will acknowledge, after enjoying the humorous attitudes struck by the guinea-pigs skating and the monkey whist-party, to say nothing of the numerous other irresistibly comic figures. This notable exhibition of German ingenuity comprises some hundred groups of birds and beasts, cunningly arranged, in the most lifelike manner, to represent hunting and other scenes, as well as the droll representation of human foibles and vanities above alluded to. The Crystal Palace Aquarium has an interesting novelty in the shape of a fine group of living corals, recently brought from the Mediterranean.

A large new graving-dock at Greenock, which has been in course of construction since 1870, was opened last week. The site cost £80,000, and the making of the dock cost £16,000.

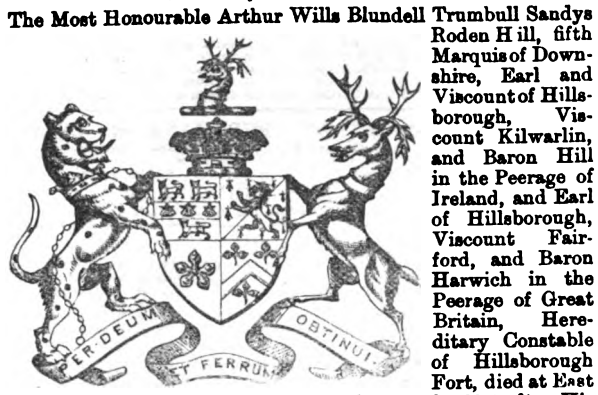

In the account of the Mercantile Marine Fund for the year 1873, recently issued, the expenditure for the year in life-boats, apparatus for saving life, and gratuities for saving lives amounted to £6605.

The new railway bills before Parliament represent a nominal capital of over £50,000,000. There are fifty-eight bills promoted by new companies, and 107 by existing companies. The former contemplate an expenditure of £16,000,000, and the latter of £35,000,000.

The Commissioners for Reduction of the National Debt give notice that £374,122 13s. 6d., being one fourth part of the surplus in the year ended Dec. 31 last, will be applied in the quarter ending June 30, 1874, towards the reduction of the National Debt.

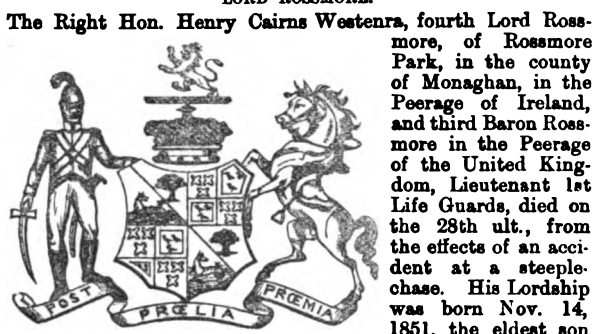

OBITUARY OF EMINENT PERSONS.

THE MARQUIS OF DOWNSHIRE.

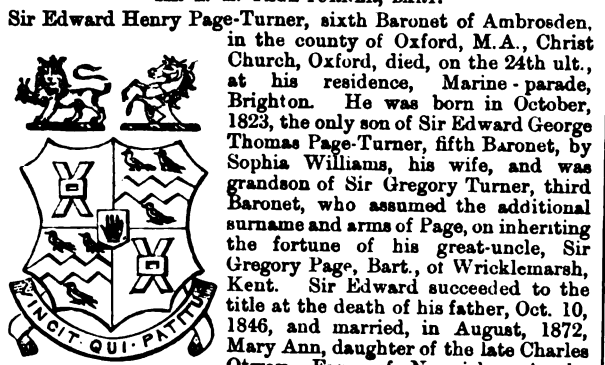

The Most Honourable Arthur Wills Blundell Trumbull Sandys Roden Hill, fifth Marquis of Downshire, Earl and Viscount of Hillsborough, Viscount Kilwarlin, and Baron Hill in the Peerage of Ireland, and Earl of Hillsborough, Viscount Fairford, and Baron Harwich in the Peerage of Great Britain, Hereditary Constable of Hillsborough Fort, died at East Hampstead Park, his seat in Berkshire, on the 31st ult. His Lordship was born Dec. 24, 1844, the elder son of Arthur, fourth Marquis of Downshire, K.P., by Caroline Frances, his wife, eldest daughter of Field Marshal Stapleton, first Viscount Combermere, G.C.B. He entered the 1st Life Guards in 1866, and retired from the Army in 1868. On April 18 of that year he acted as Esquire to his father at the installation of the Prince of Wales as a Knight of St. Patrick, and on Aug. 6 following succeeded to the family honours. He married, July 26, 1870, Georgiana Elizabeth, eldest daughter of John Balfour, Esq., of Balbirnie, in the county of Fife, by Lady Georgiana, his wife, daughter of John Frederick, Earl of Cawdor, and leaves one only child, Arthur Wills John Wellington Blundell Trumbull, now sixth Marquis of Downshire, born July 2, 1871. The noble family of Hill of Hillsborough, founded by Sir Moyses Hill, a distinguished military officer in Ireland under the Earl of Essex, in 1573, possesses great estates in the sister kingdom. Wills, Earl of Hillsborough, Secretary of State for the Colonies, and one of the leaders of the Administration rendered so unpopular by the American War, was created Marquis of Downshire in 1789.

LORD ROSSMORE.

The Right Hon. Henry Cairns Westenra, fourth Lord Rossmore, of Rossmore Park, in the county of Monaghan, in the Peerage of Ireland, and third Baron Rossmore in the Peerage of the United Kingdom, Lieutenant 1st Life Guards, died on the 28th ult., from the effects of an accident at a steeplechase. His Lordship was born Nov. 14, 1851, the eldest son of Henry Robert, third Lord Rossmore, by his second wife, Josephine Julia Helen, second daughter of Henry Lloyd, Esq., of Farrinry, in the county of Tipperary. He received his education at Eton, and entered the Army in 1869. He had previously inherited the peerage at the death of his father, Dec. 1, 1860. Dying unmarried, he is succeeded by his next brother, Derrick Warner William, 9th Lancers, now Lord Rossmore, born Feb. 7, 1853. The title was originally conferred on General Robert Cuninghame, with limitation, in default of issue, on the heirs male of his wife's sisters, Mrs. Jones and Mrs. Westenra, successively. The only son of Mrs. Jones having died unmarried, the barony of Rossmore eventually devolved on Warner William Westenra, the grandfather of the young nobleman whose sad death we record.

SIR E. H. PAGE-TURNER, BART.

Sir Edward Henry Page-Turner, sixth Baronet of Ambrosden, in the county of Oxford, M.A., Christ Church, Oxford, died, on the 24th ult., at his residence, Marine-parade, Brighton. He was born in October, 1823, the only son of Sir Edward George Thomas Page-Turner, fifth Baronet, by Sophia Williams, his wife, and was grandson of Sir Gregory Turner, third Baronet, who assumed the additional surname and arms of Page, on inheriting the fortune of his great-uncle, Sir Gregory Page, Bart., of Wricklemarsh, Kent. Sir Edward succeeded to the title at the death of his father, Oct. 10, 1846, and married, in August, 1872, Mary Ann, daughter of the late Charles Otway, Esq., of Norwich. As he leaves no issue, the baronetcy—conferred, in 1733, on Edward Turner, Esq., then Chairman of the Court of Directors, H.E.I. Company—passes to the present Sir Henry Edward Leigh Dryden, fourth Baronet, of Canons Ashby, who is heir male of Sir John Turner, younger brother of Sir Gregory Turner, third Baronet, of Ambrosden, already mentioned. This Sir John Turner, having married Elizabeth Dryden, granddaughter of Sir Erasmus Dryden, Bart., brother of John Dryden, the poet, assumed the surname and arms of Dryden, and was created a Baronet in 1795. Sir Henry Dryden now becomes entitled to a second baronetcy, giving precedence of 1733.

The annual festival of the Newsvenders' Benevolent and Provident Institution—at which Mr. Beresford-Hope, M.P., is to preside—will be held, on the 29th inst., at the Criterion.

On Monday the foundation-stone was laid of a new lecture-hall in connection with St. John's United Presbyterian Church, Devonshire-road, Forest-hill. The site of the new hall has been presented by Mr. F. J. Horniman, and the hall is being built from the designs of Mr. Vickers, who acts as honorary architect.

The people who make Good Friday a holiday were a good deal interrupted in their pleasure-seeking by heavy rains and the prevalence of a cold and rather boisterous wind. The numbers who resorted to the various suburban places of amusement were therefore smaller than usual. Nearly 33,000 persons, however, were at the Crystal Palace. A singular custom was observed in the London Docks by the Portuguese and South American sailors belonging to vessels lying there. It consisted of flogging and otherwise contemptuously treating an effigy representing Judas Iscariot, the false apostle. There were large congregations at several of the Established and Roman Catholic churches.

PROBLEM No. 1571.

The composer of this problem writes to express regret that he inadvertently omitted to place a Black Pawn on Black's Q R 3rd square. The omission of this Pawn affords White an opportunity of giving mate by first playing his Kt to Q 6th, which is not the modus operandi intended. We withhold the true solution until next week.

SCIENTIFIC RESULTS OF THE MONTH.

Notwithstanding the opposition offered to the introduction of the monitor system of ironclads into our navy, the conviction has at length become both general and irresistible that it is upon that class of vessels we must chiefly rely in the event of a naval war. Eight years ago we advocated the employment of monitors with side armour 18 in. thick, backed by 4 ft. of oak, with a single turret 24 in. thick, and two 20-inch wrought-iron guns; and although the time would come, we said, when even these proportions would be inadequate, such a vessel, we maintained, would be efficient for at least ten years. Instead of adopting this intelligible method of procedure, the Admiralty has gone on building vessels which were always in arrear of the penetrating power of the best existing gun, and we have now a whole museum of antiquities in the way of ships, from the Warrior, with its 4½-inch plates; the Agincourt, with its 5½-inch; the Bellerophon, with its 6-inch; the Monarch, with its 7-inch; the Hercules and Sultan, with their 8-inch; to the Thunderer and Devastation, with their 12-inch and 14-inch, all of which are penetrable by existing guns, and all of which fail, consequently, to fulfil the first function of armourclads, which is to keep shot out. The Admiralty has certainly squandered an enormous sum of money in the construction of useless vessels—a fault which would have been avoided if they had called to their councils the author of the monitor system; and this course, we are able to say, was open to their adoption. In the new monitor Inflexible a considerable step will be made both in the thickness of the armour and the weight of the guns. It is stated that this vessel is to have two turrets 18 in. thick, with two 80-ton guns in each, and that the side armour is to be composed of two 12-in. plates, with an intermediate thickness of wood. The fault we have to find with this structure is that there are two turrets instead of one, for the monitor system is essentially a system of concentration, which is only another name for strength. It is clear, moreover, that an 18-in. turret without wood backing is weaker than a 24-in. side with wood backing, and the strength of any structure is only the strength of its weakest part. Still, the Inflexible, with all her faults, would have been a great step in advance if that step had been taken eight or even six years ago. It is now inadequate.

A cupola furnace for melting metals is shown at the Manchester Exhibition, which effects a considerable saving in fuel by the use of a double row of tuyeres, of which the upper row carries air to burn the carbonic oxide generated by the ascent through the fuel of the products of combustion generated by the lower row. From this furnace, which is called Voisin's furnace, no flame proceeds, the combustible gases being burnt within the cupola itself.

The pigmies alluded to by Homer and other classical poets as inhabiting the interior of Africa, and as being attacked and giving battle to cranes, there is now some reason to believe were not a pure poetical invention, as the German traveller, Schweinfurth, has found that races of stunted growth do actually exist in the region of the Albert Nyanza, and he believes these people to be the descendants of the pigmies referred to by tradition. Du Chailu is believed to be the only other traveller who has come in contact with this people, the average stature of which, he says, is about 4 ft. 7 in.

At a meeting of the Chemical Society, held during the past month, a very able lecture was delivered by Professor Dewar "On Dissociation." The first important step in the elucidation of the nature and laws of dissociation as opposed to combination was the discovery by Grove that water was decomposed at a lower temperature than that produced by the combination of oxygen and hydrogen; and it was inferred that by heating steam to the temperature of 2000 deg. C. it would be separated into oxygen and hydrogen. Deville's experiments on the instability of compounds at high temperatures proved that the decomposition of carbonic anhydride, carbonic oxide, water, &c., took place at a certain high temperature, and as the temperature was lowered that combination again occurred. It is found that there is a definite relation between the amount of decomposition and the temperature; or, in other words, that the tension of dissociation is a function of the temperature. It is also found that mechanical rarefaction increases dissociation, while mechanical compression diminishes it.

In a report recently received from Captain Biddulph, commanding the advanced party of the Yarkund Embassy, mention is made of the value of sheep as baggage animals in passing over the rugged and elevated region which had to be traversed on the route. In these districts sheep are habitually used as beasts of burden. The Tartars usually make them carry a load of 32 lb., and march seven or eight miles a day. The greatest difficulty they had to contend against on the road to Yarkund was in crossing the streams, where the water which hung about the fleece froze and added to the weight, besides which the articles carried were sometimes damaged. The load on each animal was secured by breast and breech ropes, and, sinking into the wool, was not liable to shift. One man managed the flock. A great part of the route was over rough and stony ground, some of it at an elevation of nearly 20,000 ft. But only one sheep broke down.

An interesting paper by Sir J. Lubbock, on the Habits of Bees and Wasps, has during the past month been read before the Linnean Society. Huber, in his Natural History of Ants, says that wasps are acquainted with the mode of imparting information to their companions, and that, when a single wasp finds a store of honey or sugar, it returns in a short time with a hundred companions. But Sir J. Lubbock does not find this statement to be verified by experiment. He found that single bees who had discovered a store of honey passed to and from the hive on an average five times in the hour; but they did not bring other bees with them. The same rule he found to hold good in the case of wasps. He also came to the conclusion that neither wasps nor bees could hear at all; but he believed they could distinguish colours.

The Channel tunnel has been discussed during the past month at the Society of Arts, a paper on the subject having been read by Mr. Hawes, followed by a discussion in which Sir J. Hawkshaw and others took part. Mr. Hawes stated that by the machine invented by Mr. Brunton for boring through chalk or other soft strata, the operation of forming the tunnel would not be very formidable, the rate of progress attained at Snodland, near Maidstone, where the machine was tried, having been a yard per hour. At this rate a driftway 7 ft. 9 in. diameter might be driven below the Channel in two years, and the tunnel, it was reckoned, could be completed in five or six years, at a cost of eight or ten millions sterling, on which Mr. Hawes reckoned there would be a return of about 7½ per cent. No doubt, a tunnel with a railway through it will be made some day. The question is whether, seeing that the traffic between France and England has hitherto been so little developed, we are yet ripe for so great an experiment, and whether an improved boat traffic should not be established first, so that the traffic may be gradually nursed up to the point that would justify an expenditure of ten millions on a tunnel. The tunnels under the Thames have not been very profitable speculations.

spontaneous liberality. None of us, in the face of the dire horror which threatens Bengal, can reasonably presume that his individual efforts will be superfluous. Want calls aloud to us from beyond the boundary within which official aid must needs be confined, and where the voice of want makes itself distinctly heard English sympathy and help are not wont to be withheld.

There is, however, an additional plea for prompt liberality on the part of the English people, which we are confident will have great force. When the cotton dearth suddenly smote the manufacturing industry of Lancashire, India was among the foremost to come to the rescue. Her princes, her landowners, her merchants, and her people acted at once on the generous impulse which the greatness of the calamity stirred in their hearts. They sent over contributions amounting to no less than two hundred thousand pounds. Out of their poverty their liberality abounded. Can we do less? The national wealth of England immensely exceeds, in the aggregate, that of India. There is no real want of interest in the well-being of our swarthy fellow-subjects among the people of these isles. It needed only that the exact state of facts should be made known to them by competent authority. The West, we surmise, will not allow itself to be outdone by the East in a matter of charitable help. We take pride, as Mr. Fawcett intimated, in the glory of our extended Empire, we exult in the possession of our Eastern Dependency. Our relations to it infer commensurate responsibilities. We boast of our civilisation, of our Christianity. Let us remember, however, and yield to the force of the old French maxim, "Noblesse oblige." We are bound for our own sakes, for the sake of our profession, our character, and our honour, to reach forth with promptitude and decision a helping hand towards our famished brethren. The case, however, as we have already said, is one which needs only to be stated; and at the meeting at the Mansion House, on Tuesday last, this was done with clearness and force. Its own weight will be its best argument.

THE COURT.

The Queen continues at Osborne House, Isle of Wight. Her Majesty, Princess Beatrice, and Prince Leopold attended Divine service on Sunday at Whippingham church. The Rev. George Prothero and the Rev. William Gray officiated. The Duke and Duchess of Edinburgh, attended by Lady Frances Baillie and Captain Ramsay, arrived at Osborne, on Monday, on a visit to the Queen. Their Royal Highnesses embarked from Portsmouth Harbour on board her Majesty's yacht Alberta, Captain the Prince of Leiningen, G.C.B., Royal salutes being fired from the ships of war and the batteries as the Alberta steamed out into the Solent for Osborne. The Duke and Duchess were met, upon landing at East Cowes, by Prince Leopold, and the Queen received their Royal Highnesses at the entrance-hall, upon their arrival at Osborne. Tuesday was the seventeenth anniversary of the birthday of Princess Beatrice. The day was observed at Portsmouth and at Windsor with the customary honours. The band of the Royal Marine Artillery played upon the terrace at Osborne during her Majesty's luncheon. The Prince of Leiningen joined the Royal family at luncheon. Mr. Hallé played upon the piano in the evening before the Queen and the Royal family. The ladies and gentlemen in waiting were present. The Queen, accompanied by the Duchess of Edinburgh, Princess Beatrice, and the other members of the Royal family at Osborne, has driven to Ryde and other places in the island and has walked out daily in the grounds of Osborne. Captain Glover and Captain Sartorius, on their return from the Gold Coast, dined with the Queen, leaving Osborne the following day.

THE PRINCE AND PRINCESS OF WALES.

The Prince and Princess of Wales, with their children, continue at Sandringham House. The Prince and Princess and Prince Albert Victor and Prince George of Wales attended Divine service on Sunday at St. Mary Magdalene's Church, Sandringham Park. The Rev. W. Lake Onslow, M.A., officiated. The Prince has presented £50 to the Hunstanton Convalescent Home, which was established as a thank-offering for the recovery of his Royal Highness from his illness. The Prince, during his recent visit to Russia, having been present at a trotting-match at Moscow, has forwarded, through the Grand Equerry of the Czar, a large silver vase adorned with two horses' heads, and bearing the inscription "The Prince of Wales to the Society of the Trotting-Races of Moscow." The Prince has consented to preside at the eighteenth anniversary festival of the Royal Medical College, on Wednesday next, at Willis's Rooms. His Royal Highness will also preside at the anniversary festival of the Royal Society of Musicians of Great Britain, on Monday, the 27th inst., at Willis's Rooms.

The Duke of Edinburgh was present at the marriage of Captain Haig, R.E., Equerry to his Royal Highness, and the Hon. Frances Charlotte Harris, on Thursday week, at Throley church, and afterwards at the wedding breakfast, at Belmont, near Faversham, the residence of Lord Harris, brother of the bride. On the following day the Duke presided at a general meeting of the Amateur Orchestral Society, at the Royal Albert Hall, when a complete set of Beethoven's works was presented to his Royal Highness by the members of the orchestra. His Royal Highness presided, on Monday, at a meeting of the committee of management of the National Training School for Music, at the Royal Albert Hall. The Duke will lay the foundation-stone of a new orphan school and female orphan home, in connection with the Royal Seamen and Marines, at Portsmouth, on Monday next.

Princess Louise (Marchioness of Lorne) and the Marquis of Lorne were present at the wedding breakfast given by the Duke and Duchess of Argyll, at Argyll Lodge, Kensington, on Tuesday, upon the marriage of Lord Walter Campbell to Miss Milns. The bride and bridegroom afterwards left for Dornden, the seat of the Marquis of Lorne at Tunbridge Wells.

Prince Arthur, who is serving with the first battalion Rifle brigade at Aldershot, will shortly join the 7th Hussars at Maidstone.

The Duchess of Teck was confined of a son, on Tuesday, at Kensington Palace. Dr. Farre and Mr. Merriman were in attendance. The Duchess is progressing favourably and the infant Prince is well.

The Extra Supplement.

"KNIGHTS GOING TO BATTLE."

In the picture by Sir John Gilbert, A.R.A., which was exhibited last year by the Society of Painters in Water Colours, we see the chivalrous van-leaders of a mediæval army, such as is described in some of the historical romances of Sir Walter Scott—

With all their banners bravely spread,
And all their armour flashing high.

A very brilliant and lively spectacle, no doubt, of the "pomp and circumstance" of old-fashioned warfare! The young Prince or Lord who commands this party, choosing himself to bear the standard as he approaches the ranks of his foes, has disdained the usual protection of the steel casque or morion, such as is worn by his comrades riding on each side. His head is covered with a simple velvet cap; but, with this exception, he is clad in a complete suit of plate armour, and is no doubt quite ready to take in hand either lance, or mace or battle-axe, or sword, for the actual combat now about to begin. The horses, we should think, are likely to suffer worse than the Knights in the coming fray; but when a fully armoured cavalier was once dismounted he could not be expected to fight with much agility on foot. His victorious antagonist, on the other hand, might find it more difficult to pierce him in a vital part of the body than the Roman gladiator when a prostrate competitor in the arena was condemned to death by the "pollice verso." For this reason, to save time and trouble in the field, and to make a certain pecuniary gain of the achievements of martial prowess, it was customary to admit each overthrown and captive knight to ransom. As for the poor unarmoured yeomen and peasants, who carried their spears, bills, and bows in the train of these gallant gentlemen, they were left to the common chances of slaughter. It was just the same, as we learn from Homer's Iliad, with the Greek and Trojan soldiery following those aristocratic heroes of antiquity who wore brazen armour like that of Sir Walter's English and Scottish knights. What seems rather odd, but Mr. Gladstone is perhaps able to justify it, the famous Achilles had the finest suit of armour, Vulcan's patent manufacture, though he was invulnerable, all but one heel, from the mystic effect of a bath in the Styx. If Sir Garnet Wolseley, or any other modern commander in war, had gone into battle with a twofold protection for his precious body, while the private soldiers of his army marched with no such defence—what should we say of the hero in that case? Some might call him a bully and coward.

THE VOLUNTEER FIELD DAY.

The Easter Monday display of field manoeuvres on Wimbledon-common by 12,000 men of the Volunteer Rifle Corps, with some of the Guards, Royal Artillery, and Carabiniers of the regular Army, was a holiday entertainment for nearly 100,000 London people. As a military performance it was less remarkable, since the crowd of spectators rather interfered with the manifest execution of a tactical plan. But, like the Derby Day at Epsom or the Oxford and Cambridge boat-race on the Thames, it was a great occasion of popular interest; and our two pages of Sketches represent a variety of the scenes and incidents which attended this exhibition of volunteer soldiery.

The forces collected were divided into a Northern and a Southern army—the former supposed to belong to Middlesex, the latter to Surrey. The first was commanded by Prince Edward of Saxe-Weimar, the second by Colonel Stephenson, C.B., of the Scots Fusilier Guards.

The Northern Army, assembled in Hyde Park, for Middlesex, consisted of four brigades, under command respectively of Colonel Lord Truro (4th Middlesex), Colonel Shipley, Colonel Hyde Page, and Colonel Hepburn (Scots Fusilier Guards). The first brigade was composed of the Uxbridge division Middlesex Yeomanry Cavalry, the 1st London Artillery Volunteers, and the 2nd and 7th Administrative Battalions, 4th, 9th, and 18th Middlesex Rifles. The second brigade comprised the 2nd Tower Hamlets Engineers, 40th, 46th, and 49th Middlesex Rifles, 1st Administrative Battalion, and 1st Tower Hamlets Rifles. The third brigade included the F battery of the Hon. Artillery Company, with four guns, the London division Middlesex Yeomanry, and the 15th, 19th, 22nd, 23rd, and 38th Middlesex Rifles. The fourth brigade was formed of the 26th, 36th, 37th, and 39th Middlesex Rifles. Attached to the Northern Army were a squadron of the 1st Life Guards and one of the Royal Horse Guards.

The Southern Army (that of Surrey), commanded by Colonel Stephenson, was in three brigades, under Lord Bury, Colonel Rich, C.B., and Colonel Lane Fox. The first brigade of this force was made up of the 2nd, 1st, 11th, 20th, 21st, and 29th Middlesex Rifles. In the second brigade were the 3rd Middlesex Artillery, 1st London Engineers, and 1st, 2nd, and 3rd London Rifles. The remaining brigade consisted of the 1st, 2nd, 3rd, and 4th Administrative Battalions, 2nd, 7th, and 19th Surrey Rifles, and 5th Essex Rifles. The 5th Middlesex, City of London, and Surrey brigades composed part of this force, to which were attached a squadron of Carabiniers and two batteries of the Royal Artillery.

The staff of Prince Edward of Saxe-Weimar, commanding the Northern Army, was composed of Lieut.-Colonel E. H. Clive, Grenadier Guards; Lieut.-Colonel Blundell, Captain the Hon. G. Villiers; Lieut.-Colonel H. Brown, M.P., 1st Lancashire Artillery; Major Blundell, 3rd Hussars; Captain the Hon. E. Boscawen, Coldstream Guards; Captain the Hon. R. Campbell, Coldstream Guards; Captain A. Van de Weyer, Grenadier Guards.

Colonel Stephenson's staff was composed of Lieut.-Colonel Lord W. Seymour, Coldstream Guards; Major P. D. Vigers, 19th Regiment; Lieutenant A. Cyprian Knollys, Scots Fusilier Guards; Captain H. G. McGregor, 29th Foot; Captain H. W. Hummel, 11th Middlesex Rifles.

The umpire staff were Colonel M. Bruce, Grenadier Guards; Colonel G. W. A. Higginson, C.B., Grenadier Guards; Colonel the Hon. P. R. B. Fielding, C.B., Coldstream Guards; Colonel the Hon. W. H. A. Fielding, Coldstream Guards; Colonel G. Hyde Page, commanding 47th Sub-District; Lieut.-Colonel Woolsey, R.A.

The general idea of the operations may be briefly described. The Northern Army was supposed to march from the north and west parts of Middlesex against the Southern Army, imagined to be occupying Croydon. In order to prevent the junction of the western with the northern forces of the enemy the commander of the Southern Army detached, to occupy the Wimbledon position, three brigades of infantry with artillery, who, if possible, were to advance to Richmond Park and to watch the bridges over the Thames between Hammersmith and Kingston. At ten a.m., by which hour the Southern Army was supposed to, and actually did, arrive at the Wimbledon position, the first brigade of the Northern Army, having crossed the Thames at Richmond, had advanced to East Sheen; the fourth brigade, forming the advanced guard of the main body, was to halt on Barnes-common after crossing Hammersmith Bridge; while the second and third brigades were supposed to be on the march to cross the same bridge. In accordance with this idea, the operations were to begin by the Northern Army driving the Southern force out of Richmond Park.

Colonel Stephenson, with the Southern or Surrey Army, took up a position extending from Caesar's Camp on the south of Wimbledon-common to beyond the windmill on the north. His first line at the outset was in advance of the line of butts, with strong outposts, supports, and reserves thrown forward to the edge of Baveley Brook, a streamlet which, running in the valley between the Wimbledon plateau and the high ground of Combe Wood and Richmond Park, crosses the Kingston-road in Putney Bottom, thence running north, parallel to the side of Richmond Park, cuts through a corner of the enclosure by Roehampton Gate, and flows past Mortlake into the Thames at Barnes Elms. It was only at two points that a direct attack could be made, and these, therefore, were strongly guarded. The flanks of the position were assailable on the left from south of Combe Wood, which formed a screen to hide the intentions of an enemy, and on the right by an attack coming directly from the north through Roehampton, and reaching the plateau behind the ravine in front of the running-deer butt, and far in rear of the position held by the Southern army.

The Northern or Middlesex Army, numbering 7000, under Prince Edward of Saxe-Weimar, marched from Hyde Park and over Hammersmith Bridge, and across Barnes-common, arriving in Richmond Park about noon. It was then determined that the Middlesex army should attack the main position of the Surrey Army, which was at the Old Intrenchment, commanding both the descent from Richmond Park and a length of Kingston road, from Kingston Hill on the south-west to Putney Bottom on the north-east. The attack commenced by the advance from the Robin Hood Gate of the first and fourth brigades, under cover of the fire of the Hon. Artillery Company's battery, which was got into an excellent position on the slopes between the park and Combe Wood. The enemy lost no time in replying to the four 6-pounders of the Hon. Artillery Company; but skirmishers were thrown out from the 2nd and 7th Administrative Battalions of the Middlesex Rifles, from the 4th, 9th, and 18th Middlesex Rifles, all in the first brigade, and from the 26th, 36th, 37th, and 39th, in the second brigade. Those skirmishing parties crept down the descent and across the road; but they were opposed by a continuous rifle fire. So it went on till half-past three, when an attack was made upon the centre of the line, resulting in a sharp fusillade. Just then several fires were blazing away at different parts of the common, the furze having been ignited, and immense pillars of smoke rolled over the combatants, partially obscuring some and altogether concealing others. The battle had now been going on for nearly three hours. An important position on the left had been lost by the Southern force, while the Horse Guards and the Life Guards had succeeded in turning the right of Colonel Stephenson's line, and the Inns of Court Volunteer Corps were pressing forward with irresistible energy. The fact was that Prince Edward had advanced from Richmond Park by the Robin Hood Gate; that the Household Cavalry had turned the flank of the Surrey force, cutting off one squadron of the Carabiniers; and that the Inns of Court Volunteers, with whom were brigaded the London Scottish and others, had taken the Southern force in flank. The 3rd London changed their front and opened fire upon the enemy, but unavailingly. At four o'clock the flanking operation on the right appeared to be completed; still the battle was anything but over on the left of Colonel Stephenson's line, where there was a rattling fusillade going on. This lasted perhaps ten minutes longer; then it died away, and the battle of Wimbledon was over.

The scenes presented by the engraved sketches, in different parts of the field and the roads approaching it, during several hours of the day, before and after the sham-fight, as well as in the midst of its exciting turmoil, are such as need scarcely be explained to our readers. Those who have ever witnessed an exhibition of mimic warfare in the neighbourhood of London are quite familiar with these amusing minor incidents of a field-day hereabouts.

"NINA."

During two or three years past our attention has been occasionally arrested, both at home and abroad (out of Italy), by pictures, no larger than our Engraving, of little Italian boys and girls by a Roman painter bearing the name of the old Venetian master, Bonifazi. The merits of these works are their great, though unpretending, fidelity to the characteristics of the small folk depicted, their naïveté of expression, their delicacy of modelling, and the feeling for the picturesque shown in the bits of national costume introduced within the restricted limits of bust portraiture. The little ones of Signor A. Bonifazi are not the ideal cherubs of many non-Italian painters—they are the true children of the Roman populace or peasantry. "Nina," whose portrait we engrave, is a sample of her sisters. You might meet just such a little girl anywhere about the streets of Rome or out on the Campagna, except where the malaria is more than ordinarily poisonous, for there both children and adults betray its baneful influence in their fever-worn features, sallow complexion, and wistful look of pain. Yet there is nothing of the conventional Italian about our Nina. She has not a "Roman nose;" she has not even the "low Italian brow." Her nationality might possibly not be suspected, save for her unkempt hair and dark lustrous eyes veiled by black lashes, not to be matched for length and thickness out of Italy. Those who know the Romans best will, however, recognise a familiar type. In the picture, moreover, the colours and trimmings of her dress, as well as her collar, would proclaim her origin; whilst her necklace and earrings suggest that fondness for trinkets and personal ornaments which the very poorest of Italian women contrive to indulge.

A new Corn Exchange at Bedford was opened, on Wednesday, by the Duke of Bedford.

The Royal Albert Edward Infirmary and Dispensary at Wigan was publicly opened, on Thursday week, by the Earl of Crawford and Balcarres.

The Royal Agricultural Society's visit to Taunton in 1875 is practically decided upon. A deputation viewed the capital site in Galmington-fields yesterday week and met the local committee, which has now obtained promises of support amounting to about £3300.

The Astley Colliery, at Dukinfield, near Manchester, has been visited by a calamity of terrible magnitude. Though of great depth and extent, the mine has been noted for its freedom from gas, and naked lights have been authorised as perfectly safe; but by the disturbance consequent on a fall of roof a large accumulation of the noxious vapour was liberated, and an explosion ensued which has caused a deplorable loss of life. The total number of the killed is supposed to be about fifty.

FOREIGN AND COLONIAL NEWS.

FRANCE.

Thursday, April 16.

The Septennat is making a final effort, through the Duc de Broglie's Minister of Justice, to cause its authority to be respected. Since the commencement of the recess the Legitimist and Bonapartist journals have been unusually active in organising, the ones the Monarchy, the others the Empire—on paper—and speaking most contemptuously of Marshal MacMahon and his advisers. M. Emile Ollivier has inaugurated his return into the political arena by an extremely violent article in the Liberté advocating a plebiscite and denying the irrevocability of the Septennat, which the ex-Napoleonic Minister maintains would imply the Assembly's abdication of all its rights. The Union, also—the Count de Chambord's confidential organ—has been busy proclaiming that the presentation of the so-called constitutional bills by the Ministry to the Committee of Thirty releases the majority from its engagements with the Cabinet, and reinvests it with full liberty of action with regard to the maintenance of Marshal MacMahon's powers. The Government has responded to these attacks by a couple of communiqués warning the journals in question that they are exposing themselves to repressive measures, and by a circular addressed by the Minister of Justice to the public prosecutors inviting them to take immediate proceedings against any newspaper contesting the powers conferred by the National Assembly for seven years upon the Duc de Magenta.

This circular appears to have enraged the Royalist organs beyond measure, and the Duc de Broglie and his colleagues are informed that the whole of the Right of the Assembly agrees with the Union and the Gazette de France in considering the proposed organisation of the Septennat as violating the law of Nov. 19, and that it will unanimously vote against the proposed Constitutional laws, and will spare no pains to overthrow the Cabinet and, if need be, the Marshal himself. In fact, the Legitimist press promises us a veritable revolution for next month, and openly challenges the Minister of Justice to have his instructions to the public prosecutors carried into effect. As no proceedings have been taken against the journals using this outspoken language, one must presume them to be in the right, and that, as far as they are concerned, the Government is absolutely powerless to enforce respect.

But if the Monarchical journals enjoy exemption from prosecution, the crusade against the Republican press continues with unabated vigour. During the past week alone one newspaper, the Progrès de la Somme, has been suppressed; another, the Réforme of Toulouse, has been suspended for three months; while the sale of four others has been interdicted on the public way. Occasionally, however, this Governmental persecution of the press meets with a well-merited rebuff, as in the instance of the Avenir National, a well-known Radical organ, which was recently suppressed by the Governor of Paris. The proprietors immediately brought it out under the title of La Ville de Paris; but, legal proceedings being taken against them, they were condemned by the Tribunal of First Instance and by the Appeal Court successively to cease publishing their journal. Eventually, however, the case came before the Cour de Cassation, and the supreme legal tribunal has decided that the publication of the Ville de Paris is perfectly legal, and has, moreover, condemned the Government to pay the costs of all three actions. This unexpected decision has caused no little sensation; the public prosecutor, who pleaded for the Ministry, has resigned his post, and so great, it is said, was the commotion in the Cabinet that a Ministerial crisis was with difficulty warded off.

The spring session of the Councils-General has begun, and, according to all accounts, it will be brief and comparatively unimportant. It is possible there will be no session at all in Corsica, where Prince Napoleon is President of the Council, as only twenty-one out of sixty-two members attended the inaugural sitting, rendering it impossible to transact any business. It seems that the greater number of the absentees were Bonapartists, who stayed away to signify their displeasure at the Prince's conduct in relation to the Empress and the Prince Imperial. At Marseilles the President's inaugural address was followed by conflicting shouts of "Vive le Roi!" and "Vive la République!" in the public tribunes, whereupon the Council unanimously decided to have the spectators expelled, and continued its sitting with closed doors.

Considerable sensation has been caused in Republican circles in consequence of General Chanzy having placed Algeria in a state of siege. The General had always passed for a Republican, and at one epoch was President of the Left Centre group in the Assembly. M. Crémieux, deputy for Algiers, has written him a lengthy letter with reference to the measure he has taken—due, it would appear, to a scurrilous Radical paper having abused the municipality, but to which the General has as yet given no reply.

There has been another great financial crash this week. M. Clement Duvernois, editor of the Ordre, and Minister of Commerce and Agriculture for a brief period under the falling Empire, has been arrested, together with two other well-known French speculators, MM. Wolff and Frankel, on various charges of fraud in connection with their administration of the so-called Territorial Bank of Spain.

SPAIN.

There has been no resumption of hostilities between Carlists and Republicans in the north. Rough weather has interfered with telegraphic communications, and rendered military operations all but impossible. Marshal Serrano has telegraphed to the Government at Madrid announcing that, up to the 10th inst., operations in the north were rendered impracticable on account of the rain and stormy weather. On the 8th inst. fifty cannon had been placed in position before Abanto. On Monday Admiral Topete went to Madrid by special train, and was immediately afterwards present at a Cabinet Council. Since that time the Admiral has been in frequent conference with Ministers, previous to returning to his headquarters with the Army of the North. General Concha's plan of operations against the Carlists, submitted to Marshal Serrano, and by him rejected, is understood to have been in effect a march of 20,000 picked men into Navarre by way of Logrono, leaving the Marshal with the rest of the Army of the North in its positions before San Pedro de Abanto.

A Carlist band under Palacios has been surprised at Composines, in Catalonia, by the volunteers of Mora and Delvo.

ITALY.

The Senate has adopted all the clauses of the Currency Bill without amendment, and the Chamber of Deputies has begun the discussion of the financial bills.

Lady Herbert of Lea has presented the Pope with £3600, collected among poor young girls in Great Britain.

GERMANY.

The Emperor William paid a long visit, on Thursday week, to Prince Bismarck, who, on the occasion of his birthday, has received a congratulatory letter from the King of Bavaria.

The Prince is again able to devote part of his time to business, but he is prohibited to leave his room for the present. Prince Bismarck publishes, in the official gazette, a letter thanking the numerous correspondents in all parts of the empire and abroad who sent him messages of sympathy and goodwill during his recent illness.

Field Marshal Wrangel celebrated his ninetieth birthday on Monday last. The German Emperor and Empress, the Crown Prince and Princess, and Princes Karl and Alexander congratulated him in person. The Marshal is said to be in perfect health.

In the German Reichstag, on Monday, Herr von Bennigsen's compromise on the Army Bill was adopted amid general rejoicing. It accepts the Government standard of 401,659 as a peace effective, but limits the vote to seven years. The Minister of War made an explanatory statement, the gist of which was that the Government relied on the experience of the next seven years to prove that the peace effective now proposed was permanently necessary. This official acceptance of the compromise was enthusiastically cheered. In Tuesday's sitting the discussion on the bill was brought to a conclusion, Herr von Bennigsen's amendment being adopted by a large majority. Field Marshal Count von Moltke spoke energetically for the maintenance of a powerful Germany as the best guarantee for peace. In presence of the shouts which had been raised for revenge, it was necessary, he said, to keep the hand on the sword. The majority for the Government upon the eighth clause of the bill was 78, in a House of 371 members, one of whom abstained from voting.

Archbishop Ledochowski has been deprived of his see by the Ecclesiastical Court of Berlin. There is no appeal against this sentence. The Archbishop was not present at the trial.

The German Government is fitting out a small expedition at Kiel for the purpose of deep-sea exploration.

THE FAMINE IN INDIA.

We have received for publication the following telegram from the Viceroy, dated April 11:—"No material change in prices or general situation since telegram of 4th. Lieutenant-Governor states greatest difficulties still confined to Tirhoot district, from which recent accounts are favourable. Commissioner telegraphs from Northern Tirhoot:—'Nothing like starvation is apparent. Village relief in hands of head men. Working number on Bahayra-road, 26,000 only; on Mudhoobunee works, 200,000. Employing native officers in disciplining mobs of labourers. Public health good. Native traders increasing imports. Water supply everywhere deficient. Village after village searched for hungry people. Mudhoobunee, Murajah, Durbungah circles all formed. Can honestly say famine well in hand.' Lieutenant-Governor reports local transport, as a whole, extremely efficient. Durbungah railway will probably be completed to-morrow or next day. Four fresh starvation deaths reported—Tirhoot three, Monghyr one—making total 17 cases."

The Standard publishes the following special telegram from Calcutta, with the date of Tuesday:—"In Tirhoot, which is the blackest district, the markets are still tolerably supplied. Hidden hoards of grain have been discovered. Eight hundred thousand maunds of Government rice are already in store. There are nearly half a million of labourers on the relief works. A temporary railway has been opened to Durbungah. Most of the reported deaths from starvation are considered doubtful."

In a comprehensive despatch, dated Calcutta, March 20, Lord Northbrook vindicates his general policy with regard to the Indian famine. He shows that it was intended to interfere as little as possible with private trade; that the chief measures on which the Government relied were the relief works and the distribution of food; but that secondary measures had also been resorted to, including the remission of land revenue, the reduction of railway freights, and advances for the purchase of grain. The despatch sets forth the anticipations that have been formed of prospective distress, and the comparative scope of the precautions already adopted. It concludes with a brief account of the actual condition of the people.

A meeting of the executive committee appointed at the Mansion House to raise funds for the relief of the famine in Bengal was held on Monday afternoon at the Mansion House—the Lord Mayor presiding. Mr. Vine, the honorary secretary, read the report of the proceedings at the previous meeting, and he also stated that the amount subscribed down to the present time was about £80,000. The Lord Mayor stated that, in addition to this sum amounts had been collected at Manchester and Liverpool which would raise the total sum received through this committee in round numbers to £100,000. A letter was read from Mr. Schaleh, the chairman of the Calcutta committee, which stated that to the present time that committee had received £150,000, the whole of which had been expended in the relief of the suffering inhabitants. Their operations had been confined to supplying assistance to the different local committees, the Government having undertaken the duty of providing for the general distress and the prevention of actual starvation. The Lord Mayor informed the committee that Leeds, Huddersfield, Salford, and other towns had been subscribing most liberally.

A public meeting of persons taking an interest in the people of India, and in the condition of the inhabitants of the distressed districts, was held at the Mansion House on Tuesday—the Lord Mayor presiding. A letter was read from Lord Northbrook, in which he said it was impossible to doubt that, over an above all that Government could do, an ample field would be found for the beneficial employment of large private subscriptions, for this was found to be the case in the somewhat similar circumstance of the Irish famine. The moral and political advantage which was derived from the substantial expression of sympathy in England with distress in India was very great, and the exertions of the Mansion House committee would be widely appreciated by her Majesty's Indian subjects. The Marquis of Salisbury, Secretary of State for India, moved the first resolution, which was to the effect that widespread and severe distress existed in India, and appealing to the people of this country to use all the exertions in their power to relieve it. Lord Lawrence, in seconding the resolution, feared that the sufferings of the people would be still greater than they now appeared to be, especially with the aged and the young; and considering the magnitude and extraordinary character of the calamity he expressed regret that Parliament had not made a grant to alleviate so much distress. Amongst the subsequent speakers were Sir Charles Trevelyan, Professor Fawcett, and Lord Stanley of Alderley.

The number of emigrants from the Mersey last month was 6068; a decrease of 7343 as compared with the corresponding period of last year.

THE CHURCH.

On Easter Thursday, at St. Paul's temporary church, Clerkenwell, the Rev. A. Styleman Herring, the Incumbent, baptised 144 children and adults. The parents, witnesses, and children (270 in all, and all poor people) were kindly entertained by a lady whose name has not been made public.

Mr. T. W. Tatton, of Wytthenshaw, laid the cornerstone of the new parish church of St. Wilfrid, at Northenden, on Saturday. The Rector (the Ven. Archdeacon Johnson) will meet the cost of the chancel, Mr. T. W. Tatton that of the north and south aisles, and the parishioners the remainder.

The series of services in celebration of the reopening of Worcester Cathedral after its complete restoration closed on Tuesday, with a festival of church choirs of the diocese, at which about 1500 choristers assisted. There were two services, and Lord Dudley entertained the choir at dinner.

Among other churches reopened during the Easter week may be mentioned St. John's, Boxmoor, by the Bishop of Rochester; West Clendon, Surrey, by the Bishop of Winchester—where the pulpit of Caen stone, and the altar furniture, are gifts of Lady Cranley and others; and Annesley, Notts, the historical seat of the Chaworth-Musters family, by the Bishop Suffragan of Nottingham.

The Rev. John Cullen, Curate of Bottesford, Leicestershire, has been presented by Earl Manvers to the living of Radcliffe-on-Trent. On the occasion of Mr. Cullen leaving Bottesford for Radcliffe he received the following testimonials:—A beautiful clock and an illuminated address, handsomely framed, from the parishioners; a handsome walnut inlaid davenport writing-table from the Rector; a silver inkstand from the churchwardens; several volumes from members of the congregation, and a coffee-pot from the school-children.

Three windows, executed by Messrs. Clayton and Bell, have been placed in the south aisle of St. Botolph's, Bishopsgate, in memory of the late Rev. J. G. Wrench, who was for nine years Curate of the parish and for nine months Vicar of St. James's, Clapton. Mr. Wrench died, very suddenly, on June 11 last; and, although nearly £200 had been given him as a testimonial by his old parishioners when he left Bishopsgate, a few loving friends, chiefly unconnected with the parish, have thus further testified to their appreciation of his character and worth.

The Bishop of Lichfield, on Easter Wednesday, consecrated the parish church of Harborne, which, although it was restored only eight years ago, at a cost of £3500, has now had the south wall rebuilt, the floor of the chancel paved with the best Minton tiles, a new wrought-iron pulpit, a new brass lectern, a new altar and sedilia placed in it, while the organ has been enlarged, the heating and gas arrangements improved, and other improvements made. Some beautiful stained-glass windows have likewise been given, especially one in memory of the late celebrated water-colour painter, Mr. David Cox.

Acting on the advice of Mr. Justice Keating, Bishop Temple has pronounced against the reredos in Exeter Cathedral. The plea of the Dean and Chapter, that they were independent of the Bishop in these matters, was refuted by demonstration that the bishopric and the cathedral had co-existed for a couple of centuries before the deanery. As to the legality of the reredos, it was decided that the figures it contained were images, though only in alto relievo, and that, as embodying images, the reredos was illegal. The Bishop intimated that he would grant a faculty for any beautification of the cathedral conformable to law.

The Vicar of Richmond has communicated to the select vestry the Bishop of Winchester's reply to his letter asking advice about the removal of the boundary wall between the consecrated and unconsecrated portions of the cemetery. He adds that, in accordance with his Lordship's decision, he will willingly order the removal of the wall as soon as it has been decided by the Home Secretary that the ground adjoining the workhouse may be legally used for interments. An inspector from the Home Office visited the cemetery on Wednesday, and informed the board that he could not recommend the Home Secretary to sanction the use of the site as a burial-ground.

The Bishop of Manchester presided, on Thursday week, at the annual meeting of the members of the Manchester Diocesan Board of Education, and expressed his regret that the income of the board from all sources was quite inadequate to the discharge of its duties efficiently. A resolution was passed regretting the resolution to which the council have felt compelled to come to refuse any more applications for building grants from the general fund until its annual income reaches £2500, and urging upon the Churchmen of the diocese the importance of establishing a supplementary special fund in order to enable the board to meet pressing appeals for help.

There will also be a provision giving powers for Fellows to marry. These statutes have been unanimously approved by the college, but, as they will chiefly deal with subjects on which a recommendation may be expected from the Universities Commission to apply equally to all the colleges in the University, the late Government intimated that they would not be prepared to advise her Majesty until the report of the Commissioners had been published, and this understanding has been acted upon by the present Government. The Guardian says that there is good reason for believing that the report of the Universities Commission will be made public during the present month.—A scholarship of £30 a year at Queen's has been awarded to Lewis Faraker, King William's College, Isle of Man.

Dr. Brunner, the Professor of Astronomy in Trinity College, Dublin, has resigned his appointment.—It is stated, on the best authority in collegiate circles, that the propositions for the reorganisation of Dublin University, recently published, had no official character, but were merely suggestions, confidentially circulated among the Fellows with a view to eliciting opinion.

The school was founded in 1515 by Sir Stephen Jenkins, a merchant tailor of London. It contains 220 boys. The new one is intended to accommodate 300 boys, and the cost is estimated at £17,500. Towards this the trustees have raised £10,000.

Compared with the corresponding weeks in 1873, 1872, and 1871, these figures showed a decrease of 8242, 3112, and 31,208 respectively. The Earl of Harrowby has written a letter to the Times suggesting that the provision of an abundance of seats on the Thames Embankment would be an inducement for families to seek for recreation in the open air, and would thus tend somewhat to mitigate the evil of the crowded and unhealthy habitations of the poorer population of the metropolis. The editor observes that one of the wants of the Embankment is being supplied through the liberality of Mr. W. H. Smith, M.P.

Mr. Norton has this year renewed his appeal for an increase in the salaries paid to our metropolitan magistrates. The appeal comes with singular force and grace from the quarter whence it is issued, as Mr. Norton, having filled the office of a magistrate in London for a long period of years with high distinction, is entitled to speak with authority on the duties and responsibilities of that important office, while, having himself retired from the bench, he has no personal interest whatever in the reform he advocates.

Exceptionally high tides have been too prevalent to be pleasant this year. And now it seems we are threatened with still another of these unwelcome visits. It has been predicted that a very high tide will visit the Thames to-day (Saturday), and already a deal of anxiety and consternation seems to have seized upon the dwellers on the river banks, who have a dismal recollection of the ruin which the overflow of waters has caused within the last few weeks. The Metropolitan Board of Works have instructed their district engineers to report upon the damage done during the recent high tides.

The Grove-road Board school, which is situated in a pleasant green valley about half a mile distant from the Forest-hill station of the London, Brighton, and South Coast Railway, took place on Saturday, under the auspices of Sir Charles Reed. On Monday evening Sir C. Reed opened a new set of Board schools in the eastern part of Battersea; and Mr. E. H. Crurie, the vice-chairman of the board, presided at the opening of new schools of an extensive character in Gloucester-street, Commercial-road.

Any opinion of Sir Sydney Waterlow on the subject of improved dwellings for the poor deserves consideration. In a letter published in the Times he declares that the hands of private enterprise are tied by the impossibility of securing suitable sites. Plenty of money is forthcoming, but improved homes for the working classes are not built, because capitalists cannot obtain possession of the fever dens constituting our narrow courts and alleys. Sir Sydney suggests that some metropolitan body should be empowered to purchase by compulsion all houses declared to be unfit for human habitation, as well as adjacent property, in order to form suitable sites and approaches. In regard to the financial side of the question, Sir Sydney admits the ground-rent obtained might not generally cover the cost of improvements, but believes the loss would be small if capital was raised by the issue of Metropolitan Three-and-a-Half per Cent Consols. He estimates this eventual loss could be covered by a farthing rate on the metropolitan assessment, which would be more than compensated by decreased expenditure for medical relief to the poor.

Last week 2420 births and 1387 deaths were registered in London. After making due allowance for increase of population, the births were 68 and the deaths 288 below the average numbers in the corresponding week of the last ten years. The annual death-rate from all causes, which in the three preceding weeks had been 25, 23, and 21 per 1000, was again last week 21. The deaths included 36 from measles, 14 from scarlet fever, 6 from diphtheria, 55 from whooping-cough, 29 from different forms of fever, 10 from diarrhoea, and not one from smallpox. Of the fatal cases of fever, 2 were certified as typhus, 19 as enteric or typhoid, and 8 as simple continued fever. The deaths referred to diseases of the respiratory organs and phthisis, which in the three previous weeks had been 649, 551, and 489, were last week 499, being 82 below the corrected average weekly number; 191 resulted from phthisis, 167 from bronchitis, and 104 from pneumonia. Different forms of violence caused 46 deaths; 40 were the result of negligence or accident, including 15 from fractures and contusions, 4 from burns and scalds, 4 from drowning, and 12, including 9 of infants under one year of age, from suffocation. Four cases of suicide and 1 of infanticide were registered. A woman died on the 25th ult., at Bow, through blood poisoning from the scratch of a cat. Four of the deaths from fractures and contusions resulting from negligence or accident were caused by horses or vehicles in the streets.

A paper was read, on Wednesday, at the Society of Arts, by Mr. W. Simpson, on Symbolism in Oriental Ornament—Mr. Hyde Clarke in the chair. Mr. Simpson began by remarking that symbolism began at an early age of humanity, but not till civilisation had made some advance. The Oriental was at all periods a religious man, and his literature and his art were all devoted to his faith. The lotus was early applied by the Egyptians, the Buddhists, and the Brahmins. It was a symbol, in the Brahminical form, of the female power of the universe. The lotus became the throne of Buddha, and its petals might be seen on the base of every icon of that deity. He had examined, when in India, the celebrated sandalwood gates of Somnauth, but he came to the conclusion that they were not the real gates at all. The art upon them was Mohammedan, not Hindoo, and it was proved that they were made of deodar pine, not sandalwood. Mr. Simpson then referred to the trisul or trident, the crescent, the cross, or letter T as Eastern symbols, the symbolism of words and sentences, such as "abracadabra," triangles, circles, and other forms. He also alluded to the symbolism of colours, which formed an important part of the subject. The Temples of Chaldea were painted upon a system of symbolism which referred to the seven planets, and in India each god was painted a colour with reference to his attributes. The Hindoo might be called the Pantheistic style, for their multitudes of gods led to a prolific mass of images and symbols. The tendency of our ornamental art in the present day was in this direction. Several gentlemen having spoken, Mr. Simpson replied, and a vote of thanks was given to him.

THE LATE DR. LIVINGSTONE.

At an early hour on Wednesday morning the Malwa, with the remains of Dr. Livingstone on board, was signalled from Hurst Castle, and about eight o'clock she arrived in Southampton Water. The body was landed amid every sign of respect from the shipping in the docks and from the local authorities, and, escorted by a procession, was conveyed to the railway station, the shops along the route being partially closed. The church bells rang muffled peals and minute-guns were fired. A special train was supplied by the London and South-Western Railway Company; and the remains, which were accompanied by the relatives and friends of the deceased traveller, were brought to London.

The body was received at the rooms of the Royal Geographical Society, where an examination was made by Sir William Fergusson. The identification was placed beyond doubt, the left arm still showing traces of a fracture caused by the bite of a lion more than thirty years ago.

The preparations for the funeral in Westminster Abbey were begun on Tuesday. The spot selected for the grave is in the central line of the nave, exactly half-way between the western doors and the choir. On the north side is the grave of the Countess of Clanricarde, and on the other side that of Thomas Thompson. Close by are Major Rennell, and Telford and Stephenson, the engineers.

The funeral will be celebrated at one to-day (Saturday). The public will be admitted by the west door of the nave and by Poets'-corner to the south transept, and the doors will be open at 12.30.

At a public meeting held in Edinburgh, on Tuesday, it was resolved to erect a national statue in memory of Dr. Livingstone.

It appears that Dr. Livingstone's family are left in actual distress through his death, and a public subscription on their behalf is proposed by Baroness Burdett-Coutts, Lord Kinnaird, Sir Bartle Frere, and others. Money may be paid to Messrs. Ransome, Bouverie, and Co., and at the London and Westminster Bank, to the credit of the "Livingstone Testimonial Fund."

THE NEW CABINET MINISTERS.

The Portraits which occupy two pages of this week's Number are those of the twelve noblemen and gentlemen holding office as her Majesty's Ministers in the new Conservative Government.

The First Lord of the Treasury is the Right Hon. Benjamin Disraeli, M.P. for Buckinghamshire, a memoir of whom lately appeared in this Journal, with a separate portrait. He is, of course, the leader and most responsible person of the Ministry, and the foremost Parliamentary champion of the Conservative party. Mr. Disraeli is sixty-eight years of age; he was Prime Minister once before, in 1868. On the opposite page a corresponding central place is allotted to the Earl of Derby, Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, who is equally well known to his countrymen, having held the same office under Mr. Disraeli once before, besides those of Secretary for the Colonies and for India, and having sat many years in the House of Commons as Lord Stanley. He is forty-seven years of age, was educated at Rugby, and at Trinity College, Cambridge, and succeeded his father, the late Earl, in 1863.

The portraits surrounding that of the Prime Minister are those of Lord Cairns, the Earl of Carnarvon, the Marquis of Salisbury, Mr. Gathorne Hardy, and Sir Stafford Northcote. The first named is Lord Chancellor, as he was in a former Conservative Ministry. He was born in 1819, was educated at Trinity College, Dublin, and is an eminent lawyer; he formerly represented Belfast. Lord Carnarvon is the Right Hon. Henry Howard Molyneux Herbert, who was born in June, 1831, was educated at Eton and Christ Church, Oxford, and succeeded the late Earl, his father, in 1849. He holds, for the second time, the office of Secretary of State for the Colonies. The Right Hon. Robert Arthur Taubot Gascoigne Cecil, Marquis of Salisbury, is forty-four years of age, and was educated at Eton and Oxford; he is now again reappointed Secretary of State for India. The Right Hon. Gathorne Hardy, now Secretary of State for the War Department, was Home Secretary five or six years ago. He is in the sixtieth year of his age, and is M.P. for Oxford University. The new Chancellor of the Exchequer is the Right Hon. Sir Stafford Henry Northcote, Bart., M.P. for North Devon, who was born in 1818, was educated at Balliol College, Oxford, and was private secretary to Mr. Gladstone thirty years ago, when Mr. Gladstone was President of the Board of Trade. Sir Stafford has himself held that office, and has also been Minister for India.

The Duke of Richmond, K.G., Lord President of the Council; the Earl of Malmesbury, Lord Privy Seal; Lord John Manners, Postmaster-General; the Right Hon. Richard Assheton Cross, M.P., Home Secretary; and the Right Hon. George Ward Hunt, M.P., First Lord of the Admiralty, have their portraits, with that of Lord Derby, on the second page. The Duke is fifty-six years of age, and has served in the Army as aide-de-camp to the Commander-in-Chief. He has been President of the Poor-Law Board and of the Board of Trade. The Earl of Malmesbury, who was born in 1807, held the office of Foreign Secretary under the late Earl of Derby, in 1859. Lord John Manners, younger son of the late Duke of Rutland, was born in 1818, and was educated at Eton, and at Trinity College, Cambridge. He is M.P. for North Leicestershire, and has thrice been in office as First Commissioner of Works. Mr. Cross, M.P. for South-West Lancashire, is from the neighbourhood of Preston. He is fifty years of age, was educated at Rugby and Trinity, Cambridge, and has been a banker and a practising barrister. Mr. Ward Hunt, M.P. for North Northamptonshire, is son of a country clergyman, was born in 1825, and was bred at Eton and Oxford. He was Chancellor of the Exchequer in 1868.

The photographers of the portraits copied for our Engravings are the following:—That of Mr. Disraeli is by Mayall; Lord Derby, Elliott and Fry; Lord Cairns, the Stereoscopic Company; Lord Carnarvon and Lord Salisbury, also the Stereoscopic Company; Mr. Gathorne Hardy and Sir Stafford Northcote, the Duke of Richmond, Lord John Manners, and Ward Hunt are likewise from the Stereoscopic Company's photographs. The portrait of Mr. Assheton Cross is from one by Barraud and Jerrard.

The foundation-stone of an orphan asylum to be erected at Newcastle-on-Tyne, at a cost of £10,000, by Mr. Hilton-Phillipson, as a memorial of his late mother, was laid last week. Sir W. G. Armstrong took part in the ceremony.

The Glasgow Herald states that Mr. Alexander Macdonald, M.P., the miners' secretary, has purchased the beautifully-situated estate of Welhall, in the vicinity of Hamilton, which was recently occupied by Mr. Graham, commissioner to the Duke of Hamilton.

The Daily News understands that the Premier has recommended to the Queen for a pension of £100 on the Civil List Mrs. C. L. Basevi, the mother of Captain Basevi, who lost his life on the Thibet frontier of India whilst engaged in exploring the mountain passes, and pursuing other scientific inquiries.

The Earl of Zetland was on Thursday week, at York, installed as Right Worshipful Provincial Grand Master of Freemasons for the North and East Ridings of Yorkshire. After the ceremony there was a Masonic procession and a special service in the minister. In the evening there was a dinner.

The fourth general synod of the Protestant Church of Ireland was opened, in Dublin, on Thursday week, his Grace the Primate presiding. He stated that very important delicate questions would be brought before the synod, and a question on which there was great difference of opinion would be also discussed. He hoped the proceedings would be conducted in a proper manner. Petitions for the revision of the Book of Common Prayer were handed in, and three petitions against the revision were also handed in.

A movement resembling, in a modified form, the women's whisky war in America began in Dundee on Monday, when a deputation of between sixty and seventy ladies—most of them being the wives of clergymen, merchants, and leading citizens generally—waited upon the magistrates to urge the necessity of a reduction of public-houses in the burgh. They submitted a petition, signed by 8303 women of all grades. The magistrates were requested not to grant any new licenses, to withdraw those the holders of which had been convicted, to grant no transfer, and to permit no plurality of certificates in the name of one person. Four members of the deputation—Mrs. Inglis, Mrs. Parker, Mrs. Steel, and Miss Smith—addressing the magistrates, pointed to the misery the liquor traffic involved. They hoped the revenue of the country would not be regarded in any action that might be taken, and suggested that it would be better to give publicans pensions rather than allow them to continue their nefarious trade. The magistrates promised to give the statement their best attention.

SKETCHES IN PARLIAMENT.

The new part of the House of Commons is following the old section into the traditional grooves in which that assembly has been accustomed to move. For instance, it has always happened that on the first evening of meeting after the Easter recess there was a thin House, and a prevailing languor, and so it was on Monday last. A slight filip was given to attention when Lord Robert Montagu, in those loud and sonorous tones and vehement manner which mostly characterise him, gave notice that he should put a crucial interrogation to the Prime Minister in regard to his ideas of coercive policy in Ireland, basing himself on some remarks made by Mr. Disraeli in his recent electioneering speeches. Then the House, so to speak, subsided into a discussion on army organisation, originated by Major Beaumont, who, drawing in voice and languid in manner, was very sweeping in his proposals for reforms. As of course, foremost in the chorus of jeremiads which ensued was Colonel North, who passionately appealed to everything sacred to bear him out that we had no army whatsoever. The chant of pessimism was taken up by General Shute, the new member for Brighton, who intimated that he intended to be soldier-like in his observations, which resolve he carried out by adopting that bluntness of speech and demeanour which is conventionally supposed to make a man appear soldier-like; while as for his matter, it was, so to speak, regimental, and fearfully deprecatory of the condition of things military. As a proved military administrator, Sir George had a right to be oracular, but he, too, was dependent; while Major Dickson, with a voice, as it were, in mourning and a funeral aspect, creaked over our "phantom" army like a military raven. Why Mr. Butler-Johnstone should have intervened in this discussion is not very evident, except that perhaps he had recently been reading a magazine article on military organisation. At any rate, he was smart and pointed, and gave due cadence to his little epigrams. In the performance of the part of War Secretary Mr. Hardy has achieved a success. Whereas he used to be breezy, he is now cheery; and was so candid, so fair to his predecessors in his office; so well informed on points of detail, and so anxious to reduce the pessimism of the debate to the lowest point, if not to infuse into it the element of optimism, that he carried everything before him; and, what is more, carried the whole of the Army Estimates through in that one sitting, a feat that has not been executed with either of the votes for the combatant services since the régime of Lord Palmerston.

On the next evening there was a full and an animated House, called together by the expectation of witnessing a specimen of Mr. Disraeli's dexterity in getting out of a quasi-awkward position. For Lord Robert Montagu's question as to whether the Prime Minister intended to pursue the coercive policy towards Ireland of which he had spoken in such strong terms to his constituents was imminent, and the Home-Rule members were gathered in a clump on the seats below the gangway, on the Opposition side, prepared, as they proved, to support Lord Robert by their cheers, even when he was most flippant and pertinacious, and even was decreed to be disorderly. There was, however, deep silence as Lord Robert read out, with a sort of wicked emphasis, the indictment he had framed. Slowly Mr. Disraeli rose, with an expression on his face that only he can assume, which is at once grave, quizzical, and contemptuous; the combination is beyond description, and must be seen to be understood. Then, with great deliberation and a tone of voice which is curiously contrived to correspond with the expression of countenance, he proceeded to indicate, rather than to assert, that a Prime Minister was not to be held rigidly responsible for words used in a popular meeting of electors by a leader of Opposition. The rhetorical skill of the reply was in full keeping with the peculiar tone and manner; and the effect was just what was designed, for every sentence was followed by laughter—not senseless and vague, but with an admixture of sympathy and approval in it. Evidently hit hard, Lord Robert Montagu bounced, and petulantly put still more crucial questions until Mr. Newdegate's sense of justice overcame his supposed dislike to Mr. Disraeli and he indignantly appealed to the Chair to know whether this sort of disorder, which the House was loudly protesting against, was to be tolerated. The Speaker decided, like an oracle, that Lord Robert had a right to put as many questions as he liked, and that the Prime Minister was entitled to give answers solely according to his pleasure and judgment; and so ended this episode.

Since Parliament has met Mr. Bass has taken up a lodgment on the front Opposition bench; and there is no reason why he should not, for it is always empty of those ex-Ministers for whose use it is reserved. He had a good vantage ground, therefore, when he came to move his bill which would have prevented county-court Judges from imprisoning debtors for sums less than five pounds. He was very earnest and elaborate in his advocacy of his measure, though it was palpable that he was firing into cotton-bags—that is, that he was addressing a very adverse House. It was proved by Mr. Lopes that a lawyer may have some capacity for romance even when he is dealing with a legal subject, for nothing could be more assured than his attempts to show that there was no imprisonment for debt, and that, although the bodies of debtors were to be found in great numbers in gaols, the whole thing was a mere fiction, known as committal for contempt of court. Having been converted from an opponent to a supporter of the bill, of course Sir Henry James, like all converts, was more energetic and eager in his advocacy for it than even its originators. Probably Mr. Holker was insensibly influenced by a desire to give a taste of the qualities that are in him, and in a manner to justify his claims to the Solicitor-Generalship, for, though at first he was somewhat heavy, he warmed up, and even gave out flashes of dry humour, which his political friends about him made the most of by laughing with all their might. The debut of Mr. Sampson Lloyd, the new member for Plymouth, was quite a success. He was, as might have been expected, business-like and practical, and, besides, he was fluent of speech and easy of demeanour.

It seems that the Government intend to utilise their young members; at any rate, Mr. James Lowther has been allowed to deliver himself from the Treasury bench, in the same manner that he used to do as a private member below the gangway, and to display the power of sarcasm, repartee, and caustic humour, which he possesses in no ordinary degree.

It was in a speech of tremendous length, in which he said as much about what he was not going to do, and practically answered all the deputations that have waited on him, the Chancellor of the Exchequer propounded his Budget on Thursday. Having a surplus of six millions, he applied the greater part of it to reduction of debt, relief of local taxation, a penny in the pound off the income tax, and the abolition of the sugar duties and the tax on horses. He had got up his lesson with great care, and made his statement with fluency, on the whole, though he suffered some slight checks; and he obtained a fair share of applause.

PARLIAMENTARY SUMMARY.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

The House assembled on Tuesday, after the Easter recess, and had a short sitting, in the course of which the Duke of Argyll intimated that he should, on the 24th inst., make a statement with regard to the Indian famine. The Attorneys and Solicitors Bill was read the third time and passed; and a letter from Sir Garnet Wolseley, acknowledging the vote of thanks of the House to the Ashantee army, was read.

On Thursday the Duke of Richmond brought up a message from her Majesty, which was read by the Lord Chancellor. It stated that her Majesty, being desirous to confer upon Major-General Sir Garnet J. Wolseley some signal mark of her Royal favour in recognition of his eminent services in connection with the Ashantee expedition, recommended to the House of Lords to concur in enabling her Majesty to grant to Sir G. J. Wolseley the sum of £25,000. The Duke of Richmond gave notice that he would next day move that the House do take her Majesty's message into consideration.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

On reassembling last Monday, after the Easter recess, the House plunged into a debate upon Army reorganisation. The Army Estimates stood at the head of the business paper, but before going into Committee of Supply some time was occupied by a preliminary discussion occasioned by a motion made by Major Beaumont. It was to the effect that the reserves of the country should be formed of men who have been passed through the ranks of the regular army; and in support of it Major Beaumont, after discussing the German and French system of reserves, sketched out a plan, involving the abolition of the militia, by which he argued that we might maintain an army of 280,000, of whom 180,000 would be available for foreign or colonial service, with a saving of a million and a quarter. In the course of the discussion which followed, Colonel North sharply attacked Lord Cardwell's military policy, declaring that it was leaving us with no Army at all, and that the short-service system was a total failure; General Shute also condemned the short-service system as applied to the cavalry and artillery, and made some practical suggestions for the improvement of recruiting. Mr. O'Reilly argued against Major Beaumont's scheme, which he contended was utterly impracticable on our present scale of recruiting, and if adopted would be very costly. Sir H. Wilmot and Major Dickson commented on the unsatisfactory state of the recruiting; and Mr. Butler-Johnstone, who maintained that Lord Cardwell's scheme for the creation of a reserve force had failed, advocated universal compulsory service for at least a year in the militia. After some remarks from Sir G. Balfour, Mr. Campbell-Bannerman deprecated a precipitate interference with a system which at present must be described as tentative, and showed how it was premature to pronounce any opinion at present on the short-service system and its effect on the reserve force. Mr. Hardy said a few words in reply, assuring the House that the state of the recruiting was not so bad as had been represented; that the quality of the recruits, on the whole, was as good now as in recent years; and that the great mass of men in the Army were between twenty and thirty-two. As for the connection between the reserves and the militia, that was a question open for future consideration. After this Major Beaumont withdrew his motion, and the House went into Committee of Supply. The whole of the Army Estimates, amounting to £14,455,300, were agreed to without any serious opposition, and the Chairman, before half-past nine o'clock, was directed to report progress. Subsequently the Mutiny Bill, the Marine Mutiny Bill, the East India Annuity Funds Bill, the Offences Against the Person Bill, and the Infanticide Bill were read the second time; and the Loan to School Boards Bill and the Cattle Diseases (Ireland) Bill were passed.

Amongst a rather numerous batch of members who took the oaths, on Tuesday, was Mr. Bright. There was a full attendance and some animation during the preliminary business. Lord H. Lennox (First Commissioner of Works) informed Mr. Cowper-Temple that the new buildings at the National Gallery would, he hoped, be finished and opened for the reception of the public in one year from this time, and that when completed they would suffice for housing the whole national collection of pictures, including those now at the South Kensington Museum. A motion of Mr. Eyton to alter the assessment of the land tax did not obtain a second, and fell through. The second reading of the Imprisonment for Debt Bill, which would abolish committal by county courts for sums under £5, was discussed and rejected by a large majority. The Local Government Provisional Orders Bill was passed through Committee.

The first two hours and a half of Wednesday's sitting were devoted to a discussion on the motion for the second reading of Sir J. Lubbock's Ancient Monuments Bill, by which it is proposed to establish a Commission, to be called the National Monuments Commission, invested with compulsory powers to acquire certain ancient and national monuments—British, Celtic, Roman, and Saxon—named in the schedule of the bill, with a view to their preservation. It was negatived by 147 to 94. The Betting Bill, the object of which is to abolish the betting-houses now carried on with impunity in Scotland, was read the second time, as were the Married Women's Property Act Amendment Bill (which provides that the husband should be liable for debts contracted by his wife prior to her coverture to the extent only of the property derived from the wife by reason of the marriage) and the Game Birds (Ireland) Bill.

The House having, on Thursday, resolved itself into a Committee of Ways and Means,

The Chancellor of the Exchequer rose to make his annual financial statement, at five o'clock, in a very full House. He said he would not detain the House, but at once give the revenue and expenditure of the year just past. The right hon. gentleman opposite (Mr. Lowe) had last year estimated the expenditure for the past year at £75,071,000, including the whole of the Alabama claims; but the real expenditure had been £76,466,500, or an excess over the amount estimated of £1,156,000. A great part of this extra expenditure had been incurred on account of the outbreak of the Ashantee war, which reached £800,000; but he was happy to say that he believed that £70,000 or £80,000 more would cover the whole cost of the campaign. The amount voted for Army purchase had not been all absorbed, and therefore there had been a slight saving on that head. The estimated revenue had been £73,762,000, but the actual revenue had been £77,335,657, or an excess of receipts over expenditure of £3,573,657. It had been thought by many that the expectations of the late Chancellor of the Exchequer had been too sanguine, but there had been an increase in customs receipts of £736,000, in excise of £1,435,000, and in stamps of about £500,000. The main feature of the year was the increase in customs and excise, which showed that there was a large increase in the amount of spirits consumed, which showed at least that the consuming power of the people was unimpaired. He would now turn to the estimated expenditure for the year 1874-5, which would be £72,503,000, as compared with the grants made last year of £76,627,000, grants which included both the expenses of the Alabama claims and the Ashantee war. The principal items of expenditure were, interest of debt £26,700,000; Consolidated Fund charges, £1,590,000; army, £14,585,000; navy, £10,180,000; Post Office expenditure, £2,882,000; and collection of revenue, £2694, which, with other smaller sums, made up the total he had named. He now turned to the revenue which was to meet this expenditure. It had been stated by the late Prime Minister that the surplus revenue would equal £5,000,000, and upon coming into office he (the Chancellor of the Exchequer) found that those calculations had been made by the officers of the department, and were a reasonable basis for the judgment formed. That was in January, and the announcement had had an effect upon the markets which had naturally checked the consumption of certain articles. The revenue had for that reason not reached the amount anticipated at the end of March, but the result of the calculations of the officers now was that they expected as large, if not a larger, increase than that which had been calculated upon in January. The Government saw no reason why they should distrust the estimates of men so experienced as these officers; and, although they had been told, and it might be true, that there would be checks in our commercial prosperity that there had not been in the past year, still they thought the wisest course would be to take the estimates as they were presented, and found their calculations upon them. The estimates of revenue from different sources for the coming year were as follow:—Customs, £20,740,000; excise, £23,090,000; stamps, £10,880,000; land tax and house duty, £2,360,000; income tax, £5,500,000; post office, £5,300,000; telegraphs, £1,250,000; miscellaneous, £3,500,000; Crown lands, £375,000. The net result was that the estimated revenue for the ensuing year was £77,995,000, compared with an expenditure of £72,503,300—surplus, £5,492,000. In the year 1885, if we continued to go on at the same rate we have been proceeding of late years, he estimated that we shall then have reduced the National Debt to the amount of £120,000,000. The Government thought it right to apply some portion of the surplus to the redemption of the debt. They therefore proposed to create additional terminable annuities, to run out in 1885, to the amount of £440,000, and by this means to extinguish £7,000,000 of the debt in that same year. They next proposed to give their attention to the subject of local taxation. What the people now stood most in need of was an improvement in their dwellings, in their sanitary arrangements, in their education, and in the encouragement of habits of temperance and providence amongst them. These great objects could not be properly carried out without the aid of local authorities and local administration. It was necessary that a complete plan should be prepared to carry out those objects; and, as they could not expect such a plan to be framed in the present year, they felt they ought not to suspend the appropriation of the surplus until such plan was before them. They proposed that a contribution should be made from the Consolidated Fund towards the charge for lunatics. The amount estimated for this purpose was £480,000 annual expenditure. They also proposed to relieve the local expenditure for the police by one half, which would add £600,000 a year to our expenditure. It was proposed to make Government property liable to rating in proportion to its value in any particular locality. This rating would amount, as he estimated, to about £1,110,000. The Government deprecated the precipitate abolition of the income tax; but proposed to remit one penny of that tax. That would involve the loss to the revenue in the whole of £1,840,000 ultimately, or £1,540,000 in the present year. All these propositions would dispose of £2,550,000. As regarded the indirect taxation, the Government proposed to abolish the sugar duties. This would involve £2,000,000 reduction to the revenue; but he thought that the abolition of the duties would give such a stimulus to the trade of the country as in the end to counterbalance any immediate loss to the revenue. The Government proposed to reimpose the duty on plums preserved in sugar. In respect to malt, having now only about £900,000 of the surplus undisposed of, and considering the amount derived from malt as very large, they did not propose to touch that article for the present. The question of dogs' licenses, he thought, might stand over until another year for consideration. In reference to the brewers' licenses, the Government did not mean to interfere with them—at all events, for the present year. As to private brewers, they proposed to divide the penalties into two classes. With regard to the one class connected with mere inadvertence, they proposed to modify the penalties very considerably. They would allow the question of the railway passengers' tax to stand over. Out of about 2,000,000 of horses employed in this country, 864,000 were taxed. About half those horses were employed in trade. It was proposed to abolish the horse duty. That, he believed, would complete the appropriation of his surplus. A discussion then ensued, which resulted in the financial resolutions being agreed to.

A Jewish paper alleges that cremation is not unknown amongst German Jews in London, and states that the council representing the Hebrew congregations at Berlin have resolved to make immediate arrangements for the burning of bodies at one of their cemeteries in that city.

Approval is given by the Chileans to the published reply of their Foreign Minister to a note from the Argentine Confederation affecting the Magellan territory. The Chilean Government is called upon to send an adequate force to Antofagasta, with orders to march if necessary to Caracoles for the protection of Chilean citizens and foreigners generally.

Herr Rohlf, the German explorer in the Libyan desert, has written to Germany, under date "Oasis of Jupiter Ammon, Feb. 22," to say that he has found it impossible to penetrate to Kura. He had sufficient water and provender to last him more than twenty days; but, with the best feeding in the world, his camels would unquestionably have broken down in the ocean of deep and shifting sand through which he would have had to pass. He therefore prudently abandoned the project and turned to the north-west. After fifteen days' march through unbroken Sahara he reached Suah. He is somewhat disappointed at the check he has experienced; but he says "the exploration of the Libyan desert has thus been solved in a negative way: it is an ocean of sand." The first task of the expedition is thus disposed of. The second now engages Herr Rohlf and his companions. It is to ascertain if the theory of the depression of that part of Africa is correct. On a former expedition, passing from Cyrenaica to Ammonium, Herr Rohlf observed an apparent depression, and barometrical observations now instituted bear him out in what he then assumed. Herr Jordan has found the land to be actually thirty metres under the level of the sea. Herr Rohlf proposed to leave Suah on Feb. 26, and, taking his route by Nah el Beharieh, Farafrah, Dachel, Chargeh, and Eneah, to explore the western oases of the desert. He did not expect to reach Eneah before April 5.

MUSICAL PUBLICATIONS.

Several songs lately issued by Messrs. Chappell and Co. may be safely recommended to drawing-room vocalists. Three by Mr. J. L. Roedel—"Ever thine," "Lilla's Vows," and "The Angel Child"—are each characterised by agreeable and graceful melody and appropriate accompaniments, and all lie within the most moderate compass of voice. Equal praise, for similar reasons, may be accorded to Mr. Berthold Tours's song "Sunshine in the rain." Here, again, the vocal part does not extend beyond the medium range of an ordinary voice of any calibre. The name of Louisa Gray is so well known as that of a composer of successful songs that it will be sufficient to say that in "She waits for me" all her accustomed skill is shown, and, as usual, with small demands on the powers of the executant, vocal or instrumental. Like the songs previously mentioned, this will suit a voice of almost any class, the compass extending but little, and that rarely, beyond an octave. In "Sul Tramonto," "Melodia per Canto con accompagnamento di pianoforte di Filippo, Dr. Filippi," we have an effective piece in the Italian school, requiring a somewhat larger range of voice than the preceding pieces, and specially calculated for a contralto or baritone. "A Bird on the Bough" ("Zwiesung"), by Martin Müller, will suit a mezzo-soprano. It has both English and German words, and the voice part is agreeably contrasted with an animated triplet accompaniment.

Messrs. Chappell have also lately issued some instrumental music of various kinds. In his two pianoforte pieces, "Gavotte" and "Alla Pavan," Mr. Cotford Dick has successfully caught the style as well as the rhythm of those quaint dance forms which were so largely used in the instrumental works of the old composers. In "Lara, Impromptu Mélodique," Mr. George Forbes has produced a very graceful pianoforte piece, in which a pervading "cantilena" is varied by some elegant embroideries, the leading fingering being marked for the advantage of young students, by whom this impromptu may be practised with pleasure and improvement. Messrs. Chappell and Co. have also issued a second book of Mr. G. Forbes's "Original Voluntaries for the Organ or Harmonium," in which are fourteen pieces in various styles, suitable for either instrument, for church or drawing room use; and all written with the skill of a cultivated musician and the practical knowledge of a performer.

Messrs. J. B. Cramer and Co. have now published nine of the monthly parts of "The Songs of Wales," edited by Mr. John Thomas ("Pencerdd Gwalia"). Part IX. contains fifteen pieces, a few being differently harmonised versions of the same melody. Some are given as vocal solos, some as duets, and others in four-part harmony—all with a pianoforte accompaniment. Many of the fine old Welsh tunes in this work are reprinted from the collections of the late John Parry and George Thomson (now out of print), with additional melodies that have not before appeared in a vocal form. The intrinsic interest of these shilling publications should give them a wide circulation.

Messrs. Cramer and Co. have put forth a new issue of Mr. Arthur Sullivan's oratorio, "The Light of the World," containing the judicious alterations and compressions made by the composer previous to the recent performance of the work at the Royal Albert Hall. In his setting of the lines from the "Ingoldsby Legends," "There sits a bird on yonder tree," Mr. Arthur Sullivan has produced a tuneful song of the ballad kind, which an ordinary singer may make very effective by means of expression rather than of executive skill. The melody is flowing and agreeable, while being extremely simple, and the accompaniment is within the grasp of the most ordinary pianist. The voice-part scarcely extends beyond an octave, and is calculated for a mezzo-soprano. A contralto or baritone will find in the "Song of the Old Bell," by Odoardo Barri, good opportunity for characteristic expression. The melody is boldly marked and well suited to the sentiment of the text.

Messrs. Cramer and Co. have also published a vocal adaptation (by Mr. F. H. Cowen) of the popular "Galatea Waltz," composed by the Duke of Edinburgh, which is here associated with Italian words ("A me vien," &c.), by F. Mottino. Scott's lines, beginning "Love wakes and weeps," have been very pleasantly set by Mr. Frederick Clay, who has produced a capital song, with some good harmonic contrasts and a well-varied accompaniment, and free from any considerable difficulty. The voice part is restricted to the range of an octave. Signor Ardit's "Forosetta," "Vispa son, gentile," is a vocal piece in Tarentella rhythm, with words by Signor Zaffira. There is much genuine Italian impulse in this production, which has been sung in public by Madame Adelina Patti.

Besides the above-named vocal music, Messrs. Cramer and Co. have published various pianoforte pieces, among which may be mentioned some effective arrangements (brilliant without being difficult) by Mr. J. Rummel, of popular operatic subjects—"Les Défaits de Jacotte," "Le Joueur de Flûte," "Une Heure de Royauté," and "Le Pont des Soupçons." In the little pianoforte piece "Une Fête aux Champs" Mr. Rummel has produced a very characteristic reflection of the rustic dance style. "The Village Green," by Mr. Francesco Berger, is of similar character and merit, "Fille de l'Air," by the same, affording a good exercise for reiterated notes and arpeggios. Mr. Marriott's "Showers of Sunshine" contains some good passage-writing both for the right hand and for the left, the practice of which will be beneficial to young students. In his set of "Russian Quadrilles," Mr. Marriott has turned some of the melodies of that country, including the National Hymn, to the purposes of the dance. "Sympathy, Melodie," by R. F. Harvey, is an expressive little piece, somewhat in the northern style, with some fanciful embellishments of the principal theme.

Mr. Arthur Taylor has been presented by the City Library Committee with a testimonial, consisting of a handsome service of plate, in acknowledgment of his services as chairman of the committee during the past year.

A magnificent centrepiece, valued at nearly 200 gs., was presented, on Monday, to Lieutenant-Colonel Pease by the Conservative working men of Hull.—The Conservatives of Birmingham celebrated the victories which were obtained throughout the midland counties at the general election by a grand gathering at the Townhall, yesterday week—the Earl of Dartmouth in the chair.—The Conservatives of Dublin county entertained Colonel Taylor, M.P., Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, on the same day, at a dinner in the large concert-hall of the Exhibition Palace. More than 350 gentlemen sat down to dinner. Lord Belmont presided. In the course of the evening Colonel Taylor declared, as a member of the Government, that the Cabinet would avoid all sensational legislation. They would oppose Home Rule by introducing measures calculated to satisfy the Irish people.—The retirement of Mr. Dodson from the representation of East Sussex is a great source of regret to the Liberal party, and at an influential meeting called for the purpose it was resolved to present him with a testimonial, commensurate with the valuable services rendered during the time he was in Parliament.

NATIONAL SPORTS.

The racing which has taken place during the present week has not been particularly good, and needs little remark. At York Lady Glenorchy at last won a race, but she was beaten in the Zetland Stakes by Holy Friar, a promising colt by Hermit—Thursday, who is, we believe, the first Hermit that has yet run, so his success must have been particularly gratifying to Mr. Chaplin. Lily Agnes secured the Knavesmire Plate, though on the following day she suffered her first defeat, as Aragon gave her 10 lb and an easy beating for his year. If this form is correct, all the lamentations that she is not engaged in the Oaks might have been spared, for it is clear that she would have no chance against Miss Toto. A field of twelve came out for the Great Northern Handicap; but as it was won easily by Prodigal (8 st 1 lb), the less that is said of the class of the competitors the better. Matters were about the same at Warwick, where the smart Cashmere added another to her list of victories. Only five ran for the Great Warwickshire Handicap, for which the Infanta colt (7 st 13 lb.) was made a great favourite; but a course of hurdle-jumping seems to have improved Lowlander's (7 st 1 lb.) speed, and he won in a canter by six lengths. The Aldershot Divisional Steeplechases were as successful as most military meetings, and the attendance was very large; still, all true sportsmen will be very glad to get to Newmarket again next week.

Mr. Standish was, on Wednesday, presented at Lyndhurst with a testimonial, consisting of silver plate, on his resigning the mastership of the New Forest hounds. Sir Reginald Graham has undertaken to hunt the country.

The long-talked-of race for the sculling championship of England—the title to which has been in abeyance since the death of Renforth in America—took place on Thursday afternoon, over the usual course from Putney to Mortlake. Thames and Tyne were once more pitted against each other, Joseph Henry Sadler representing the former and Robert Bagnall the latter. The race admits of no description; for, though odds of 5 to 4 were freely laid on the northerner, who won the toss, he never had the remotest chance from start to finish. Sadler got away at a tremendous pace, drew his boat clear in the first hundred yards, was fully three lengths ahead at the end of the concrete walk, and shot the Surrey arch of Hammersmith Bridge, in 9 min. 20 sec. from the start, with a lead of fully twice that distance. Bagnall kept hard at work all the time, but got little way on his boat, and seemed quite incapable of spurring; so, though Sadler dropped to 28 strokes per minute and merely paddled, he passed Barnes Bridge sixteen seconds before his opponent, and won with ridiculous ease in 24 min. 5 sec. Sadler was trained by F. Symes, who thoroughly understands him; and, after such a hollow victory, he is likely to be left in undisturbed possession of his title of champion for some time.

The second spring meeting of the London A.C., which was held at Lillie-bridge last Saturday, proved an unusual success. The entries were enormous, and we never saw so large an attendance of spectators at any previous fixture of this club. They were rewarded with a capital afternoon's sport, for, though there was no individual brilliant performance, most of the running was very good, and many of the finishes proved wonderfully close and exciting.

FOOTBALL AT ST. PETERSBURG.

Some of the market-places of the Russian capital city, in the hours not devoted to trade, are the daily resort of loungers, who divert themselves with one or another game of play. This is not so likely to be seen in the Gostinnoi Dvor, or Great Market, as in those where the stalls belong to an inferior class of dealers, as in the Apraxin Rinok and the Tchukin Dvor. Here the ordinary business is in miscellaneous secondhand articles, offered for sale chiefly by Jews, whose small booths are erected in rows all over the ground, leaving narrow lanes and a few open spaces. Our Artist lately at St. Petersburg made a sketch in the Tchukin Dvor, which forms one of the illustrations we present of the habits and manners of the Russian populace in towns. These markets are of greater proportionate importance to common life, than in other European cities, which have more regular and well-stocked shops in the streets outside the market-place. Fruit, dried or fresh, flesh-meat, and frozen carcasses or joints in winter, fish cooked in oil, sausages, bread and cheese, tea, quass, vodka, and other drinks, are here sold to regale the appetites of a multitude of customers. Coats, hats, boots, and gowns, which have seen much service, perhaps, in clothing several successive owners, are displayed for the investiture of those willing to put money into such an investment. Household furniture and utensils, tools for men and toys for children, sacred images, pictures, crosses, and tokens of religious feeling, bridal crowns and other tinsel ornaments for young women, are to be found in the Apraxin Rinok. The Tchukin Dvor contains, besides a wonderful medley of Jews' odd merchandise, a large collection of live birds and pet animals. There are nearly five thousand stalls in these two markets, which are adjacent to each other.

WORK AND WAGES.

The Royal Commission of Inquiry into the operation of the labour laws has begun its sittings.

In South Staffordshire the strike has received an extension through the turning out of a large number of men at the Kingswinford collieries. They had received notice of a reduction of 6d. per day.

The strike of the colliers in Somerset has terminated in a compromise, by which the question of the proposed reduction of wages is to be referred to arbitration, the masters agreeing to continue the present rate of pay for a fortnight longer, but on the understanding that this concession is not to be taken as a precedent in the future against wages and prices going together, whether up or down.

At the Cyfarthfa Ironworks notices were posted on Saturday to the effect that from the 4th inst. contracts would cease, and that a reduction of 20 per cent in the wages rate would be enforced.

The All-England Iron-Trade Wages Committee agreed, yesterday week, at York, to a drop of 1s. per ton to puddlers and 10 per cent to millmen for three months, and that the wages in the following twelve months be regulated by the terms of the Derby proposal. Meetings were held on Monday at Stockton, Darlington, Middlesbrough, Jarrow, and other places in the north, when it was resolved to accept the proposal of a reduction of 10 per cent in wages.

At a meeting of the Motherwell malleable ironworkers connected with the Glasgow Iron Company, on Monday, it was resolved to resume work, the question of wages to be settled by the North of England rates.

In consequence of the employers of Wolverhampton having agreed to the demands of the Amalgamated Society of Brass-workers, the dispute between the employers and the employed in that town is at an end.

LAW AND POLICE.

The office of Solicitor-General having become vacant by the retirement of Sir John Karslake and the promotion of Sir Richard Bagallay, was offered to Mr. Huddleston, Q.C., and M.P. for Norwich; but the Times is authorised to state that, after due deliberation, Mr. Huddleston has declined the appointment, on the ground that he prefers the practice of the profession, with the position of an independent supporter of the Government, to undertaking the duties of official life. It is believed that Mr. Holker will be the new Solicitor-General.

The Scotsman states that Lord Jerviswoode, who recently resigned his Judicial Office of the Court of Session in favour of Lord Mure, will shortly retire from the Bench.

Mr. Joseph Faviere Elrington, Q.C., LL.D., has been appointed Queen's Advocate of the Irish High Court of Admiralty, vacated by the Right Hon. J. T. Ball.

In the matter of the Hackney election petition, an application was, on Monday, made at Judges' chambers, on behalf of the sitting members, that the petition be taken off the file on the ground that the informality alleged by the petitioners was very slight, and there was no question of general corruption. Mr. Justice Grove refused to entertain the objection; and the hearing of the petition began on Tuesday at the Hackney Townhall. On Thursday Mr. Justice Grove gave judgment, declaring the election void.

Easter Term was opened on Wednesday, when the Lord Chancellor entertained the Judges and Queen's Counsel at his residence, 5, Cromwell-houses, after which the business of the courts of equity and common law was begun in due form.

Mr. Powell, glass merchant, of Harrogate, obtained on Saturday, at the Leeds Assizes, from the North-Eastern Railway Company, £1000 damages for injuries received in a railway accident last November.

An action was brought by Miss Mary Matheson, daughter of a Glasgow merchant, at the Liverpool Assizes, on Thursday week, to recover damages for breach of promise of marriage. The defendant was Mr. Eccles Shorrocks Eccles, a cotton-broker, of Liverpool, and the damages were laid at £8000. The courtship had lasted only two months, and at the end of that time the defendant wrote to the young lady's father, breaking off the match, his reasons being that she did not take sufficient interest in his pursuits and her disregard for the game of cricket, of which he was passionately fond. The jury awarded £2000 damages.

The April Quarter Sessions of the Peace for Middlesex were opened on Monday with 90 prisoners for trial, 74 of whom are charged with felony and 16 with misdemeanour.

Englebert Charles Balister, aged twenty-nine, described as a jeweller, was tried on Tuesday for stealing, on March 23, two diamond bracelets and other articles of jewellery, of the value of about £700, from the house of Mr. Israel Cohen, of 54, Tavistock square. This was the case in which a servant girl named Moore consented to introduce the prisoner into her master's house, and then communicated with the police, who arrested him as he was leaving the house. The answer to the charge was that the girl's statement was not sufficiently corroborated. The prisoner's employers gave him an excellent character for honesty, stating that, being manufacturing jewellers, a large quantity of valuable property was constantly within his reach, but they had not on any occasion had reason to doubt his honesty. The jury, after a short deliberation, acquitted the prisoner. It was then arranged that a second indictment charging him with a robbery from the same house on March 21 should be proceeded with next sessions. Thomas Huddles, traveller for a firm of provision-dealers in Clerkenwell, pleaded guilty to a series of embezzlements. It was proved that he had retained, either wholly or partially, sums of money paid him by customers of his employers. He was sentenced to twelve months' imprisonment, with hard labour.

Margaret Annie Dellair, thirty-seven years of age, was indicted at the Surrey Sessions, last week, for having obtained money and valuable securities by false pretences, and by means of that which has been known as the Guinea Deposit Swindle. She was found guilty and sentenced to five years' penal servitude. It was stated in court that her husband is undergoing a term of this punishment for a similar offence.

Both the men accused of perjury at the trial of Arthur Orton were, yesterday week, convicted at the Central Criminal Court; and, on the intimation of Mr. Justice Brett that he should not make the charge of bigamy, if proved against Lundgren, otherwise Luie, a case for cumulative punishment, the counsel for the prosecution said he should not proceed with that part of the indictment. Strong remarks were made by the Judge in reference to the conduct of Lundgren's pretended friends, who, though withdrawing their aid, had not ceased from interference in the trial, but had practically deprived their unfortunate protégé of all defence whatever. The jury retired for twenty minutes before giving their verdict of "Guilty" in this case; but they did not leave the box when asked to decide the guilt or innocence of "Captain" Brown. The two men were placed side by side to receive sentence, which was—Lundgren to seven and Brown to five years' penal servitude. On Saturday George French was found guilty of shooting at Mary Anne Matthews, his mother-in-law, with intent to do her grievous bodily harm, and sentenced by Mr. Justice Brett to ten years' penal servitude. Collett Kelly was convicted of the charge of feloniously wounding William Henry Davis, with intent to murder him. The prisoner had entertained very strong feelings of animosity towards his brother and his wife, and for threats towards them he had been repeatedly imprisoned. The prosecutor in this case had been employed by the brother to watch his house and protect him and his wife from the prisoner's violence. He was sentenced to be kept in penal servitude for the remainder of his life.

On behalf of the late claimant to the Tichborne estates, an application was, on Monday, made to Mr. Justice Lush, at Judges' chambers, for an order on the prosecution to produce the roll of all the proceedings in the late trial, in order that it might be submitted to the defendant's counsel, who were instructed to apply for a new trial and an arrest of judgment at the opening of Easter Term. The motion was refused by the Judge.

Mr. James Hunt, a farmer, of Witney, Oxfordshire, was, on Tuesday, fined, at Guildhall, £20 and £5 5s. costs, or a month's imprisonment, for sending a quantity of diseased meat to the Metropolitan Meat-market for sale. Mr. John Farmer, of Swindon, Wilts, was also fined £20 and £3 3s. costs for a similar offence.

Mr. Webb was fined 6s. and 2s. costs at Worship street, on Tuesday, for not sending his child to an efficient school. The child was a regular attendant at a private school, which, however, was stated to be inefficient; the mistress of the school was not certificated, and the child was badly taught.—There were some prosecutions at this court for the sale of adulterated mustard, and fines of 20s. and costs were inflicted.

Mrs. Easterby, the missing prosecutrix in the money-lending case at Finchley, has reappeared, and, as a consequence, her solicitor, with a number of the Diprose fraternity, stand charged at the Mansion House with conspiring to defeat the ends of justice. Several of the prisoners were originally under trial for felony and misdemeanour, arising out of the illegal enforcement of a bill of sale. Mrs. Easterby, though bound over to prosecute, was spirited away, and, after repeated adjournments, the defendants were discharged last October. Mrs. Easterby returned to England in February, and made a full disclosure to Mr. Womerton of what the Hammonds and their accomplices had done with her in the interval. When formal evidence had been taken against them on Monday, the defendants were remanded.

At Marlborough-street Police-Sergeant Brennan, of the X Division, was finally examined, on Thursday week, on the charge of perjury which had been pending against him for several weeks, and was committed for trial, the magistrate consenting to accept bail.

On a charge of forgery, Mr. William Hennessy, secretary to the United Club and Hotel Company, has been finally examined by Mr. Knox, and committed for trial.

A charge of burglary was heard at Westminster, on Monday, in which the prisoner admitted his guilt, saying that he had watched the constable round on his beat, which he knew to be three quarters of an hour in length. He was committed for trial.

For using unjust scales two tradesmen have been fined by Mr. Bridge, the magistrate of Wandsworth Police Court. In one case, a piece of lead had been used to make a small difference against the buyer. The defendant threw the blame on his scale-maker, but a penalty of £5 with costs was inflicted.

Another batch of Islington errand-boys, porters, and shop-lads, charged with Sunday outrages on the pavement of Upper-street, came on Monday before Mr. Cooke, the Clerkewell magistrate, who, observing that the recent heavy sentences for that class of misconduct had been of good effect, fined each of these youths £3, ordering them, in default, to be imprisoned for six weeks, with hard labour.

Milk adulteration seems to be so profitable a business that its followers can afford to brave exposure and to pay fines. On Saturday Edward Itongh, a cow-keeper, of Chatham-road, Wandsworth-common, was called upon by Mr. Ingham, the magistrate, to pay a penalty of £5 and 7s. costs, for having sold milk adulterated with 35 per cent of water.

At the Hull Sessions, yesterday week, five boys belonging to the Humber training-ship were charged with attempting to set her on fire, and two of them were further charged with attempting to scuttle the ship. All the prisoners were found guilty. One was sentenced to be imprisoned for eighteen months, another for twelve months, and the others six months each, and after that they were to be sent for five years to the Stranraer Reformatory.

A Coroner's verdict of "Wilful murder" was returned at Liverpool on Saturday against Thomas Flanagan for causing the death of his aunt, Mary Flanagan.—Maria Burfett, who was sentenced to death at Devises for child murder, has had her punishment reduced to penal servitude for life.

A dinner was given to Mr. Councillor S. Cleaver, in the Masonic Hall, Leicester, on Tuesday evening, in recognition of his services for many years as secretary of the Leicester Licensed Victuallers' Association. Mr. Cleaver was presented with a gold chronometer and chain, a purse of 200 gs., and an address.

COLONEL SIR J. C. M'LEOD, K.C.B., 42ND HIGHLANDERS.

LANCE-SERGEANT M'GAW, V.C., 42ND HIGHLANDERS.

LIEUTENANT LORD GIFFORD, V.C.

This young English nobleman, who appeared the other day at the review of Sir Garnet Wolseley's little army in Windsor Park, and received from the Queen's own hand the Victoria Cross of Valour, holds a commission in the 24th Regiment of Foot, by exchange from the 83rd. Edric Frederick Gifford, Baron Gifford, of St. Leonards, in the county of Devon, is the third peer of that title. The family is related, we believe, to that of William Gifford, the eminent scholar and critic, who was the first editor of the Quarterly Review, before Lockhart and Southey. Robert Gifford, son of a Robert Gifford of Exeter, was born in 1799, and from an attorney's clerk rose to be a great lawyer, Solicitor-General and Attorney-General, and then Lord Chief Justice of the Court of Common Pleas, which high judicial place he left for that of Master of the Rolls, with a seat in the House of Lords, in 1824. By his wife, the daughter of a Devonshire country clergyman, this first Lord Gifford had six sons and three daughters. The eldest son, Robert Francis Gifford, became the second Baron Gifford on the death of his father, in 1826. He married, in 1845, a daughter of Admiral Sir Maurice Fitzhardinge Berkeley, M.P. for Gloucester, who became Lord Fitzhardinge.

LIEUTENANT LORD GIFFORD, V.C., 24TH REGIMENT.

Their eldest son, the present Lord Gifford, was born July 5, 1849, so that he is now twenty-four years of age. He was educated at Harrow. By the death of his father, in May, 1872, he succeeded to the peerage and estates. He is yet unmarried. His seat is Ampney Park, near Cirencester. The heir presumptive to the barony is his brother, Edward Robert Gifford, born in 1853.

Lord Gifford's gallant behaviour and useful service in the late campaign against the Ashantees will long be remembered to his honour. He accompanied the expedition as a volunteer. Sir Garnet appointed him leader of a party of seventy-five advance scouts or guides, who were Houssas, Opobos, Bonnymer, and other native Africans of the wildest fighting disposition. With this band of strange followers, all enthusiastically attached to their English captain, he daily sallied out of the camp, or preceded the march of the army several days, to explore the country before them. His adventurous exploits have partly been told, and our Special Artist at the General's headquarters more than once sent us illustrations of what Lord Gifford was doing. Not a little of the success of Sir Garnet Wolseley's operations is due to the early and sure knowledge he gained of the enemy's movements and those of hostile or treacherous neighbours, through the frequent communications from Lord Gifford to Colonel Buller, head of the Intelligence Department. It was, of course, a service of more than ordinary personal risk, as the advance scouts, with their daring leader, were sometimes waylaid and shot at by the foe in ambush while penetrating the dense jungle of the tropical forest. More than half the band were killed or wounded; Lord Gifford happily escaped. The reader of our Journal or of the Illustrated Narrative, "From Cape Coast to Coomassie," which we have recently published, will scarcely forget that singular incident, the encounter of Lord Gifford with an Ashantee priest or wizard, on Jan. 17, when he was the first to cross the frontier at the summit of the Adansi Hills.

SIR JOHN M'LEOD, K.C.B.

Her Majesty has conferred a knighthood upon Colonel John Chetham M'Leod, the commanding officer of the 42nd Royal Highlanders, the "Black Watch," in the Ashantee War, who further commanded, beyond the river Pra, the advanced guard of the army, composed of the company of scouts, Wood's and Russell's native regiments, Rait's Artillery, and the headquarters of the 2nd West India Regiment. He led the expeditions to Duhumassie and Borkumassie, and commanded the left attack at the battle of Amoaful, on Jan. 31, the expedition to Bequa and destruction of that place. The advanced guard in the engagement of Jarbrimba was also commanded by him, and he conducted the skirmishes and ambuscade affairs between Adwabin and the river Dah. It was Colonel M'Leod who commenced the attack at the battle of Ordahsu, with portions of Wood's and Russell's regiments, three companies of the Rifle Brigade, and one 7-pounder gun. He afterwards, with the 42nd Royal Highlanders, a gun, and rocket detachment, forced the position; and, pressing the fugitives with the Highlanders, entered Coomassie the same evening. Colonel M'Leod was then appointed commandant of the place. This gallant officer served throughout the campaign of 1854 and 1855 in the Crimea, including the battles of Alma and Balaklava and the expedition to Kertch and to Yenikale, as well as the siege and fall of Sebastopol. He obtained the medal with three clasps, and was made a Knight of the French Legion of Honour, besides getting the Turkish medal. He served through the campaign of 1857-8 against the mutineers in India, including the actions at Cawnpore on Dec. 6, 1857; at the Serai-ghaut, where he was mentioned in a despatch; at Kala-Nuddy and Shurushabad; and in the siege and fall of Lucknow. He took part there in the assault of the Martinière, that of Banks's Bungalow, and that of the Begum's Kotee, for which he was mentioned in the despatch. He was in the attack on the fort of Roohjra, in the action at Allygunge, and at the capture of Bareilly. For these services he received the medal and clasp and his brevet of Lieutenant Colonel.

The Portrait of Colonel Sir J. C. M'Leod is from a photograph by Messrs. Elliott and Fry.

SIR ARCHIBALD ALISON, BART., K.C.B.

This distinguished officer, who has been raised from the Companionship to the Knighthood of the Bath, for his services in the Ashantee War, holds the rank of Colonel in the Army, but acted as Brigadier-General during the late campaign. He is eldest son of the late Sir Archibald Alison, D.C.L., F.R.S., who held the judicial office of Sheriff at Glasgow, and was author of "The History of Europe from the French Revolution," attaining the baronetcy in 1852, as an acknowledgment of his literary toils. The historian and Scottish lawyer was, according to Sir Bernard Burke, eighteenth in direct descent from King Edward I., and a descendant also of King Robert Bruce. His wife, mother of the present Sir Archibald, was a daughter of Colonel Patrick Tytler, and is said to be descended, through the Erskines, from the royal house of Stuart and the ducal house of Lennox. The grandfather of Colonel Sir A. Alison was the Rev. Prebendary Alison, of Shropshire, author of a well-known metaphysical essay on the "Principles of Taste." The present Baronet was born in January, 1826, and entered the Army, as Ensign in the 72nd Highlanders, in 1846. He became Lieutenant in 1849; Captain, 1853; Major, 1856; Lieutenant-Colonel, 1858; and Colonel, 1867. He served, as a Captain in the Crimean War, at the siege of Sebastopol, and in the expedition to Kertch. He received two medals and a clasp and the Turkish medal for his conduct in that war. In the war of the Indian Mutiny Major Alison was Military Secretary to Field Marshal Lord Clyde, and lost his left arm at the siege of Lucknow. This incident is related by General Sir Hope Grant, in his recent narrative of "The Sepoy War." Since 1862 Sir Archibald Alison, who succeeded to the baronetcy in 1867, has held the Staff appointment of Assistant Adjutant-General, latterly at Aldershot. He married, in 1855, a daughter of the late Mr. James Black, and has two sons and four daughters. As Brigadier, serving in the late Ashantee War, under Sir Garnet Wolseley, he commanded the front column, composed of the 42nd Highlanders and some of the 23rd Welsh Fusiliers, at the battle of Amoaful, on Jan. 31. The circumstances of that action are described in our published narrative of the campaign, "From Cape Coast to Coomassie." Sir Archibald was second in command of the forces after the occasion when Colonel J. C. McNeill, C.B., V.C., was disabled by a wound at Elmina.

The Portrait of Sir Archibald Alison is from a photograph by Mr. Irvine, Prince's street, Edinburgh.

THE LATE MAJOR BAIRD.

One of the lamented deaths among the officers of Sir Garnet Wolseley's little army in the Ashantee War is that of Major William Arthur Baird, of the 42nd Highlanders. He died on board the hospital-ship Victor Emmanuel, at Sierra Leone, on the 5th ult., from a disease contracted some time ago, but complicated with other disorders, caused by the West African climate. He had also been weakened by the effects of a wound at the battle of Amoaful, on Jan. 31. Major Baird served in the Crimea from July, 1854, through the siege of Sebastopol, for which he received the medal, with clasp. He served also in the campaign of 1857 and 1858, against the mutineers in India, including the actions of Kudijunge and Shurushabad, the siege and capture of Lucknow, the attack on the fort of Roohjra, the action at Allygunge, and the capture of Bareilly, again receiving a medal, with clasp. "He was buried on shore, at Sierra Leone," says one who knew him, "on the evening of the 6th ult., with all military honours and every mark of respect that could be shown to one whose patience and fortitude, under much suffering, would alone have won admiration and regard had not the soldier-like fate of an officer, with the distressing circumstance of being far from home and his regiment, ensured the sympathy, regret, and respect of all." The London Gazette of March 31 announced that the late Major Baird would have been granted brevet promotion to the rank of Lieutenant-Colonel had he survived. He was born in 1839 a younger son of the late Sir David Baird, Bart., and brother of the present Sir David. The distinguished General of this name, an older Sir David Baird, who stormed Seringapatam in 1799, conquered the Cape of Good Hope, and fought beside Sir John Moore at Corunna, was their great-uncle.

The Portrait of Major Baird is from a photograph by Mr. A. Bassano, of Regent-street.

We have much pleasure in engraving also the portrait of a brave non-commissioned officer of the same regiment, Sergeant M'Gaw, on whom her Majesty has bestowed the decoration of the Victoria Cross, at the same time conferred upon Lord Gifford, for acts of valour performed by him in the Ashantee War. The following is the record of this distinction published in the London Gazette:—"42nd Regiment, Lance-Sergeant Samuel M'Gaw—For having, at the battle of Amoaful, Jan. 31, 1874, led his section through the bush in the most excellent manner, continuing to do so throughout the whole day, although badly wounded early in the engagement." We observed with regret that this good soldier of the "Black Watch," being still an invalid, was not able to be presented to the Queen, with Lord Gifford, at the Windsor Review.

RAISING A SUNKEN SHIP.

Our Illustration shows the method which has been successfully adopted to raise the large East Indiaman accidentally sunk in the Thames, about two miles below Gravesend, on the 17th ult. This ship was going out with a full cargo on her voyage to Bombay, and lay at anchor waiting for the tide, when she was run into by a steamer, and went down in ten minutes, but happily no lives were lost. The agents of the Salvage Association and the officers of the Thames Conservancy Board have since been taking effectual steps to lift her from the bottom, so as to save a valuable property and clear the channel for navigation. Two old naval hulks, those of the corvettes Icarus and Royalist, were lent for the purpose by the Lords of the Admiralty. Divers were employed to pass twelve chains of the largest size beneath the hull of the sunk ship. The two hulks were then placed one on each side, and were chained down at low tide by the chains that lay under the submerged hull. In consequence of this arrangement, when the tide rose, the two floating hulks rising lifted the sunk ship bodily upward. This simple operation is seen in our Engraving. When raised well off the bottom, the vessel, still upheld by her two supporters, was towed into shallow water. There, by the tide again falling, she was left dry and safe, to be lightened of her cargo, and to be repaired or refitted, as need may require.

ROYAL INSTITUTION LECTURE.

STRUCTURE AND ACTION OF THE NERVOUS SYSTEM.

Professor Rutherford, M.D., F.R.S., on Tuesday last, began a course of six lectures on the nervous system by giving a brief sketch of its general arrangement in invertebrate and vertebrate animals, and describing the essential elements—nerve-cells and nerve-fibres. The nerve-fibres, like the wires of a telegraph, are concerned in the transmission of a kind of motion from or to a nerve-cell; and the essential conducting part of every nerve appears to consist of extremely slender threads—the nerve-fibrils. These fibrils may be found running singly and uncovered amongst various tissues of the body at the peripheral terminations of some of the nerves. In the ordinary nerve-trunks the fibrils are collected into bundles, and are closed in one or two special coverings or sheaths. After describing various forms of nerve-cells, exhibited in diagrams, the Professor considered the properties which he regarded as peculiar to a nerve in its living state—excitability and electromotivity—that is, a capability of being thrown into action on the application of excitants, and a power of generating electrical currents. He then threw the image of a frog's limb, with its nerve, upon a screen, and showed that the limb remains at rest until it is excited in some way. He then applied a drop of a strong solution of common salt to the end of the nerve, which was still in connection with muscles of the limb, and showed that chemical energy can excite the nerve, and that the excitement or motion set up in the nerve travels along it and is communicated to the muscles. The nerve acts as a stimulant to the muscles and sets up a visible motion in them; but the motion set up by the stimulant in the nerve is invisible. It was also shown that electrical, mechanical, and thermal energy can also excite the nerve-fibres when applied to them directly; but that luminous and sonorous energy can only do so through the intervention of certain peculiar terminal organs in the eye and ear. The excitement of a nerve normally starts from its terminations amid the textures generally, or from the nerve-cell; in other words, the source of the excitement is either peripheral or central. The various peripheral terminal organs in connection with nerves in the eye, ear, nose, tongue, and skin were described, and it was pointed out that these are structures through whose intervention such influences as light, sound, odouriferous particles, and rapid substances affect the nerve-fibrils. These nerve-fibrils, the Professor said, do not, however, always end peripherally in special terminal organs; but throughout many textures they simply form a network, and whether the fibrils terminate in loops or in free ends has not been definitely determined.

On Friday evening next, the 24th inst., Mr. C. Watkins Merrifield, F.R.S., honorary secretary of the Institute of Naval Architects, will give a discourse on Sea Waves.

The Gazette announces that Major-General Sir Garnet Joseph Wolseley has been appointed Inspector-General of Auxiliary Forces, in succession to Lieutenant-General the Hon. Sir James Lindsay, appointed Military Secretary to the Field-Marshal Commanding-in-Chief.

In his report to her Majesty, as Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, Mr. Childers stated last September that the gross income of the duchy had, in a quarter of a century, increased from £29,000 to £59,000. The net payments to her Majesty had contemporaneously risen from £12,000 to £40,000.

Mr. Gladstone, in reply to an invitation to attend the Liberal banquet at Bodmin on Tuesday, has expressed satisfaction at such signs of energy, and he hopes of prudence, in the party which he serves and leads; but other invitations of the same kind are very numerous, extending over all parts of the country; and, though he rates the claims of Cornwall very high, he is obliged to decline the request.

FINE ARTS.

The Royal Academy is gradually introducing minor, but not unimportant, reforms. This year the "outside" contributors will be informed by letter as to whether the works they have offered for exhibition are accepted or excluded; the artists will not be required to apply to know their fate at the back door of the Academy, as heretofore. A needless humiliation will thus be spared to many, and no scene of unseemly crowding and exposure can occur, such as we have engrained a few years ago. As showing the extent to which this innovation affects the general body of artists, we may remark that as many as about 5400 works have, it is said, been offered for the ensuing exhibition—that is, 400 more than last year. Another change is made, evidently in a spirit of concession. The dado in the Great Room at Burlington House has been lowered considerably, so as probably to admit of hanging near a hundred more small pictures than last year. We regret to learn that the great picture by Mr. F. Goodall, entitled "Rachel and her Flock," intended for the forthcoming Academy exhibition, will not appear, the artist having found that he could not quite complete it to his satisfaction in time. We also hear that Mr. F. Walker's principal picture of the last year (as that of the preceding year) is not completed, in consequence, we are sorry to say, of a return of ill-health. Mr. Poynter sends but one small picture; and other members of the Academic body will exhibit more sparingly than usual.

The annual exhibition of oil paintings at Mr. M'Lean's gallery, Haymarket, comprises 131 pictures, chiefly by foreign artists. Many of the works are of choice quality, if not important examples. The following deserve, however, special mention:—"Die Kaffeestunde" (9), by the eminent German painter Knaut—an old fellow seated beside a stove sipping his coffee, very admirable for character and expression; "Brittany Sheep" (37), by Rosa Bonheur—rather heavy in effect, but otherwise excellent; Nos. 39 and 96, by Oeder; studies or sketches by A. Stevens; pictures of dogs by O. de Penne, and minor specimens of J. Dupré, C. Troyon, J. Breton, L. Yimenez, Israels, T. Sadée, W. Bouguereau, H. Merle, E. Feytaud, E. de Schampheleer, and Corot. Among the English pictures are a rather large landscape by J. Linnell, a landscape by G. Cole, and reductions by Mr. F. Goodall of his "Mater Dolorosa" and "Mater Purissima."

An Institute for the Promotion of the Fine Arts, to which are attached a museum, library, and reading room, is about to be opened to the public at Stirling. The institute has been built by the trustees under the will of the late Mr. Thomas Smith, of Glassingall, Perthshire, and Fitzroy-square, London, who left £22,000 for that purpose, as also a collection of pictures, amongst which are two works by the late John Phillip, R.A.

The collection of the engraved works of Sir Edwin Landseer, lately on view at the Gallery, 191, Piccadilly, has been removed to Mr. Graves's, Pall-mall. A new edition of the useful, chronologically-arranged catalogue, compiled by Mr. Graves, jun., is also issued.

We some time back announced the completion by Mr. Willmore of his engraving, for the Art-Union of London, after Mr. Cooke's picture of Dutch fishing-boats ashore, relieved against dark masses of cumulus clouds. This engraving is now in course of distribution to subscribers, and should prove very popular; for it is one of the distinguished engraver's best works, and, especially on account of its being executed in pure line, its production is very creditable to the management of the Art-Union. The delicacy, brilliancy, and fidelity of the plate are alike admirable.

Sir J. Noel Paton's father, Mr. Joseph Paton, a colourist of considerable repute, a zealous antiquarian, and the owner of the finest private museum in Scotland, died on Tuesday, in the seventy-eighth year of his age.

The veteran humorist and artist, Mr. George Cruikshank, who amused our fathers in their youth, some fifty or sixty years ago, with the droll creations of his teeming fancy, has just now republished a series of his designs called "Illustrations of Time." This work first appeared on the May-day of 1827, and it shows the costumes and manners of a past age, when George the Fourth was King. Coloured coats, waistcoats, and breeches or trousers were then commonly worn, as it seems, even by men of the middle class; and the women's fashions of sleeves, waists, and skirts, and of headgear, were very different from those of 1874. Some of the actions, too, which are represented here by Mr. Cruikshank, such as the scene in the prize ring and the arrival of a tardy passenger at the inn-door after the stage-coach has started, hardly belong to the present day; still less, we remark, the flogging of negro slaves in a West Indian plantation, or the imprisonment of a spendthrift man of fashion behind the lofty spiked wall of the King's Bench. But the quality of Mr. Cruikshank's fertile vein of happy invention still appears as rich as when it was first opened; and several of these comic things are conceived in his most genuine style. One of the best is that famous illustration of "Term Time," in which a smug lawyer is seen, outside Westminster Hall, handing to plaintiff and defendant each an oyster-shell, or, rather, half the bivalve, with the announcement that the Court has proved it to be "a very fine oyster." The illustrations of "Pudding Time," "Bed Time," and "Holiday Time" are kindly pictures of common family life; and we like also the little bit which bears the motto "Out, out, brief candle!" A ludicrous scene of washerwomen trying to scrub a blackamoor white is called "Time thrown away!" Nothing, however, is more effective, as a dramatic example of a moral truth, than the dying scene of Father Time, who sinks and swoons in his arm-chair, in spite of the frantic efforts and grief of his sons and daughters and servants, now reproaching and bewailing themselves, too late, for their past neglect and abuse of time. This clever artist, indeed, is a faithful moral teacher and honest social reformer. He has been allowed, we are glad to say, a large share of "Time" for his peculiar work, in which no greater genius has yet appeared. Mr. Cruikshank's "Time" has been improved to good profit for the welfare of two generations, if not three, since he began to wield the pencil and the burin or etching-needle. Indeed, we saw a very little girl, the other day, as much delighted with these amusing pictures as her grandmother might have been, at the same age of her life, when they first came out. The present edition—plain, coloured, or on Indian large paper—is published for the artist by Mr. F. Arnold, 86, Fleet-street.

On dit that the number of pictures sent in for the ensuing exhibition of the Paris salon is nearly 7000. The works of sculpture are proportionately fully as numerous.

The plans for the Walker Art-Gallery, Liverpool (so named after Mr. Walker, the late Mayor, its munificent donor), have been approved. The site is on the ground east of the Free Library and Museum, in William Brown-street; the frontage of the new building, which is to be 180 ft., will therefore be towards the large open space having St. George's Hall on the west and the large railway hotel on the east. The gallery will add one more edifice in the classic style to Liverpool, the Corinthian order having been adopted. In the centre of the principal facade there will be a portico, and sculptured embellishments will be distributed in various parts. The ground floor is to consist of two large and two smaller galleries, to be appropriated to sculpture and museum purposes. The main staircase will lead to a large upper hall, lighted from above, intended to be used as a picture gallery; out of which will open two miniature rooms and six galleries of the same dimensions as the sculpture galleries beneath, but more lofty, and having their light entirely from above.

MUSIC.

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA.

The closing performances of last week—which took place too late for earlier notice—comprised some special features. On the Friday Meyerbeer's posthumous opera, "L'Africaine," brought back Mlle. D'Angeri, as Selika, and M. Maurel, as Nelusko. It was in the same character that the lady made her début at this establishment on the opening night of last season, since when she has gained much in vocal and dramatic power, as evidenced in her subsequent performances of last year, and especially in that now referred to. In the "Slumber Song" of the second act, and still more in the following important scenes with Nelusko and Vasco, the performance of Mlle. D'Angeri was full of earnestness and feeling; her declamatory force having been still further exemplified in the fourth act, when Selika is restored to the splendour of her barbaric court. In the final scene of despair and death, beneath the poisonous influence of the manzanilla-tree, Mlle. D'Angeri also displayed much dramatic feeling.

The good phrasing and artistic style of M. Maurel were effectively apparent in the music of Nelusko, while his acting was especially successful in indicating the fierce impulse of the daring slave without the tendency to melodramatic exaggeration which the character readily admits of. Madame Sinico and Signor Nicolini were the same excellent representatives as heretofore, respectively, of Inez and Vasco di Gama, Signori Baggiolo and Capponi having again appeared as Don Pedro and the Grand Inquisitor. Signor Sabater, the new tenor spoken of last week, was efficient in the small part of Don Alvar; and other characters were, as before, filled by Signori Tagliafico, Raguer, &c.

The scenes of the seizure of the ship by savages; of the Indian Court, with its splendid pageants; and that of the manzanilla-trees, with the gloomy seashore, presented all that well-known elaborate picturesqueness which is peculiar to this theatre.

Saturday brought forward a new tenor—Signor Blume-Dorini—as Almaviva in "Il Barbiere di Siviglia." Of this gentleman's merits we must await another opportunity for judgment, as his vocal power appeared to be diminished and his execution restrained by the combined influence of nervousness and indisposition. Mlle. Marimon, as Rosina, sang with an effect beyond that of her former representations of the character at her Majesty's Opera, successful as those were. In the cavatina, "Una voce," in the duet (with Figaro), "Dunque io son," and in the waltz-aria introduced in the lesson-scene, Mlle. Marimon proved herself a brilliant executive artist, the last-named piece, with its elaborate bravura passages, having been enthusiastically encored. Signor Cotogni's Figaro and Signor Ciampi's Bartolo were the same meritorious performances as heretofore.

On Monday Mlle. D'Angeri again appeared and gave fresh proof of progress by her powerful performance as Leonora in "La Favorita," the small part of Inez having brought forward Mlle. Cottino, a young débutante, who was favourably received. As heretofore, the capital acting and singing of Signori Nicolini and Cotogni, respectively as Fernando and Alfonso, were important features in the representation of the opera.

On Tuesday "Il Barbiere" was repeated, with the same cast as that noticed above, except that Signor Bettini replaced the new tenor as Almaviva.

For Thursday "Guglielmo Tell" was announced, with the début of Signor Bolis as Arnoldo; on Friday "Les Huguenots" was to be given; and to night (Saturday) Mlle. Smeroschi is to return, in the character of Adina in "L'Elisir d'Amore."

Signor Vianesi has hitherto conducted all the performances.

HER MAJESTY'S OPERA.

Two of the four performances of last week remain for present comment—those of Thursday and Saturday. On the occasion first named, Signor Ramini, a new tenor, made his début as Lionello, in Flotow's "Marta," and obtained a deserved success. This gentleman's voice is of light and agreeable quality, his intonation and phrasing are good, and he has the merit (now a rare one) of avoiding excessive use of the "tremolo," which bids fair to supersede the genuine cantabile style. Signor Ramini's delivery of the aria "M'appari" was in excellent taste, and produced so strong an impression that it was encored with enthusiasm.

Mlle. Alwina Valleria, as Lady Enrichetta, sang with much brightness of voice and fluency of execution. Although some of her florid embellishments were a little too ambitious, much of her bravura singing was brilliant and effective, while her unaffected delivery of the romanza "Qui solo vergin" ("The Last Rose of Summer") drew down applause that was only silenced by a repetition of the second verse. Madame Trebelli-Bettini, as Nancy, sang with the same charm of voice and style as on many previous occasions; and Signor Catalani—whose capital singing as Don Pizarro, in "Fidelio," was recently noticed—has taken another step in advance by his performance as Plumketto, the song in praise of beer having been greatly applauded and encored.

"Saturday's performance of "La Favorita" included the début of Signor de Reschi as Alfonso. This new baritone singer has a voice of beautiful and even quality, with an exceptionally high range (reaching to G); he phrases well, especially in cantabile passages; and adds to his vocal qualifications the possession of a good stage presence. Although, we believe, somewhat under the influence of indisposition, he obtained a more than ordinary success, having been encored in the closing movement of his aria in the first act, and greatly applauded in several other instances.

As Baldassare, Signor Giulio Perkins made his first appearance here, and displayed a bass voice of much weight and power. The cast of the opera included the Leonora of Mlle. Titiens, the Fernando of Signor Naudin, and other well-known features.

On Monday "Semiramide" was repeated, and Signor Agnesi resumed the character of Assur, after an absence caused by illness.

On Tuesday "Rigoletto" was given again; with the substitution of Mlle. Risarelli for Mlle. Lodi as Gilda, the last-named lady having been compelled to return to Italy in consequence of severe illness caused by the influence of our climate. Mlle. Risarelli made a genuine impression by her bright vocalisation in the duet with her father, that with her lover, and her aria "Caro nome," in the first act; and by her impassioned earnestness in the subsequent great scene with Rigoletto in the Duke's palace. She was much and deservedly applauded in each instance. The cast of the opera was otherwise the same as before. Sir Michael Costa conducted the performances referred to.

On Thursday "Fidelio" was to be repeated; and for to-night (Saturday), "Les Huguenots" is promised.

The second season of the British Orchestral Society terminated last week with the sixth concert of the series, the occasion having been rendered special by the attendance of the Duke of Edinburgh, who is president of the society. The programme included a MS. orchestral scherzo in A minor, the first instalment of a new symphony, by Sir Julius Benedict, which it is to be hoped may soon be forthcoming in its entirety, when we shall doubtless have a work of such merit and importance as to render it a worthy successor to the composer's symphony in G minor, of which we spoke in November last. The movement now referred to is full of animation and brightness, and was received with great applause and a call for Sir J. Benedict, who came forward in acknowledgment. A quasi-novelty at the concert was a characteristic fantasia, for orchestra, by the Russian composer Glinka, founded on national airs—a piece of lively and pleasing character. The English public may soon know more of Glinka should Mr. Gye produce his most celebrated opera, "La Vie pour le Czar," during the present season of the Royal Italian Opera, of which there is a strong probability. The other instrumental pieces at the concert referred to were Beethoven's "Pastoral Symphony," Cherubini's overture to "Anacreon," that by Mr. J. F. Barnett to "The Winter's Tale," and Mr. Sullivan's "Overture di Ballo." Mr. Walter Bach gave an artistic performance of Schumann's pianoforte concerto, and vocal pieces were sung by Madame Lemmens-Sherrington and Mr. Santley.

The last concert but two of the eighteenth season of Saturday afternoon performances at the Crystal Palace took place last week, when the programme was one of solid interest, although devoid of novelty. Mendelssohn's first (published) symphony in C minor—one of the many proofs of his precocious genius, having been produced in his sixteenth year—the overture from the series of three symphonic movements by Schumann, classed as op. 52, and that to Berlioz's opera, "Benvenuto Cellini," were the orchestral pieces. Beethoven's triple concerto for pianoforte, violin, and violoncello, was finely played by Mr. Charles Hallé, Madame Norman-Néruda, and Signor Piatti; and vocal pieces were contributed by Madame and Herr Noriny and the Swedish Ladies' Quartet. At the concert of to-day (Saturday) a new pianoforte concerto by Herr Grieg is to be played, for the first time in England, by Mr. Dannreuther.

The forty-second season of the Sacred Harmonic Society is near its close. Handel's "Judas Maccabæus" was given yesterday (Friday) week, when the principal vocalists were Madame Sinico, Mrs. Suter, Miss Julia Elton, Mr. Vernon Rigby, Mr. M. Smith, and Mr. Santley. The next concert, and last of the series, will take place on May 1, when Sir Michael Costa's "Naaman" will be performed.

This (Saturday) afternoon the first New Philharmonic concert of the twenty-third season is to be given at St. James's Hall, three more afternoon performances being announced in alternation with four evening concerts, the first of which will take place next Wednesday. Some important new works, besides many known classical compositions, are promised during the series—among others, Joachim Raff's third symphony, entitled "Im Walde;" an orchestral "suite" by Lechner; an overture, "Otto, der Schütz," by Rudorff; Carl Reinecke's "Friedens-Overture;" a concert-overture composed expressly for these concerts by Gustav Erlanger, and that produced by Julius Rietz at the Lower Rhine Festival of 1839.

The second concert of the sixty-second season of the Philharmonic Society takes place on Monday next.

That excellent institution the Royal Society of Musicians will celebrate its 136th anniversary festival at Willis's Rooms on April 7, under the presidency of the Prince of Wales. The occasion is expected to attract a large attendance, by which, it is to be hoped, substantial addition will be made to the means of a society which conveys such valuable aid to its distressed members, their widows and orphans. The dinner having been postponed from last year, at his Royal Highness's request, the committee are naturally anxious to raise at least double the amount to make up the loss in the income of the society. There are at present sixty-nine claimants entirely supported by the funds of the institution.

At a recent general meeting of the Amateur Orchestral Society, under the presidency of the Duke of Edinburgh, a complete set of Beethoven's works was presented to his Royal Highness by the members of the orchestra, together with an expression of their congratulations upon his marriage with her Imperial Highness the Grand Duchess Marie. His Royal Highness accepted the present, and thanked the members for their valuable and useful gift, which he highly prized.

On the subject of the National Music Meetings at the Crystal Palace, the secretary of that institution has addressed a letter to the daily press in which he says:—"In the interests of the movement embodied in this undertaking, Mr. Willert Beale has advised the directors of the Crystal Palace that the competitions in June next be deferred. Many of the competing choirs have failed to comply with rule 12, according to which their approximate strength should be already declared. They would therefore have been disqualified, although now actively employed in preparation. This, together with the practical difficulty of carrying out two such undertakings as the Handel Festival and the National Music Meetings during the same week, has induced the directors to adopt the course recommended by Mr. Beale. . . . The National Music Meetings will be resumed during the summer of 1875 in their integrity, including the solo and other classes originally opened. The music to be prepared for performance in competition in 1875 will be the same as that selected for the series now postponed. The rules and lists for the meetings in 1875 can be had on application at the Crystal Palace."

Mlle. Marie Belval, daughter of the eminent French basso, M. Belval, has recently attracted much attention by her singing at the Paris Théâtre Italien. This young lady is a première prix of the Conservatoire, and her vocal merits and accomplishments have led to her engagement for the opening season of the new French Opera.

EASTER ENTERTAINMENTS.

We have already noticed the leading features of these productions. We now add a further account of certain miscellaneous exhibitions likely to amuse the holiday sightseer.

POLYTECHNIC.

The programme of this institution is varied and abundant, and includes more than one novelty of more than ordinary significance. Professor E. V. Gardner delivers an important lecture on gas, particularly in relation to its economical use. The lecture comprised remarks on artificial light-producers, on Lowe's apparatus, and on Mr. Seeger's patent carburetter; and the experimental portion of it was highly interesting. We are likewise indebted to Professor Gardner for some information concerning sugar, of which it is well for the public to take note. The Professor treats of the physiology of the sugar-cane and of sugar countries, also of a sugar farm in Jamaica and the native methods of cultivation and manufacture. However, it is impossible to enter into details, which, after all, cannot be fully understood without reference to the experiments and illustrations by which the lecture is copiously elucidated. As to Mr. King's lecture on Acoustic Science, we have reason to be enchanted by the abundance of wonders which he produces in support of his syllabus and the connection which he proves to exist between the phenomena of light and sound. How sound is propagated is one of the most interesting inquiries in the lecture. Apropos of the time, a lecture entertainment, by Mr. B. J. Malden, entitled "The Latest News from Ashantee," gives us many new particulars. The Queer Dream of Sir Walter Raleigh continues to be popular.

EGYPTIAN HALL.

The conjurers of the present day endeavour to do good service to science and philosophy by the exposure of superstitious practices which the so-called spiritualists, who are in reality victims of the grossest materialism, push to an extreme which borders on the absurd. Dr. Lynn at the Egyptian Hall exhibits his mysteries, which, after a fashion, "confound the very faculties of eyes and ears," and sometimes transcend imaginative expectation altogether. It is our ignorance of the cause of the effects produced which creates the wonder; were the arcana revealed we should cease to admire, and most inconveniently anticipate, the results which now stimulate surprise. The marvels of his magic box would no longer astound the apprehension if we once knew how they were done. Dr. Lynn appears, too, to have an instinctive power of understanding all languages. From Hebrew to English, and in all the intermediate lingual stages, he can interpret all learned sentences which the best instructed among his audience are capable of inventing. He has also the power of producing a written paper on which shall be inscribed our secret thought of the moment. But Dr. Lynn is not the only wonder-worker of the Egyptian Hall. Messrs. Maskelyne and Cooke share the honours with him, and now enter on their second year. These gentlemen aim directly at exposing spiritualist illusions, and succeed to an unprecedented extent. We are not quite sure that their success is not too great; for their experiments always succeed, which is far from being the case with the illusionists whom they would expose. It may be urged that this is the exact difference between vital and mechanical processes. We give the spiritualists the benefit of the doubt; but there are so many rational grounds of suspicion in the record of their doings, that we dare not assert anything of their manifestations with certainty.

THE MOHAWK MINSTRELS.

The success of the Moore and Burgess Minstrels naturally excites competition; and the troupe of coloured minstrels above named, under the management of Mr. Thomas, make their appeal to the public at Berners Hall, where they have performed for more than 160 consecutive nights. The room on our visit was crowded. Among those who appeared to be the most popular we may name Messrs. Francis, H. Hunter, Vernon, Sinclair, Oliver, Eustace, and Little Henry.

WOMEN GRINDING CORN.

The ancient and primitive task of reducing cereal grain to flour, with a simple handmill, has in many different ages and countries, during several thousand years of human history, been performed in the same manner by the industrious house-keeping sex. "Two women shall be grinding in one mill." It is so in Bengal, where at this moment, we are sorry to know, they and their families are suffering from the want of corn or rice to be ground for their daily food. It is not long since we gave an illustration of two Fantee women, on the Gold Coast, engaged in the same domestic work. Dr. Livingstone's last letter, published a few days ago, describes the women of the Manyema nation, west of Lake Tanganyika, as using a mill of two stones in this way. Instances might be found, we believe, in almost every part of the world, where the climate and soil permit the cultivation of any kind of grain. The most ancient Egyptian, Assyrian, Chinese, and Indian sculptures bear record of this useful institution. We cannot, therefore, be surprised to find it still extant in Ireland, which a learned lady contends to be the true original "Ur of the Chaldees." The essay referred to is "Ireland, Ur of the Chaldees," by Anna Wilkes (published by Tribner and Co.). Leaving that question to her and other students of remote antiquity, we have only to speak of the quern, or hand-mill, used by Irishwomen of the peasant class to this day. When they want to make a dish of "croudie," or "prapeen," as they call it in Cork, which is merely a stirabout of raw meal and milk, this machine is put in action.

It consists of an upper and an under stone. The upper stone is about twenty-two inches in diameter, and its under surface is considerably concave. The under stone is about an inch narrower, and is convex, so that the two surfaces may coincide, and afford an easy descent for the meal when ground. In the centre of the upper stone is a circular hole, nearly three inches in diameter. Across this stone is set a piece of wood, having a hole in its centre about half an inch deep and the same in width, by means of which the upper stone rests in poise upon a strong peg or pivot in the centre of the lower stone. By the adjustment of little pieces of leather fitted into the hole, in the bar above mentioned, the upper stone can be raised or depressed, so as to make the friction greater or less, as the meal is meant to be coarser or finer. There is an upright handle ten inches long, set firmly in the upper stone, about two inches from the edge. This is the whole machine fitted for work. The corn is generally dried in an iron pot over a slow fire, and kept constantly stirred to prevent its burning. When it arrives at a certain degree of crispness it is taken out to be ground. Two women generally work the quern, one sitting facing the other, so that they have the quern between them. Each in her turn takes hold of the handle, or sometimes both take hold when occasion requires. The two women can grind about ten pounds of clean meal in an hour. Among the Irish the hand mill is called clough vrone, or "the stone of sorrow." We remark that the verb vrone signifies "to grind," and clough is the Irish for stone. The compound clough vrone should literally signify "a grinding stone." But perhaps the Irish word vrone, for sorrow, has a metaphorical derivation, like the Latin and English word "tribulation," which means just the same. The corn is never shelled before grinding, but the grain and husk are ground together. When ground, the meal is sifted to separate the husk from the part to be used for food. The ordinary way of using is to mix the meal in its raw state with milk and make it into the consistency of stirabout. This mixture is eaten without any accompaniment.

Her Majesty has approved of the West Essex Yeomanry being called the Essex Regiment of Yeomanry Cavalry.

WRECK OF THE STEAM-SHIP QUEEN ELIZABETH AT CALAPARRA, NEAR GIBRALTAR.

THE NEW RHINOCEROS IN THE GARDENS OF THE ZOOLOGICAL SOCIETY.

WRECK IN GIBRALTAR BAY.

The screw-steamer Queen Elizabeth, of Glasgow, on her voyage home from Calcutta, was wrecked on the night of Thursday, March 12, at Calaparra, seven miles from Cabrita Point, the western headland of Gibraltar Bay. She had seventy persons on board, crew and passengers, with a valuable cargo of indigo, raw silk, jute, tea, shellac, and other Indian produce. Her course had been through the Red Sea, the Suez Canal, and the Mediterranean. It is supposed that the look-out man had mistaken the shore lights. About nine o'clock in the evening the ship ran upon a ridge of shingle, 400 yards from shore, with deep water between it and the beach. Her broadside was exposed to a heavy rolling sea. The fires were soon quenched by the water that filled the ship, and all the people were driven on deck. The life-boat alone could be used; it made three trips to shore and landed twenty-five persons in safety. But in the fourth trip, being overcrowded by sailors jumping in, the life-boat was upset. Twenty-three persons were drowned; amongst them were the Rev. Mr. Allardye, his wife and four children, Mrs. Suckling, the purser, the surgeon, and the chief officer of the ship, with three Spanish sailors, who had come off from shore to help the shipwrecked English. Of these twenty-five now remained. They had a line connecting the ship with the shore. It was not till the middle of the next day, the 13th, that the British Consul at Algeiras, Colonel Gordon, C.B. (late of the 75th Regiment), heard of the disaster. He then hastened to the place, sent to Gibraltar for the rocket apparatus, and set men to make a raft of the wooden planks, oars, and cork bolsters that were washed ashore from the wreck. By this raft four men were got ashore, but the connection line was lost, and nothing more could be done for some hours. On the next day (Saturday, the 14th), after much accidental delay, the rocket apparatus of the Control Department at Gibraltar was sent off to the place where its aid was so badly wanted. It did not get there till half past six in the morning of Sunday, the 15th, by a toilsome and difficult night march, with sixteen laden mules, over the rocks and watercourses of the beach. The expedition was commanded by Major Anley, R.A., with Assistant Commissaries Dunstan and Berthon in charge of the apparatus. It was assisted by forty men of the Royal Artillery, under Lieutenant Yorke, R.A. By means of the rocket a rope was passed to and fro, with four or five persons each time, until all were landed, including the stewardess and two ayahs, or Hindoo nurses. Fires were lighted, food and coffee were prepared, and dry clothes were given to the poor starved and chilled people, under a shelter made of blankets in a nook of the cliffs. They were afterwards taken to Gibraltar, and everything was done for their relief. Some attempts have since been made to recover part of the ship's cargo.

THE ZOOLOGICAL SOCIETY

The Zoological Society have lately made an important addition to their living collection in the Regent's Park, in the shape of a new rhinoceros, belonging to the species called by naturalists the Soudanic or Javan rhinoceros. In general appearance this animal, a figure of which we now give, nearly resembles the large Indian rhinoceros, or Rhinoceros unicornis of Linnaeus, and, like the latter, has but one horn on its nose. It is, however, readily distinguishable by its smaller size, its long prehensile upper lip, and the different arrangement of the folds of the strong heavy skin which covers the back. The present specimen, which is believed to be the only individual of the species ever brought alive to Europe, was for some time kept in captivity in some tea-gardens at Batavia, in Java. Having been purchased by the agents of some well-known dealers in animals, it was conveyed to this country, and ultimately transferred to the Zoological Society for the sum of £800. The Javan rhinoceros is of the male sex, and, though certainly by no means adult, is believed to have acquired nearly its full stature. It is lodged with its brethren and sisters of the same genus in the elephant-house in the middle garden. There is, we believe, no specimen of this rhinoceros in the British Museum.

The Zoological Society have devoted a large sum of money lately bequeathed to their institution to providing a series of lectures, on Tuesday and Friday evening in summer, in the room where Mr. Wolf's beautiful coloured drawings are, up stairs next to the serpent-house. The first lecture was given last Tuesday, by Dr. P. L. Sclater, F.R.S., the able and accomplished secretary to the Zoological Society. He described, rather in the way of a classified catalogue, the collections of vertebrate animals in these gardens. In succeeding lectures he will give a scientific and popular description of the mammals and birds, and probably also the reptiles, amphibians, and fishes. Dr. Garrod and Dr. W. B. Carpenter will lecture in May; the latter will treat of the invertebrate animals, more particularly those in the aquarium. Dr. Sclater gave some interesting statistics of feeding the many hundreds of animals under the society's care. He also described the chief foreign zoological collections—that of the Jardin des Plantes at Paris, and those of Antwerp, Brussels, Amsterdam, Rotterdam, Berlin, Cologne, Hamburg, America, and Australia. We are glad to hear that the London Zoological Society intend to build a new and commodious house for the "large cats," the lions, tigers, and leopards.

DR. BEKE'S MOUNT SINAI.

Our readers are probably aware that some controversy has taken place regarding the correctness of the positions generally attributed to Mount Sinai and the other holy places connected with the history of the exodus of the Israelites. It has been commonly believed that the children of Israel crossed the Gulf of Suez in their flight from Egypt, and that the mountain on which the Law was delivered to Moses is one of the peaks of the mountain mass situated within the peninsula between that gulf and the Gulf of Akaba. Yet the well-known traveller in Abyssinia and the Holy Land, Dr. Beke, has long denied the correctness of such conclusions. Paradoxical as his view may appear, it is based on an argument briefly stated. We are told in Scripture that when "Moses fled from the face of Pharaoh" (Exodus ii. 15) he "dwelt in the land of Midian." Now, as every reader of the Bible knows, the land of Midian forms part of the "east country"—that is to say, the country situate to the east of the Jordan. Hence, argues Dr. Beke, it is a fundamental error to place Midian, the "east country" into which Moses fled, anywhere west of the Jordan, and, yet more, within the peninsula situated far away to the south of the "south country." Again, we read that in their exodus the Children of Israel crossed the Yam Suph, or "Red Sea." But we also read that five centuries later Solomon, King of Israel, and Hiram, King of Tyre, sent a fleet to Ophir by way of the Yam Suph, or "Red Sea in the land of Edom" (1 Kings ix. 26), which is well known to be the Gulf of Akaba; and Dr. Beke contends that this Yam Suph or Red Sea was the same in both cases, and that consequently it was the Gulf of Akaba and not the Gulf of Suez that was crossed by the Israelites; the latter gulf having been as unknown to Moses as it was to Solomon and Hiram.

From these and various other considerations, which would occupy too much time to dwell on here, Dr. Beke came to the conclusion in his work "Origines Biblicæ," published in the year 1834, that Mount Sinai must be situated to the east of the meridian of the Gulf of Akaba and valley of the Jordan, and not to the west of it, where it has universally been placed.

During the forty years that have elapsed since these views were enunciated, the author has only become more firmly attached to them; and towards the end of last year he undertook a journey, in which he was accompanied by Mr. John Milne, F.G.S., into the country lying to the east of the head of the Gulf of Akaba, where he felt firmly convinced he would find the true Mount Sinai. He has found what he considers to answer his expectation. In the evening of Jan. 30 the travellers encamped at the foot of Mount Baghir, one of the loftiest peaks of the mountain-range between the Wady-el-Arabah, the broad valley-plain extending from the head of the Gulf of Akaba to the Dead Sea, on the west, and the Wady-el-Ittem, along which passes the road to Petra, on the east; which mountain is called Jebel el Nur, or the "Mountain of Light," as Dr. Beke thinks, because of the light which appeared on its summit and served as a guide to the Children of Israel in their flight from Mizraim (Egypt).

On the following morning, Mr. Milne ascended this newly-discovered Mount Sinai, which has an elevation of about 5000 ft., and on the summit he found numerous horns and skulls of sheep, with a few bones, it being the custom of the Bedouins, and also of occasional pilgrims, even from a great distance, to come here to perform their devotions, and to offer sacrifice. One of the most noted of these pilgrims is the famous Mohammedan saint, Sidi Ali ibn Aleim, whose tomb and mosque are at El Haram, near Jaffa. Half-way up the mountain the traveller came to a pile of four large boulders of granite, the material of the mountain, three of them standing up facing the north, and one at the back of the others facing the south, and on all of them are engraved inscriptions, which he copied. The stones, which are much weather-worn, are externally of a dark brown colour, against which the inscriptions make themselves visible from their being of a somewhat lighter colour. The lines of these "Sinaitic inscriptions" are about three quarters of an inch broad, and very shallow, being not more than an eighth of an inch deep. The incised figures are very rude: they can hardly be phonetic, neither is it easy to say what they are intended to represent. By a communication from Dr. Beke, we are enabled to give facsimiles of the copies made of these curious inscriptions. We also present two views of Dr. Beke's Mount Sinai, from sketches by Mr. Milne; the one being taken from the south, at the junction of Wady Amran with Wady-el-Ittem, near the foot of the mountain, in proximity to which junction is a large stone, covered on two sides with an inscription in the Coptic or ancient Arabic character. The other view was taken at a greater distance from the south-west, on the opposite shore of the Gulf of Akaba, or Red Sea, beyond the Jesirat Fira'on, or "Pharaoh's Island." This is a barren rock, with a strongly-fortified Saracenic castle, now in ruins, occupying its entire summit; on which island the dead body of the oppressor of the Children of Israel is said to have been cast ashore after he and his host were drowned in the Red Sea.

The correctness of Dr. Beke's topographical theory must be left to the judgment of scholars. It is stoutly opposed by Major C. W. Wilson and Major H. S. Palmer, the two officers of the Royal Engineers who conducted the ordnance survey of the peninsula between Suez and Akaba; and by the Rev. F. W. Holland, author of some laborious and learned investigations upon this subject. We are not prepared on this occasion to discuss the matter; but our illustrations may be serviceable to those disposed to examine it for themselves.

The school board at Bradford is erecting a series of eight schools, and the first of these was opened on Monday, but without any ceremony. It will accommodate 500 scholars, and has cost £14,000.

KING OF THE SANDWICH ISLANDS.

The island kingdom of Hawaii, commonly called the Sandwich Islands, in the middle of the North Pacific, with its Christian and civilised native population and its Constitutional Government, has been more than once described in our Journal. A portrait of the late reigning Monarch, William Charles Lunalilo, who succeeded Kamehameha V. in December, 1872, was engraved for our pages; and we also gave one of the Dowager Queen Emma, widow of Kamehameha IV., when that lady came to England.

His late Majesty, King Lunalilo, who died on Feb. 3 this year, was thirty-nine years of age. He was the son of Charles Kanaina and of a lady named Kekaulohi, belonging to the Royal Hawaiian family. On the death of Kamehameha V., leaving no heir to the throne, Lunalilo was elected King. His character was generous and amiable, and his mental abilities were quite equal to those of an average European. He had received a fair English education, and showed a certain degree of literary talent, with a taste for reading our best poets. The accomplishments and virtues of this Hawaiian Prince were, unhappily, marred by the habit of indulgence in spirituous liquors. The early end of his career, by an attack of consumption, is due to that unfortunate cause. His short reign has been characterised by a desire to follow the advice of trustworthy and judicious Ministers; and he has bequeathed most of his property, reserving a life interest for his aged father, to the endowment of an hospital for the sick and infirm poor.

His successor, elected by the Hawaiian Legislative Assembly on Feb. 12, is King David Kalakaua, son of the late Hon. C. Kapaakea and the High Chieftainess Keohokale, both of kin to the ancient royal family. Kalakaua, who is in the thirty-eighth year of his age, was educated, with his brother and sisters, at the English school of Mr. and Mrs. Cooke, and is said to speak and write our language as well as his own. He is an accomplished musician; and his sister, the wife of Governor Dominis, composed both words and music of the Hawaiian National Hymn. The new King has been employed as clerk in the Government offices, and as Secretary to the Privy Council; he has also sat in the Legislative Assembly. His wife is Queen Kapiolani, widow of the late Hon. B. Namakaha, who was uncle to the Queen Dowager Emma.

The election of Kalakaua was vehemently opposed by a faction, who wanted Emma to be made the reigning Sovereign. A formidable mob of rioters assailed the Legislative Assembly, beat and wounded several members, and destroyed the furniture of the building. The Hawaiian Government was obliged to ask the British Consul, Major J. H. Wodehouse, and Mr. H. A. Pierce, the American Minister resident, for the aid of sailors and marines from the ships—H.M.S. Tenedos and the United States vessels the Benicia, Tuscarora, and Portsmouth—lying in the harbour of Honolulu. By their assistance the riot was soon quelled, without loss of life; and it is hoped that King Kalakaua may have a long, peaceful, and prosperous reign. His younger brother, Prince Leleiohoku, is acknowledged heir presumptive, as the King, though married twelve years since, has no children.

The funeral of King Lunalilo, which took place on Feb. 23, is the subject of a sketch by Sub-Lieutenant H. J. Morgan, of H.M.S. Tenedos, which we have engraved. The body had lain in state at the Iolani Palace. On the day of the funeral the King and Queen, Prince Leleiohoku, Queen Emma, and the chief Ministers, nobles, courtiers, and representatives of foreign nations, were seated around the coffin. This was adorned with silver plates of heraldic and significant designs, bearing the name of the deceased, the dates of his birth and death, and the motto, in his native language, "Righteousness is the life of the land." On the rich black velvet pall lay the crown, hat, and sword of the late King. The choir of Kawahiaha, led by Mr. Atkinson, chanted an opening anthem. This was followed by reading of Scripture and prayer. The Rev. H. H. Parker delivered a sermon or address in Hawaiian, urging with pathetic force the universal topics of religious consolation and admonition.

After the singing of another hymn, the coffin was carried out by twelve stalwart native pall-bearers, down the steps to the hearse, which was in waiting. The hearse, or more properly funeral-car, which was constructed for the occasion, and surmounted with a crown draped with crape, was drawn by four horses, also draped, and in charge of Mr. C. E. Williams. A little in advance of it were ranged the kahili bearers, seventy-two in number, each bearing one of these ancient gaudy emblems of Royalty. These kahilis are all made of feathers, and in size vary from four to six feet in length and twelve to twenty inches in diameter; they include almost every colour, black, white, red, crimson, purple, green, blue, and variegated shades. Some were made from the feathers of peacocks, tropical birds and parrots; others from feathers brought from the guano islands; but the finest were made of the small bright red and yellow feathers of the rare mountain birds of Hawaii. It was a fine sight to see these brilliant plumes borne on lofty poles, and swaying in the breeze, as the procession marched through the streets. Meanwhile, the British and American ships of war above mentioned sent 400 sailors and marines ashore, to do honour to the Royal funeral. The Freemasons, Odd Fellows, Good Templars, and other lodges joined in the procession. It included the King and Queen, Queen Emma, Prince Leleiohoku, Prince Kanaina, and others of the Royal family; the Bishops and clergy, both of the Protestant and the Roman Catholic Church; the Ministers of State, the Governors of islands and towns, the Judges, the members of the Assembly and other official persons. Having arrived at the Royal mausoleum, a small Gothic building of stone, in Nuuanu Valley, the coffin was there deposited in a vault, while the band played a musical dirge; a hymn was sung, and a prayer was offered, which closed the proceedings. The British Royal Marines and seamen of the Tenedos, with those of the American ships Benicia, Tuscarora, and Portsmouth, formed a guard of honour, and fired a salute before leaving the tomb.

A new exchange was opened at Barrow-in-Furness on Monday. About 150 persons, representing the principal firms in North Lancashire and Cumberland, attended, for whose convenience a special train was provided on the Furness Railway. The ceremony was performed, at one o'clock, by Mr. J. T. Smith, Mayor of Barrow, who delivered an appropriate speech.

THE LONDON CO-OPERATIVE WINE ASSOCIATION

(Limited). Stores, 445, Strand, W.C. (Immediately opposite Charing-cross; 3rd station). Annual Ticket, 5s.
The object of the Association at starting was to supply Wines of every class at rates which should only exceed wholesale prices by the actual cost of distribution. An experience of six months (to April 13) has placed the Association in the position, a regard to business done, of a firm of the first class, and the sales continue rapidly to increase. The management is in the hands of a gentleman who retired from partnership in an old-established firm of wine merchants in order to undertake his present post, a man who bestows the same attention upon the tastes of purchasers as can be done in a private business.

Prices are quoted upon the basis of a reduction of 15 per cent. or 2s. in the pound 1 from the merchant's price of wine.
In order to ensure that the Association is bona fide co-operative, and that its members obtain the benefits of participating in profits, a further discount will be given at the year's end, should the transactions of the Association justify such a dividend.

Sherries in Wood and Bottle. These are supplied to the Association by the leading wholesale houses, so that access to the largest stocks and cellars is obtained. Ticket-holders command ready and exclusive access to the largest stocks and cellars in the United Kingdom.
Ports from Vintage 1834
Madeiras from Vintage 1834
Clarets from Vintage 1831
Hocks, Champagnes, and other Wines of the United Kingdom.

MAX GREGER'S HUNGARIAN WINES.—By a special arrangement with Messrs. Max Greger and Co. the Association is enabled to supply to Ticket-holders all his Hungarian Wines, bottled by himself, at 15 per cent. below his prices to the public.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON, SATURDAY, APRIL 25, 1874.

"A Peerage or Westminster Abbey!" was the celebrated saying of Nelson before plunging into the Battle of the Nile. No such aspiration, we may be sure, ever disturbed the simple mind of Dr. Livingstone, whose mortal remains were a week ago consigned to the tomb. Probably, if he had been consulted, he would have preferred to be buried on the banks of one of the many rivers which he has discovered in Central Africa, and among the primitive negro races who, barbarous as they are, revered him as a father, rather than in the historical Abbey, which is the mausoleum of so many British worthies, and of some unworthies. But the public funeral of Saturday last, if not quite in harmony with the antecedents of the great explorer, was a becoming national tribute of respect to a man whose life was one long service to the cause of missionary enterprise, practical philanthropy, and scientific discovery. His name and achievements were a talisman that gathered within the walls of the venerable Abbey a throng of mourners as unique and diverse as was ever collected around an open grave. Amid that distinguished assemblage, besides his immediate relatives, were statesmen who co-operated in realising his philanthropic aims; explorers who had shared with him the perils of the African wilds; missionaries who had made light of suffering and privation in seeking to Christianise the aboriginal races; hunters who had been his close companions in the solitude of the bush; clergymen who, with him, sought to establish a Zambesi mission; Non-conformist ministers and laymen with whom he was identified in the earlier part of his career; and a miscellaneous host of admirers, who represented the general sentiment of the nation. Such demonstrations, if somewhat pompous, can never be untimely or incongruous, for they help to elevate public feeling, to smooth down sectional asperities, and, above all, to fix attention more prominently upon the illustrious dead whose Lives remind us

We can make our lives sublime.

David Livingstone was pre-eminently a man of this type—one of those almost ideal characters which hardly appear once in a century, and whose greatness is of a kind that is instinctively recognised by the force of sympathy, without the need of analysis or laboured eulogy. The unwavering faith of the Christian missionary, the ardour of the enterprising explorer, and the sagacity of the practical philanthropist are rarely to be found in the same person. But they were harmoniously blended in Dr. Livingstone, combined with a child-like simplicity, an intuitive knowledge of character, a tenacity of purpose that nothing could shake, and a singleness of aim to which circumstances were made inexorably to bend. In electing to be rather the pioneer of Christianity and commerce in Africa than a local missionary, we have evidence of his range of vision, of his carelessness of immediate results, and of his entire conviction that he had a work to do which none else could accomplish. To discover the unknown regions of Central Africa, and solve great geographical problems, was in itself an honourable ambition. With him it was only a means to an end. Dr. Livingstone cared little for such exploits in comparison with his noble aspiration of opening that continent to the light of religion and civilisation, and extirpating the slave trade, which is the main hindrance to that beneficent consummation. This done, or done in part, his life work would be accomplished. It was for him to open a pathway through the wilderness, along which others might advance and reap the fruits of his arduous labour.

The career of a man so enthusiastic, single-minded, and irrepressible, while to himself one of life-long hardship and perils, of strenuous effort and constant discouragement, is to all the rest of the world a fascinating romance. The imagination is spell-bound in following Dr. Livingstone from the mission station at Kuruman across the terrible and supposed impassable desert of Kalahari, beyond which the explorer discovered, in regions then represented by a blank on the map of Africa, well-watered lands, a fertile soil, and races hitherto unknown to the outer world; then across Central Africa to Loando, and back again from the western to the eastern coast. Amid these tribes, all barbarous and some savage, he passed unmolested with a body-guard of native adherents—his moral influence, courteous and respectful demeanour, and lack of self-seeking, being his best passport to the confidence of the negro tribes, and these tribes only became troublesome when he came upon the trail of the slave-dealers who had carried fire and sword into these primitive communities.
